I think we cannot say that what was done was not a breach of good order and decorum, having regard to the privileges which were allowed to these workpeople and the position they occupied in the factory. I do not think we ought to entirely shut out of consideration the fact that they were allowed to have their meals in the factory workroom, where there were machinery and materials, and it is with reference to that that I say one must consider whether there has been a breach of the rule having regard to the place in which the act which the magistrates have found to be disorderly took place. For these reasons I think that the decision of the magistrates should be affirmed.

LAWRANCE, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitor for appellant, Solicitor to the Treasury.

Solicitors for respondents, G. Reader & Co.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance, J.) — May 7.

IGOE v. SHANN. (a.)

Licensing law—Licence, lapse of—Value of house—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 45.

A licence for the sale of beer had been held for a house from a date before the 10*th of August*, 1872, continuously down to the 10*th of October*, 1886, when it expired, the tenant's application for a renewal having been refused in September. On the 12*th of October*, 1886, a new tenant applied to the justices in special session for a transfer of the licence under 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 14.

Held, that, notwithstanding the licence had changed hands, and there had been a break in the continuity of the licence since the 10*th of August*, 1872, the justices could not refuse to renew the licence on the ground only that the house was not of the annual value required by section 45 of the Licensing Act, 1872, in the case of premises not licensed at the time of the passing of the Act.

Case stated by the justices for the county of Lancaster sitting in quarter session.

On the 21st of September, 1900, the respondents, who were the licensing justices for the city and county of Manchester, refused to renew to the appellant a licence to sell beer by retail to be consumed on or off the premises in a house known as the Council Inn, Council-street, Hulme, in the city of Manchester.

On the 23rd of October, 1900, the appellant appealed to the court of quarter sessions, who dismissed the appeal subject to this case for the opinion of the High Court of Justice.

The appellant was the tenant and occupier of the Council Inn, and was licensed in respect thereof for the sale of beer by retail to be consumed on or off the premises.

On the 9th of August, 1900, notice of objection to the renewal of the appellant's licence was served upon him, the grounds of which objection were, inter alia, that the premises were not of the necessary annual value.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The justices refused the renewal upon the ground raised by the objection.

The Council Inn was originally licensed for the sale of beer by retail to be consumed on or off the premises in the year 1868, and the licence was continuously renewed down to the year 1886.

At the general annual licensing meeting for the city held in August, 1886, the renewal of the licence to Edwin Wade, the then licensee, was objected to and the consideration of the objection adjourned until some day in September of that year, when the renewal of the licence was refused. He continued to carry on business and to sell beer by retail in the house until the 8th of October, 1886, upon which day he yielded up possession thereof to Jane Jackson, who became the new tenant and occupier thereof, but did not then obtain any licence or transfer of a licence to continue the business.

The licence for the current year expired in the course of law on the 10th of October, 1886. Jane Jackson commenced to carry on business and to sell beer by retail thereon on the 8th of October, 1886, but not under a justice's licence, and she continued to do so.

On the 12th of October, 1886, Jane Jackson applied to the justices in special session for the grant of a licence to her, which was granted, and the said licence was thenceforward continuously renewed until the 21st of September, 1900.

The annual value of the premises on the 21st of September, 1900, exceeded £15, but was less than £30.

The premises were situate within the city of Manchester, the population of which, according to the last Parliamentary census, exceeded 100,000.

It was contended before the court of quarter sessions on behalf of the appellant that, inasmuch as the house was on the 10th of August, 1872, licensed for the sale of intoxicating liquors for consumption thereupon, the qualification in respect of annual value prescribed by section 45 of the Licensing Act, 1872—namely, £30—did not apply thereto, but that the qualification in respect of the annual value which did apply thereto was that prescribed by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61, s. 1—namely, £15.

It was contended on behalf of the respondents that the licence held in respect of the house at the time of the passing of the Licensing Act, 1872, having lapsed in 1886, the house thereupon ceased to be qualified to receive any other or new licence except upon the conditions as to annual value required by the Licensing Act, 1872, s. 45, and that upon the true construction of that section the conditions therein prescribed as to annual value applied to all licensed premises of which the licence had not been in existence continuously from the 10th of August, 1872, down to the application for the renewal thereof, or to which a licence other than that existing on the 10th of August, 1872, had been granted since that date.

The court of quarter sessions decided that the value qualification prescribed by section 45 of the Licensing Act, 1872, did apply to the house and dismissed the appeal upon the ground that the house was not of the necessary annual value as required by the last-mentioned statute.

Section 45 enacts as follows: "Premises to which at the time of the passing of this Act no licence under the Acts recited in the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, authorizing the sale of beer or wine for consumption thereupon is attached, shall not be subject to any of the provisions now in force prescribing a certain rent or value or rating as a qualification for receiving any such licence. Premises not at the time of the passing of this Act licensed for the sale of any intoxicating liquor for consumption thereupon shall not be qualified to receive a licence authorizing such sale unless the following conditions are satisfied: (a) The premises . . . shall be of not less than the following value: If situate . . . within the limits of a town containing a population of not less than 100,000 inhabitants, fifty pounds per annum; or if the licence do not authorize the sale of spirits, thirty pounds per annum. . . ."

Joseph Walton, K.C. (Randolph with him), for the appellant.—Section 45 is a disqualifying section, and it only disqualifies premises which were not licensed at the date of the passing of the Act. The section divides premises into three classes—the first are beerhouses or houses licensed under the Wine and Beerhouse Act, which were so licensed at the time of the passing of the Act. With regard to these there are certain statutory requirements as to value. The second class are alehouses, or houses licensed under the Alehouse Act, 1828, which were so licensed at the time of the passing of the Act. With regard to these the section says that there shall be no requirement as to value. Then there is the third class of houses not licensed at the time of the passing of the Act, and with regard to such houses requirements as to value are made. It is said against us that because there was a break in the continuity of the licence of two days, the house passed into the third category. But the section says nothing about a break of continuity, all it says is that a house not licensed at the time of the passing of the Act shall be liable to the disqualifications therein stated. This house was licensed at the time of the passing of the Act, and it is therefore not subject to the disqualification. [Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—Suppose that the licence of a house licensed in 1872 were dropped for, say, six years, could a person get a licence notwithstanding the annual value was below what was required by section 45?] Yes, the contention must go that length; but it must be remembered that the justices have a general discretion, though, in the present case, the house being an 1869 house, that discretion was limited.

Byrne, for the respondent.—Section 45 was intended to save houses licensed before 1872 only so long as the licence continued to exist, and to exist in the same hands. The licence attached, in the present case, to the premises did not continue to exist. It perished, and there was a new licence in 1886. In Freer v. Murray, [1894] A. C. 576, it was held that a break in the continuity of a licence deprived a house of the privilege conferred by section 18 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869. So here the privilege conferred by section 45 was lost by the licence running out.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—The only question we have to decide in this case is this: whether in a case where premises have been licensed substantially continuously from the year 1868 an objector who gives notice against a renewal under section 42 of the Licensing Act, 1872, can raise the objection that the premises are not of the annual value required by section 45 of the Act. We must take it that with regard to the premises in question there was a break of two days in the continuity of the licence, and I assume for the purpose of my judgment that Mrs. Jackson got a new licence in respect of the premises on the 12th of October, 1886. She has had that licence down to 1900, when the justices refused to grant her a renewal.

If Mr. Byrne is right in saying that since the licence has ceased to be renewed to the same licensee then the premises in respect of which the licence was granted became new premises for the purpose of licensing, then his argument would be well founded. But we have to consider what the statute says.

The language of section 45 is not difficult, but it does require some intelligence to construe it. For reasons which it is not for us to consider, the Legislature have thought fit to draw a distinction between the class of premises which were licensed under the Beerhouse Acts at the time of the passing of the Act and the class which were not. Accordingly the section provides that "premises to which at the time of the passing of this Act no licence under the Acts recited in the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, authorizing the sale of beer and wine for consumption thereupon is attached shall not be subject to any of the provisions now in force." It was a curious way of doing it. They might have saved the existing provisions with regard to existing premises, but they thought they had done it by saying that houses which have got no licence under the Acts mentioned shall not be subject to the existing conditions. Then they went on to deal with the other class which were made subject to the new conditions, and the section proceeds: "Premises not at the time of the passing of this Act licensed for the sale of intoxicating liquor for consumption thereupon shall not be qualified to receive a licence authorizing such sale unless the following conditions are satisfied," and then the conditions are set out. The section is put in an awkward way, but, in my opinion, the reasonable construction as applied to the present case is that in order to authorize the justices to give effect to the objection raised against the renewal of the licence the house must come within the second paragraph of section 45—that is to say, it must be "premises which were not at the time of the passing of this Act licensed for the sale of any intoxicating liquor." The premises in question were not within those words—that is to say, they were licensed at the time of the passing of the Act. The objection, therefore, fails, and the refusal by the justices to grant the renewal upon the grounds of that objection must be reversed. If the renewal is refused it must be upon the general grounds of the magistrates' discretion.

LAWRANCE, J., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Hockin & Co.

Solicitors for the respondent, Cobbett, Wheeler, & Cobbett, Manchester.

Court of Appeal.

App. Bankruptcy. (Rigby, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) June 7.

In re BASTABLE.
Ex parte THE TRUSTEE. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Vendor and purchaser—Contract for sale—Leaseholds—Disclaimer of contract—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 55.

A trustee in bankruptcy cannot disclaim a contract for the sale of leaseholds entered into by the bankrupt before the bankruptcy unless he also disclaims the leaseholds.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Divisional Court (Wright and Darling, JJ.), reversing a decision of the Wandsworth County Court.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It appeared that on the 5th of June, 1900, the debtor entered into an agreement in writing with one Silverstone for the sale to the latter of certain leaseholds at Richmond for the sum of £390 subject to a mortgage for £300 at 4 per cent. and to a ground-rent of £7 10s. per annum.

A deposit of £50 was paid to the vendor, and the date fixed for completion of the purchase was the 1st of August, 1900.

On the 21st of August the vendor was adjudicated bankrupt, and a trustee in bankruptcy appointed.

Certain correspondence then passed between the solicitors for the trustee in bankruptcy and the solicitors for the purchaser, from which it appeared that the solicitors for the trustee offered to complete the purchase on payment of the balance of the purchase-money—namely, £40.

On the other hand, the solicitors for the purchaser insisted that the trustee in bankruptcy must, before completion, first clear up all outgoings then due—such as, for instance, ground-rent.

This the trustee in bankruptcy refused to do, and on the 22nd of December, 1900, the trustee, by writing under his hand, disclaimed the contract for sale, which he purported to do by virtue of the power conferred by section 55 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, but he did not disclaim the lease.

The purchaser thereupon gave notice of motion to the county court for a declaration that the contract for sale was valid and binding, and that the disclaimer was void.

The county court judge dismissed the motion.

On appeal to the Divisional Court that court held that the contract for sale was valid and binding, and that the instrument purporting to disclaim the contract was void.

From this decision the trustee now appealed.

Muir Mackenzie and Whately, for the trustee.

Lord Coleridge, K.C., Bovill Smith, and H. J. Turrell, for the purchaser.

COLLINS, L.J., said he thought that section 55 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, was never intended to apply to such a case as this. It was intended to enable a trustee in bankruptcy to get rid of a burden, but it was not intended to revest in him property which had already vested in a third person. The provisions of the section all seemed to point to the cardinal idea of getting rid of onerous property. In the present case there was no such burden, the only suggestion being that the bankrupt's estate would be better with the leasehold property than without it. That did not appear to come within the section. But the matter did not stop there. This was leasehold property and the trustee might under the section have a right to disclaim the lease. But he was not willing to do that. He sought to disclaim the contract for sale while adhering to the lease. It did not appear to his lordship that such a contract was within the section. Moreover this was real estate and the effect of the disclaimer would be to take away from the purchaser something which had already vested in him. An Act of Parliament might of course have enacted that this should be done. But section 55 was passed in view of the well-established principles of the law of bankruptcy, which were thus stated by James, L.J., in Ex parte Holthausen, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 722, p. 726: "The law of England is that with certain exceptions the trustee in bankruptcy is bound by all the equities which affect a bankrupt or a liquidating debtor—that is to say, if a bankrupt or liquidating debtor under circumstances which are not impeachable under any particular provision connected with his bankruptcy or insolvency, enters into a contract with respect to his real estate for a valuable consideration, that contract binds his trustee in bankruptcy as much as it binds himself . . . In this country in an English bankruptcy the trustee stands exactly in the same position as the bankrupt himself stands in, and therefore his trustee is bound to perform the contract in exactly the same way as he himself was bound to perform it." It did not seem to his lordship that section 55 had operated so as to alter those rights or to take away from a third person an equitable right in land which he had acquired from the bankrupt before the bankruptcy. In his lordship's opinion section 55 did not apply to the present case and the decision of the Divisional Court was right.

ROMER, L.J., agreed. It was contended on behalf of the trustee that if a vendor of land became bankrupt before the completion of the sale the trustee in bankruptcy without disclaiming the bankrupt's interest in the land could by disclaiming the contract for sale alone, place himself in the position of owner of the land freed from any interest of the purchaser, leaving him only the remedy of proving in the bankruptcy for damages. That would be a very serious contention if it could be maintained, for in every case in which property had greatly increased in value after the contract of sale and, before the bankruptcy the purchaser would be deprived of all interest in the property and would be left with only the right to a dividend. It could not be that that was the intention of the Act, and when section 55 was examined it was clear that it had no such operation. A purchaser of land had not a mere money interest, he had an equitable interest in the land itself. His interest was an interest in land. It was assignable and in case of his death would pass to his heir. That interest would remain whatever might be the effect of a disclaimer of the contract for sale by the trustee in the bankruptcy of the vendor. Assuming that the contract could be disclaimed as a separate property distinct from the land, what would be the effect? The bankrupt's estate was under the contract entitled to receive the balance of the purchase-money on a conveyance of the property, and the sole effect of the disclaimer would be to prevent the trustee from afterwards insisting that the purchaser was bound to pay the balance of his purchase-money. It might possibly have this further effect—if the vendor had contracted to do acts which would involve the expenditure of money it would relieve the estate from that payment. But it would operate as a disclaimer of any right to call on the purchaser to pay any money under the contract. It could not operate to destroy an interest in the property which had vested in the purchaser before the bankruptcy. The disclaimer would not take away the purchaser's equitable interest in the land, but he would have that interest free from liability to pay the balance of the purchase-money. That being so, what was the position of the purchaser? He had an equitable interest in the property, subject to the mortgage, and the trustee had vested in him something in the nature of a legal estate. In such a case it was in accordance with the common practice of the Court of Bankruptcy to say to the trustee that he must convey his legal estate to the purchaser on payment of the balance of the purchase-money unless he chose to disclaim the lease. That was in substance what the Divisional Court had done, though their order would require some modification in form. This would not affect the costs of the appeal, which must be paid by the trustee. His lordship, speaking for himself, added an expression of regret that appeals were constantly brought in bankruptcy matters in cases in which no real interest was involved, the amount at stake being utterly disproportioned to the costs incurred.

RIGBY, L.J., expressed his concurrence in the judgments of the other members of the court.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Ward, Perks, & McKay; Seeley & Son.

Appeal.
(A. L. Smith, M.R., and Collins and Romer, L.JJ.) March 26.

WHITEHEAD v. READER. (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation — Course of the employment — Disobedience to master's orders—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1.

A workman was employed as a carpenter, part of his duty being to sharpen his tools at a grindstone, which was worked by means of a leather band passed over shafting connected with an engine. While sharpening his tools the band slipped off the stone. In trying to replace it he was caught by it and injured. He had been told not to touch the machinery, and in trying to replace the band he was acting contrary to his orders. The county court judge having awarded him compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897,

Held, that, in the circumstances, it could not be said as a matter of law that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of the employment.

Appeal from the award of the judge of the Coventry County Court under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The county court judge's notes stated that the applicant for compensation was a carpenter, who at the time of the accident was in the employment of Reader.

The applicant was sharpening one of his tools on a grindstone. The grindstone was worked by a leather band, which passed over shafting connected with a gas engine.

On the occasion in question the band slipped off the stone.

The applicant, in trying to replace the band, was caught by it, and was injured.

The applicant had orders not to touch the machinery, and, in trying to replace the band as he did, he was acting contrary to his orders.

It was objected that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of his employment, upon the authority of Lowe v. Pearson, 47 W. R. 193, [1899] 1 Q. B. 261.

The county court judge held that Lowe v. Pearson did not apply, and he overruled the objection.

It was admitted that for the present the applicant was totally incapacitated, and the county court judge awarded him 12s. 6d. per week, being one-half of his average weekly earnings.

The employer appealed.

T. W. Chitty, for the employer. — The accident did not arise out of and in the course of the workman's employment. The man was expressly told not to touch the machinery. His employment was strictly confined to carpentering work, with the consequent duty of sharpening his tools from time to time. He had no business to do the engineer's work and replace the band on the shafting. That was the engineer's business, with which the applicant had nothing to do. It was wholly outside his employment: Lowe v. Pearson, 47 W. R. 193, [1899] 1 Q. B. 261. There was no question of an act done upon an emergency such as in Rees v. Thomas, 47 W. R. 504, [1899] 1 Q. B. 1015. The employer, therefore, is not liable to pay compensation.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-Law.

Montague Lush, for the workman.—It is not every act of disobedience to a master's orders that will take the act out of the scope of the employment. Disobedience to an order may be serious and wilful misconduct within section 1, sub-section 2 (c), of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, which will prevent the workman from claiming compensation, but here the county court judge has not found that. Again, the act may be of such a kind as to be clearly outside the scope of the employment, as was the case in Lowe v. Pearson. Here that is not the case. Part of the man's employment was to work at the grindstone, and it was incidental to that work that he attempted to replace the band. It was a question of fact for the county court judge, and the judge has found the fact in favour of the workman by holding that Lowe v. Pearson did not apply, and by awarding compensation.

He referred to McNicholas v. Dawson & Son, 47 W. R 500, [1899] 1 Q. B. 773.

T. W. Chitty replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

March 26.—A. L. SMITH, M.R.—This is an appeal by a master in proceedings taken by a workman to assess compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. The learned county court judge has awarded him 12s. 6d. a week, and the master appeals upon the ground that the injury did not arise out of and in the course of the man's employment. That is the only point. From the judge's notes, which alone we are able to get and which are a résumé of the case and not notes of the evidence of the individual witnesses, these appear to be the facts. The workman was employed on a factory within the meaning of the Act, and as part of such employment he had to grind his tools at a grindstone which was being rotated by a band driven by steam power. Whilst he was so employed the band slipped off and the man endeavoured to adjust it, and whilst so doing he was injured. That the injury primâ facie arose out of and in the course of his employment is to me clear, but the man had been told not to touch the machinery and it is said that this causes the injury not to have arisen out of and in the course of his employment. Does disobedience to this order cause the man not to have been injured in the course of his employment? I think not. It cannot be said that every disobedience to an order terminates a man's employment. Disobedience may or may not give a defence to a master under the clause relating to serious and wilful misconduct. The learned county court judge was right in holding that the case of Lowe v. Pearson has no application to the present case. That was not a case of any employment at machinery at all. It was a case in which a boy was employed in a pottery to make clay balls, and to take them when made to a woman, who was working at a machine driven by steam. That was his sole employment. The balls were then moulded by the woman at the machine. It was no part of the boy's duty to interfere with the machinery in any way, and he was expressly told not to do so. He attempted to clean a part of the machine, and in doing so he was injured. In interfering with the machine he clearly went outside his employment and in addition he disobeyed the express orders of his master. In the present case the workman's course of employment was to grind tools at the grindstone, and, though he was told not to touch the machinery, still he was acting in the course of his employment when, in trying to adjust the band after it came off, he was injured. In my opinion the county court judge was right in coming to the conclusion in favour of the workman, and the appeal must be dismissed.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I have had considerable difficulty in arriving at an accurate conclusion as to what are the findings in fact of the county court judge. At first I thought by one of his findings that the order of the master had defined the sphere of the workman's employment, and limited it solely to the comparatively unskilled work of sharpening his tools, excluding from his employment any interference with the machinery which actuated the grindstone upon which he was engaged at work. But when one looks at the judge's notes as a whole, remembering, as the Master of the Rolls has pointed out, that they are not a detailed statement of the evidence, but merely a short résumé of the facts, it seems to me that it would be wrong to say that the county court judge has found as a fact that the two spheres of employment—namely, the more or less unskilled joiner's work of sharpening tools, and the skilled work of managing the machinery—were separated by the master's orders. No doubt it is not every breach of a master's orders which will terminate a servant's employment so as to excuse the master from the consequences of the servant's act in breach of his orders, but nevertheless it is in the last resort an order emanating from the master which defines and limits the employment of every servant. A breach by the servant of such an order would render the act of the servant one outside the scope of the employment. But it is not true to say that every breach of the master's order will take the act outside the employment. One must look at the order of the master to see whether it was such an order as laid down the limit of the employment. It is clearly competent to the master to define and limit the sphere of his servant's employment, and if the servant acting within that sphere violates the order of the master, the latter will be responsible. If, however, the servant goes out of the sphere of his employment as so defined and limited, and acts in the other sphere, which is outside his employment, the act of the servant in that other sphere cannot render the master liable either to the servant under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, or to third parties at common law. Take the case of Beard v. London General Omnibus Co., 48 W. R. 658, [1900] 2 Q. B. 530, where the conductor of an omnibus took upon himself to drive the omnibus. That was a breach of his master's orders. Why? Because his employment was limited to acting as conductor of the omnibus, and it was no part of his duty to act as driver, an employment for which he might have been quite unfitted. So in the present case, if the two spheres of employment had been distinctly separated and defined—namely, the grinding of the tools, and the skilled labour of managing the machinery—and the applicant's employment had been limited to the mere grinding of the tools, and if, while acting in breach of the order, limiting his employment, he had met with the accident, he would not have been acting in the course of his employment. But the county court judge has come to the conclusion that the accident to the workman arose in the course of his employment, and he couples that with a finding of fact which does not necessarily show that the workman had gone out of his employment when he met with the accident. The county court judge has not given us sufficient materials upon which we can say that he was wrong in law, and therefore upon the materials before us we are not in position to differ from the conclusion at which he has arrived.

ROMER, L.J., read the following judgment: I also think that we ought not to differ from the county court judge in this case. He appears to have found that the accident arose out of and in the course of the workman's employment, and that in disregarding the master's orders not to touch the machinery he was not guilty of serious and wilful misconduct. The evidence taken in the county court is not before us, and the appellant is not able to furnish us with any notes of the evidence. That being so, we have to depend upon the meagre notes of some findings supplied by the judge. From these it does not appear that the decision of the judge cannot be or ought not to be supported. At the time of the accident the workman was employed on his master's business. He was not idling or doing something which was clearly beyond the scope of his employment. To make the grindstone work, and so be able to sharpen his tools, the carpenter may well be said to have been about his master's business when he tried to replace the band, and that on the impulse of the moment he should have forgotten the order as to not touching the machinery is not unnatural, and may well be regarded as a venial act and not as being wilful misconduct on his part. I am not able to gather from the facts of the case that the replacing of the band was an act on the workman's part so remote from his ordinary duties that it could not be fairly said to be one arising out of and in the course of his employment. It is not the case of a workman, whose duties in no way bring him into contact with his master's machinery, officiously or for his own purposes meddling with that machinery contrary to orders, and so being injured. The principle upon which cases like Lowe v. Pearson were decided has no application to the present case.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the applicant, Maddocks & Colson, for H. Maddocks, Coventry.

Solicitors for the employer, Sharpe, Parker, & Co., for Hughes & Masser, Coventry.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Farwell, J. } May 10, 11, 13-16.

BURROWS v. LANG. (a.)

Easement—Watercourse—Pond—Uninterrupted flow——Right to water cattle—Prescription—"Temporary"—"Precarious"—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 6.

Of two properties which were in one ownership for fifty years prior to 1886, a farm property was conveyed to the plaintiff in 1886 and a mill property to the defendant at a subsequent date. An ancient pond, filled from a brook by an artificial watercourse, and habitually used by cattle, was on the defendant's property, but for fifty-five years abutted on the plaintiff's property, whence his cattle drank from it.

In an action by the plaintiff claiming that the watercourse was a continuous easement necessary and convenient for the use of his property; that he had a right to compel the defendant to keep the pond full with a constant and undiminished supply, or at least a right to water his cattle at the pond whenever there was water therein; and that, in the absence of express words in his deed of conveyance, these rights passed under section 6 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881,

Held, that, in such a case all the circumstances must be considered (Birmingham Banking Co. v. Ross, 36 W. R. 914, 38 Ch. D. 295); that there was no easement here which could pass, nor one by way of prescription by reason of the nature of the works; and that the artificial watercourse having been made for one property only, and no leakage by trampling of cattle in the pond having been intended by the vendors of the property, it was not to be inferred from the particular facts of the user that there was a grant of water which conferred either any right to compel such a continuance of the flow as, apart from the rights of lower riparian proprietors, would impose a serious burden on the defendant, or any right to an easement of such a "precarious" character as an easement to water cattle at the pond when and as often as it might be full, such an easement being unknown to the law, and therefore incapable of passing under the general words of section 6 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881.

Hanna v. Pollock, [1898] 2 Ir. Rep. 532, [1900] 2 Ir. Rep. 664, and McEvoy v. Great Northern Railway Co., [1900] 2 Ir. Rep. 325, discussed.

Watts v. Kelson, 19 W. R. 338, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 166, distinguished.

Action with witnesses.

The plaintiff, William Burrows, was the owner in fee simple of the Cwm Farm in the parish of Shirenewton, Monmouth, and the defendant, William Shaxson Lang, was the owner of the Lower Cwm Mill and certain adjacent lands, adjoining the plaintiff's property.

Many years ago the water from a stream known as the Castroggy brook was diverted and led through an open duct or watercourse into a pond (hereinafter called the pond at A), the duct and pond being on what was now the defendant's property, but the pond abutting on the plaintiff's land for a distance of about 55 yards.

In 1884 the contractor making the Severn Tunnel, with the assent of all parties interested, laid earthenware pipes in the course of the duct to within about 50 yards of the pond, in which pipes the water had since run.

There was a sluice at the point where the diversion of the water was made from the main stream, and the water from the pond at A could be drawn off by means of a bye-wash before it reached the mill.

If not so drawn off, the water ran through a pipe into the mill pond below and thence over the water-wheel into the mill-race and rejoined the main stream by means of a culvert.

For many years prior to 1886 the ownership of the mill property and the farm property was one and the same, but in that year the latter was conveyed to the plaintiff, and subsequently the former to the defendant.

The plaintiff alleged that the pond at A had for over a century been used by the occupiers of the Cwm Farm for the purpose of watering cattle, and claimed that the watercourse was a continuous easement necessary and convenient for the use of his property, and that the rights to have an uninterrupted flow of water down the watercourse and to water his cattle at the pond at A passed by the conveyance by virtue of the general words in section 6 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and were now vested in him.

The defendant denied the existence of any such rights and had in fact prior to action brought placed a fence round the pond at A on the boundary of his property, thereby preventing the access of the plaintiff to the pond.

(a.) Reported by WARWICK H. DRAPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The defendant also alleged that he had the right to obstruct the flow of water from the main stream into the pond.

The plaintiff accordingly claimed an injunction to restrain the defendant from obstructing the flow of water from the Castroggy brook into the watercourse and pond at A so as to interfere with the plaintiff's easement or otherwise to interfere with the right of the plaintiff or his tenant of watering cattle in the said pond and otherwise using the water for the purposes of the Cwm Farm, and for an order on the defendent to remove all obstructions placed by him or by his order in or across the said watercourse which prevented water from the Castroggy brook flowing into the said pond; and further claimed damages.

J. G. Butcher, K.C. (Stewart Smith with him), for the plaintiff.—The plaintiff has the right to compel the defendant to keep the pond full from the brook with a constant and undiminished supply of water, or at least the right to water his cattle whenever there is water in the pond; such a right would pass under section 6 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881.

W. H. Upjohn, K.C. (F. Hoare Colt with him), for the defendant.—The plaintiff is not entitled to the continued supply of the water, for the mill-race was constructed only for a temporary use: Arkwright v. Gell, 5 M. & W. 203; Wood v. Waud, 3 Exch. 748; Rameshur Pershad Narain Singh v. Koonj Behari Pattuk, 4 App. Cas. 121, 27 W. R. Dig. 228. Further, an easement to enjoy whatever flow there may happen to be is an easement unknown to the law, being precarious. [FARWELL, J., referred to Hanna v. Pollock, [1898] 2 Ir. Rep. 532, 549, [1900] 2 Ir. Rep. 664, at p. 671, and McEvoy v. Great Northern Railway Co., [1900] 2 Ir. Rep. 325.] See also Birmingham Banking Co. v. Ross, 36 W. R. 914, 38 Ch. D. 295; Greatrex v. Hayward, 8 Exch. 291; Mason v. Shrewsbury and Hereford Railway Co., 20 W. R. 14, L. R. 6 Q. B. 578.

Butcher, K.C., in reply.—The watercourse here was not temporary, as in the two Irish cases referred to, but was made before living memory. The evidence suggests at least an inference that the pond was not constructed merely for the convenience of the mill owner. In 1881 the cattle in the orchard enjoyed a right de facto to drink at the pond, which right passed to the plaintiff on his admission under section 6 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. The present case is governed by Watts v. Kelson, 19 W. R. 338, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 166.

FARWELL, J., after stating the facts of the case, continued as follows: There is no evidence before me to show what was the nature of the ownership of the mill and the farm at the date when this duct and mill pond were constructed. The duct and mill pond are entirely on the property of the mill and abut on the farm property on one portion of one side of the pond only. There has been a considerable dispute between the parties as to the rights of this particular piece of land. In 1886 the plaintiff purchased the property from the common predecessor in title, Mr. Cox. It was copyhold property, and he took an admission on the 7th of October, 1886; his conveyance contains no express words relating to any rights of water, but he relies upon the general words in the Conveyancing Act as giving him the right which he claims in this action. Various disputes have arisen before this between this plaintiff and the defendant in respect of this property, which seems to me to be wholly out of proportion to the amount in costs which they have spent upon it. Now, there has been a great deal of conflicting evidence as to what was the nature of the user of the water by the farm and the occupiers thereof in 1886. The first point that I have to determine, therefore, is whether there was any easement, privilege, right, or advantage enjoyed with the farm under the conveyance in 1886 which would pass under the words. I find as a fact that there was a watering place—that is to say, a place at which the cattle habitually went to water, at the spot named, and (as I find) on each side of it a little way up the stream and a little way down to the pond, but not extending beyond the piece of land which was in dispute in a county court action unsuccessfully brought by the present plaintiff. The defendant, who purchased in 1893, but had, as I understand, contracted to purchase before the county court action, obtained the conveyance and the piece of land first-mentioned with this watering place, which was then on it. Therefore I find as a fact that there was no actual watering place upon the plaintiff's property at the time of the conveyance to him. I find also that in consequence of the natural formation of the ground cattle in his orchard could and occasionally did drink from the banks of the orchard in his possession out of the mill pond which abutted on it. I doubt if they could have done it except in cases when the pond was full or reasonably full. But inasmuch as it was often full when the mill was being worked I have no doubt they did in fact drink there, and particularly at the small portion just close to the boundary; but there was no defined watering place upon the orchard. I find also this fact, that the stream leading the water from the sluice point into the mill pond was originally an open stream. In 1884, in consequence of the works for the formation of the Severn Tunnel and the pumping operations which were necessary to keep that tunnel from being flooded, this particular tract of country was very largely drained, and it being naturally of a fissiporous character water escaped more readily after 1884 than before. In consequence of the complaints and difficulties with regard to water escaping in 1884 the contractor for the Severn Tunnel, at the request of or under compulsion from the common proprietor or common owner, put pipes down through part of the mill lands and mended one or two places where there were holes through which the water could have escaped. Therefore at the time of the conveyance in 1886 I have got this fact, that the water is led through pipes entirely on the defendant's land into a stream which then opened out leading into the pond, all of it of a nature likely to generate fissures through which the water would escape. The pond is one which requires, and has for some time past been undergoing puddling in order to make it watertight. There is evidence to show, and I hold it to be a fact, that cattle trampling in the bed of a puddled pond such as this would be likely to do it considerable damage. The right of the defendant to divert the water from the natural stream and use it for mill purposes is subject, of course, to the rights of the lower proprietors to have the water returned to the natural stream practically undiminished, at any rate undiminished to an extent sufficient to injure them. The defendant certainly could not lawfully divert the water and allow it to run into the mill pond and then escape by open fissures, which were open by reason of his not keeping them mended, so as to be lost to the natural stream altogether. It has also been proved to my satisfaction that the water is of great value to the lower riparian proprietors and to the district generally.

The question that has been argued is whether first of all, the plaintiff has got a right to compel the flow of water into the mill pond so as to get the benefit of watering his cattle and drawing water from the orchard. Secondly, it has been argued that if he has not got that larger right, he has got at any rate the right to take water for the purposes of his cattle and otherwise from the orchard if and so far as there should be any water in the mill pond. The question in this case appears to me to be one of construction of the general words in the Conveyancing Act. I have no evidence to show the circumstances under which the particular stream was made, nor do I think it is material, because, for at any rate fifty odd years prior to 1886, both properties were in the same hands and belonged to the same person and therefore no rights could arise. What I have to find is whether there was anything which could pass such rights under the general words in the Conveyancing Act as enjoyed with the orchard at the time of the conveyance. As regards that, I have the assistance of Cotton, L.J.'s, exposition of the Act in the case which has been referred to of the Birmingham Bank v. Ross. It is not sufficient simply to point to the state of nature and say "There is a stream; I must of course have the right to dip into it and to draw from it because it abuts on my land." Other considerations arise. If the stream is a natural stream there is the right to have as a riparian proprietor the flow of the water with the incidental rights of taking water subject to the rights of the lower riparian proprietors. If it is an artificial stream other considerations arise. I think the remark of Cotton, L.J., in that case is useful as an authority because it shows to my mind that I have to consider those circumstances and that it is not enough for the plaintiff merely to point to the state of the land and say "I must have got it because it stands so to the site; and it is obvious when you go upon the land." That case before the Court of Appeal was a question of lights. There was there apparently the right to light over a particular piece of land, and if you had simply looked at the land you would have said that was so, but the decision was, taking the head-note: "The maxim that a grantor shall not derogate does not entitle a grantee of a house to claim an easement of light to an extent inconsistent with the intention to be implied from the circumstances existing at the time of the grant and known to the grantee," and the Lord Justice says at p. 307: "I think it could not be said that the light coming over that low building to these windows could be considered as enjoyed with it within the meaning of this section. The light did in fact at the time come over that building; but it came over it under such circumstances as to show that there could be no expectation of its continuance."

That appears to me to render it proper for me to consider this case in the same mode as I should have had to consider it if it had been a question of the Prescription Act or of implying a lost grant. Now, with regard to that the law is to some extent settled. I take it as stated in the Privy Council case of Rameshur Pershad Narain Singh v. Koonj Behari Pattuk, where at 4 App. Cas., p. 126, the common law cases are conveniently referred to. Sir Montague Smith, who was a very eminent common lawyer, himself said: "There is no doubt that the right to the water of a river flowing in a natural channel through a man's lands, and the right to water flowing to it through an artificial watercourse constructed on his neighbour's land, do not rest on the same principle." I venture to add to that—the right to water flowing through an artificial watercourse constructed on the man's own land passing by his neighbour's land does not rest on the same principle as that of water flowing in a natural channel by another man's land. I take the statement of the principle from Parke, B., in Greatrex v. Hayward: "The right of the party to an artificial watercourse, as against the party creating it, must depend upon the character of the watercourse and the circumstances under which it was created." Applying that to the present case by the light of the case before Cotton, L.J. (Birmingham Bank v. Ross), it appears to me that what I have to consider is whether, having regard to the fact that this an artificial watercourse through porous land, rendering repairs necessary from time to time, and made solely for the use of the mill and used entirely for mill purposes (except so far as it may have been used at the old watering-place, which, as I have already mentioned, has not passed to the plaintiff at all) I can infer from that, that there was an intention to grant the right to compel the miller to continue to send down the water whether he wanted it or whether he did not, although he might have given up the mill altogether, and although he might not think it worth while to keep the pond watertight. Am I to infer from these facts that the grant of water conferred any such right? If I am regarding this as going to a question of prescription, then I have to consider whether the artificial watercourse was made for a temporary purpose or not. Mr. Butcher has pressed upon me that this was not a temporary purpose. Well, that depends on the meaning of the word "temporary." The case of Arkwright v. Gell was the case of water pumped from mines and flowing over another man's land. That had gone on for sixty years. "Temporary," therefore, does not mean merely that it happens to last, in fact, for a few years, but to my mind it means for a purpose which is temporary in the sense that it may within the reasonable contemplation of the parties come to an end and is not meant to be equivalent to a grant in fee. For example, if a man pumps water from his mines for the purpose of drying his mines, that is temporary in the way that it is limited by the working of the mines. If a man makes through his own land a duct leading water to the mill pond for the use of his own mill on his own land, to my mind that is temporary in the sense that it is limited to the period for which he uses the mill. In both cases, in my judgment, it is temporary within the meaning of the authorities; it is not meant to be a new formation, an alteration of the face of nature to remain in perpetuum, but it is an alteration temporary in the sense that it is for the purpose of and co-extensive with the carrying on of a particular business (in this case the business of a miller). Therefore I think that it is, within the authorities, for the purpose of a temporary business. Now there is this to be said, Mr. Butcher argued that this case is to be distinguished from the case of water pumped over another man's land because he says this does not go over the plaintiff's land at all but abuts upon it. To my mind that is a distinction which is against him. One can well understand that the court might the more readily presume an agreement between the parties if the one of them pumped water out of his own land for his own convenience, and the other accepted it and allowed it to run over his land for his own convenience. It might have been very possibly considered, if there were evidence to show it (one could readily, or, at any rate, more readily, come to the conclusion), that there was an arrangement that the exit of the water should be for the mutual benefit of both. No such consideration arises when you have simply the water brought by the man entirely over his own land, and not in any way affecting or going over the land of his neighbour. Nothing moves from the neighbour by way of consideration. This is pointed out by

Palles, C.B., in the case of McEvoy v. Great Northern Railway Co., [1900] 2 Ir. Rep. I will begin at p. 333: "It is settled law that the rights to the water flowing in an artificial water-course constructed by a particular person upon his own land and for his own benefit are not regulated by the law applicable to natural water-courses, but are to be ascertained by a view of the purpose for which the original structure was built." He then refers to the various English authorities, and to one Irish case, and he says: "I hold that as a general rule circumstances which are sufficient to create an easement in favour of a particular person do not necessarily subject the land of that person to the servitude of continuing to maintain in existence, for the benefit of the servient tenement, the works constructed by him for the purpose only of that easement. In other words the existence of an easement does not carry with it any presumption of the creation or existence of a counter-easement in the owner of the servient tenement against the owner of the dominant tenement. Certain circumstances may give rise to such counter-easement. The circumstance that part of the works executed on the lands of another are such as to require the consent of the owner of the servient tenement may in certain circumstances tend to do so, especially in cases in which the easement has been acquired by prescription, and in which the circumstances of the original structure, or its subsequent use, indicate an intention that it was constructed for the benefit of both tenements. But no case of this exceptional class has any application to the present; for here all the works were on the defendant's own land; the consent of those from whom the plaintiff claims was not necessary for their legality; and the only inference capable of being drawn is, as I have already said, that they were constructed for the sole benefit of the railway company." It appears to me that I cannot draw in a case like the present any presumption from the fact that the water abuts on the plaintiff's land, that the water was intended to be for his benefit and not for the benefit of the mill, in order to work which it was originally laid there. I hold, therefore, that no right has been shewn to compel the continuance of this flow of water, and I would pause there to point out the very serious consequences that would result from my holding the contrary. In the first place it would impose upon the miller the burden of having to keep the hatch in repair, and of keeping a man to let it up or down, because he certainly could not be justified in my mind in always letting it down without reference to the fact whether he wanted water for his mill or whether he did not—running the risk of its being lost in transit to the detriment of the lower riparian proprietors. Therefore it certainly would entail on him the liability of keeping in repair the channel and the whole of the mill pond bottom and the other works which lie between the mill pond and the exit into the Castroggy brook, because he is liable to the lower riparian proprietors for diverting the water from the brook from its natural course, and is bound to return it to them without undue diminution so that they suffer no loss. If he allowed the mill pond to get out of repair so that the water escaped, he would be answerable to those persons lower down. If the plaintiff has the right that he claims, I do not see how he can prevent his cattle from to some extent trampling on the puddled bottom of the brook in order to drink. It would be exceedingly difficult, and there would be the continual risk of some leakage being caused by such trampling; and the servitude that I should be imposing on the defendant would be of a very onerous nature. It seems to me to be inconceivable that any such burden could have been intended to have been undertaken by the vendors at the date when they made this grant, which contains no express reference whatever to the water at all; it is only by implication of law and the statutory provision in the Conveyancing Act. It seems to me inconceivable that they could have intended to undertake any such burden, and perhaps from this point of view there may be something in the plea which Mr. Colt has put in his pleadings, that they were trustees. It certainly would have been a most extraordinary liability for them to have undertaken the burden of keeping this mill pond and duct in proper repair.

Then it is said — and as regards this point I should have been glad if I could have seen my way to help the plaintiff—assuming that there is no right to have the water to continue to flow, there is the right to take water if and when it shall be there. To my mind that is a right which is inconsistent with the very idea of the nature of the easement of watering—the easement which is claimed. There is some authority on this point which bears out my own view. An easement, as stated by Lord Coke, taking it from the common law and quoting Bracton, must be nec per vim nec clam nec precario. What is "precarious"? That which depends not on right but on the will of another person. As Bracton puts it: "Precaria fuerit et de gratia, quae tempestive revocari possit et intempestive, ex longo tempore non acquiritur jus." That is to say, if the man can tempestive or intempestive—whether the claimant of the easement likes it or whether he does not—put a stop to it, then there is no easement, because it negatives the idea of an easement altogether. The right to have the water flow I have already negatived. Then can the defendant claim any right to water, which is what he claims, when he has no right to compel any water at all to be let down? So far as I know this particular point has not arisen at all except so far as it is determined in the Irish case which was referred to. It is touched on in Hanna v. Pollock, where at [1900] 2 Ir. Rep., p. 671 there is a passage from the judgment of Fitzgibbon, L.J., which seems to me to be material on this subject: "The whole doctrine of presumed grant rest upon the desire of the law to create a legal foundation for the long continued enjoyment, as of right, of advantages which are primâ facie inexplicable in the absence of legal title. In a case such as this, where the grant is admittedly a fiction, it is all the more incumbent on the judge to see before the question is left to the jury that the circumstances and character of the user import that it has been as of right. It appears to me, in the present case, that the evidence is inconsistent with right, and that the user is consistent only with permission to enjoy what the supposed grantor did not want, if and so long as that user might be consistent with the rights of third parties, and also with the grantor's right to use his own property from time to time in a reasonable manner. Such a user never could have been as of right in its inception; it could never acquire during its continuance any higher than a permissive character, and it therefore never could be, or become, a foundation for the presumption of a grant"; and Walker, L.J., I think, uses words to the the same effect at p. 690. That, to my mind, is a very clear exposition of the law and accords with my own view that you cannot create a new burden which is something short of an easement, but which is so far as I know hitherto unknown to the law—that is to say, an easement which shall be nec per vim nec clam but precario. To my mind there is no such right known to the law. But then Mr. Butcher says that section 6 of the Conveyancing Act contains divers other words besides "water and water courses" — for example, "liberties, privileges, easements, rights, and advantages whatsoever" to be enjoyed with the land. The words are satisfied by giving him that which was enjoyed with the land—namely, what Fitzgibbon, L.J., has just called the permissive user so long as the miller did not choose to stop it. That right he gets, but to say that those words create any new right hitherto unknown to the law is what I have never before heard suggested, and I certainly am not going to be the first to hold it. If the right is one which is not known to the law, it appears to me it cannot pass under the general words.

The only other point I think I need refer to is this, that Mr. Butcher relied on Watts v. Kelson. Of course I should be bound to follow Watts v. Kelson if it was a decision in point, but to my mind it has really nothing whatever to do with it, because the whole of the basis on which I rest my judgment was absent in that case. There was no question there of an artificial watercourse having been made for one property only. The artificial watercourse in that case was made for the express purpose of providing both the properties with water. The question was never argued there at all; the point did not rise. The only point argued there was whether, admitting that there was no easement in the proper sense of the law but that which would by its nature have been an easement if there had not been common ownership, did that pass by the grant, and it was held that it did. In the present case that is entirely excluded, because I hold there is no easement which could pass, nor one by prescription in the present case by reason of the nature of the works. The result is that the plaintiff's case wholly fails and, I can do nothing but dismiss it with costs.

Solicitors, T. White & Sons, for J. C. Llewellin, Newport, Mon.; Warriner & Co., for Davis, Lloyds, & Wilson, Newport, Mon.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance and Phillimore, JJ.) May 13.

WRATHERITT v. CAUTLAY. (a.)

Metropolis—Public health—Houses let in lodgings—Bye-laws—Artizans dwellings—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 94.

A building was divided into a number of separate two-roomed and one-roomed tenements, each of which were occupied by a separate family. The passages and staircases were used in common, and there was a water-closet, sink, water-tap, and dust shoot for the use in common of each set of three or four tenements. There was a front door at the entrance of the building, but there was no means of fastening it beyond a Norfolk latch. The landlord did not live on the premises, but a caretaker lived on the ground floor, who attended to minor repairs and cleaned the common passages, staircases, and water-closets.

Held, that the building was not a house let in lodgings or occupied by members of more than one family within the meaning of section 94 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, or of bye-laws made thereunder.

Case stated by a metropolitan police magistrate.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A summons and complaint were preferred by the respondent, an officer of the Vestry of St. George the Martyr, Southwark, against the appellant under bye-laws made by the vestry with respect to houses let in lodgings or occupied by members of more than one family in pursuance of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, s. 94, charging that the appellant failed to furnish to the sanitary authority after notice a true statement of particulars with respect to a lodging-house, No. 2 Block, Artizans'-dwellings, Gun-street, of which he was the landlord, contrary to the bye-laws.

The following facts were proved:

Artizans'-dwellings, Gun-street, consisted of two blocks of buildings the front of which abutted on Gun-street and the backs on Silex-street, in the parish of St. George the Martyr.

No. 2 Block was entered directly from Gun-street by a single entrance. There was a front door to the entrance, but no means of fastening the same beyond a Norfolk latch. The figure "2" was affixed to the transom of the door-frame. The entrance passage branched into two passages about the centre of the building, and there were two double-roomed tenements and one single-roomed tenement on each outer side of the passage and one single-roomed tenement between the two single branch passages. This was the arrangement on each of the four first floors.

Each of the two-roomed tenements and the single-roomed tenements was let to a separate family. Thus No. 1, two rooms, was occupied by a man, wife, and four children, and No. 2, two rooms, by a man, wife, and three children. The two-roomed tenements were let at a weekly rent of 5s. and 6s. 6d. per week, and the single-roomed tenements at 4s. per week.

At the back end of each passage on each of the floors there was a water-closet, sink, water-tap, and dust-shoot opening. On the south side this convenience served for the use in common of four tenements, and on the north side for the use in common of three tenements. The staircase and passages were used in common.

The tenements were generally occupied by a class of people who are not cleanly in their habits.

The landlord did not live on the premises. A caretaker lived on the ground floor who attended to minor repairs. He had no power to let the premises, but he received deposits from tenants and without the authority of the landlord had let four tenements, furnished, at 7s. per week. He also cleaned the common passages and staircases and the water-closets.

The names of the occupiers of the various tenements in the building appeared on the rate-book and each of the tenements was rated separately, but the landlord compounded for the rates.

The magistrate held that the building was not a lodging-house within the meaning of the bye-laws and dismissed the summons.

Section 94 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, enacts as follows:

"(1) Every sanitary authority shall make and enforce such bye-laws as are requisite for the following matters—that is to say, (a) For fixing the number of persons who may occupy a house or part of a house which is let in lodgings or occupied by members of more than one family, and for the separation of the sexes in a house so let or occupied; (b) for the registration of houses so let or occupied; (c) for the inspection of such houses; (d) for enforcing drainage of such houses, and for promoting cleanliness and ventilation in such houses; (e) for the cleansing and lime-washing at stated times of the premises; (f) for the taking of precautions in case of any infectious disease.

"(2) This section shall not apply to common lodging-houses within the Common Lodging Houses Act, 1851, or any Act amending the same."

In the bye-laws made by the Vestry of St. George the Martyr, lodging-house is defined as "a house, or part of a house, let in lodgings or occupied by members of more than one family."

Macmorran, K.C. (Corrie Grant with him), for the appellant.—The whole building is a lodging-house within the definition of lodging-house in the bye-laws; for it is a house which is let in lodgings, and is occupied by members of more than one family. The term "house" applies to a building which is let out in suites or flats which have no means of communication with each other except by a common passage and staircase, and not to the suites and flats themselves. See Attorney-General v. The Mutual Tontine Westminster Chambers Association, 24 W. R. 996, 1 Ex. D. 469, where such a building was held to be a house for the purposes of the inhabited house duty: see also Kimber v. Admans, 48 W. R. 322, [1900] 1 Ch. 412, and Grant v. Langston, [1900] A. C. 383, 48 W. R. Dig. 75. Section 141 of the statute, where "master" is defined, recognizes that a house may be let out in separate tenements. The object of section 94 is to provide for sanitary supervision. It is more consonant with that object to hold that "house" applies to the whole building than to hold that it applies to the separate tenement. If the building is a "house" within the Act and the bye-laws, it is clear that it was let in lodgings: Roots v. Beaumont, 51 J. P. 197.

C. A. Russell, K.C. (C. J. B. Hurst with him), for the respondent. If the bye-laws go beyond the section they are ultra vires. It is clear that what is meant by the section is that you are to look at the particular tenement and see if that tenement is occupied by members of more than one family, and it cannot be taken to apply to a building containing a number of tenements each of which is occupied by a separate family.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—None of the cases which have been cited and which give to the word "house" a particular meaning as it is used in a particular statute help us in this case. In order to construe the term in the statute before us it is necessary to look at the object which that statute had in view. The object was to control the number of people who occupy a tenement which could fairly be described as a separate house. That that is intended is shown by the use of the words "part of a house." I think you must find a house which is either itself let in lodgings or a part of a house which is let in lodgings. The building in question is, in my opinion, a collection of houses, for there is no front door, properly speaking, to the building, but there are common passages and staircases on to which open the front doors of the various tenements. If any one of those houses or tenements were let in lodgings then, no doubt, that particular tenement would be within the Act, but it is going too far to say that because there are in a building separate tenements separately occupied such building is a house let in lodgings or occupied by members of more than one family within the meaning of section 94 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891.

LAWRANCE and PHILLIMORE, JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellant, J. A. Johnson.

Solicitors for the respondent, Field, Roscoe, & Co., for Medwin & Co., Horsham.

K. B. Div.
(Kennedy and Phillimore, JJ.) May 9.

HAMILTON-RUSSELL v. COMMISSIONERS OF INLAND REVENUE. (a.)

Inland Revenue—Stamp duty—Settlement—Instrument of appointment—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 6, sub-sections 1, 2; First Schedule, "Settlement"—Exemption.

By a deed of settlement dated the 26th of June, 1895, the settlor granted to trustees certain funds, and by a deed dated the 12th of December, 1896, certain other funds, upon trust for his five children, but so nevertheless that the share of each child should be held by the trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to such child during his or her life, and after his or her death upon trust for such one or more of the others as such child should by will appoint, and in default of appointment for the other children in equal shares. It was further provided in the deed that the trustees should have power, on or subsequent to the marriage of any of the children, to revoke the trusts of the settlement and to declare, as they thought fit, new trusts by way of resettlement for the benefit of such child, or any wife or husband of such child, or such child's children or remoter issue, or the next-of-kin of such child, but not in favour of any other person or persons, and to transfer the funds to the trustees of such resettlement. These deeds were stamped with ad valorem duty as settlements.

By two deeds both dated the 10th of April, 1899, the trustees of the settlements of the 26th of June, 1895, and the 12th of December, 1896, revoked the trusts of those settlements so far as they concerned the share of C. E. H. R., one of the children, who was then about to be married, and declared that such share should, from and after the solemnization of the intended marriage, be held upon trust to pay the income thereof to C. E. H. R. during his life, and after his decease to transfer such share to the trustees of the marriage settlement of C. E. H. R., to be held by them upon the trusts declared in the marriage settlement. Each of these deeds were stamped with a duty of ten shillings.

By the marriage settlement, a deed of even date with the two last-mentioned deeds, it was provided that after the death of C. E. H. R. the trustees of the settlement should stand possessed of his share of the funds comprised in the settlements of the 26th of June, 1895, and the 12th of December, 1896, upon the trusts of the settlement, which were, as regards the husband's fund, to pay the income to the intended wife during her life, and after her death upon trust for the children or remoter issue of the intended marriage as the intending husband and wife jointly, or the survivor of them, should appoint, and in default of appointment in trust for the children in equal shares.

Held, that the marriage settlement was not, as regards the share of C. E. H. R. in the funds comprised in the settlements of the 26th of June, 1895, and the 12th of December, 1896, exempt from the payment of settlement duty, either under the exemption under the heading "Settlement" in the schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, or under section 106, sub-sections 1 or 2, of the Act.

Case stated by Commissioners of Inland Revenue.

On the 3rd of May, 1899, three unstamped deeds were presented to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue for the opinion of the Commissioners as to the stamp duty with which each of them was chargeable.

The instruments were described as deeds of revocation and a marriage settlement. Each of the deeds was dated the 10th of April, 1899, and it is with regard to the stamp duty assessed on the marriage settlement that this case was stated.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

By a settlement made on the 28th of June, 1895, between the Right Honourable Gustavus Russell, Viscount Boyne, of the one part, and the Right Honourable Katharine Frances Viscountess Boyne (his wife) and certain trustees of the other part, after reciting that Lord Boyne was desirous of making an immediate provision for his five children, and for that purpose had transferred into the joint names of the trustees the investments mentioned in the schedule to the deed to be held by them upon certain trusts, it was agreed and declared that the trustees should stand possessed of the investments mentioned in the schedule as from the 1st of July, 1895, upon trust for the said five children in equal shares, but so, nevertheless, that the one-fifth share of each such child (thereinafter referred to as such child's settled share) should be held by the trustees upon the trusts and subject to certain powers and provisions therein declared.

The trusts of this settlement of 1895 provided that the trustees should pay the income of each such child's settled share to such child during his or her life, and that after his or her death such child's settled share should be held upon trust for all or such one or more the others of the said five children in such manner and if more than one in such shares as such child should by will or codicil appoint, and that in default of appointment such child's settled share should accrue to and be held in trust for the others of the said five children then living in equal shares.

The settlement contained a proviso as follows: "Provided always that it shall be lawful for the trustees or trustee in their, his, or her absolute discretion at the request of any of the said five children either in contemplation of marriage or subsequently to marriage to revoke the trusts hereinbefore declared concerning such child's settled share and by way of resettlement to declare such new or other trusts of and concerning the same as the trustees or trustee may think fit for the benefit of all or any to the exclusion of the others or other of the following persons—namely, such child or any wife or husband of such child, or such child's children or remoter issue or the next-of-kin of such child, but not in favour of any other person or persons, and on any such resettlement such child's settled share may be transferred to trustees appointed by any such resettlement.

By another settlement made on the 12th day of December, 1896, between the parties to the settlement of 1895, similar trusts were declared and provision made with regard to a further sum of money, the only difference being that the payment of the income was delayed in the case of certain of the children. There were the same provisions in the case of the death of any child and the same power of revocation.

The settlements of 1895 and 1896 were stamped respectively with ad valorem duty at the rate of five shillings for every £100 of the amount or value of the property settled, and with the adjudication stamp, and no question arose as to the duty paid thereon.

By a deed of revocation dated the 10th of April, 1899, and made between the trustees of the two settlements of 1895 and 1896 of the first part and the Honourable Claud Eustace Hamilton-Russell, one of the five children mentioned in the settlements of the 28th of June, 1895, and the 12th of December, 1896, of the second part, and trustees of the third part, after reciting that a marriage was intended to be solemnised between the said Claud Eustace Hamilton-Russell and Maria Lindsay Wood, and that it had been agreed that the one-fifth share of the said Claud Eustace Hamilton-Russell of and in the trust funds in the settlement of 1895 comprised and thereby settled should be to the extent and in the manner thereinafter expressed resettled under the power in that behalf given to the trustees by that settlement, it was witnessed that the trustees thereby revoked the trusts by the settlement of 1895 declared concerning the said one-fifth share of the said Claud Eustace Hamilton-Russell, and by way of resettlement did thereby declare that the said one-fifth share of the trust funds in the settlement of 1895 comprised and thereby settled should from and after the solemnization of the said intended marriage be held upon trust to pay the income thereof to the said Claud Eustace Hamilton-Russell during his life, and after his decease to pay or transfer at such time and in such manner as was thereinafter agreed and declared the capital of the said one-fifth share of the investment for the time being representing the same to the trustees of a deed of even date being the settlement to be made in contemplation of the said intended marriage to be held by such trustees upon the trusts and with and subject to the powers and provisions declared and contained concerning the same in the same marriage settlement.

By another deed of revocation, also dated the 10th of April, 1899, and made between the same persons as were parties to the deed of revocation already referred to, the trustees revoked the trusts of the settlement of 1896 concerning the one-fifth share of the said Claud Eustace Hamilton-Russell, and made provisions in similar terms to those contained in the last-mentioned deed of revocation.

Each of the two deeds of revocation was stamped with the duty of ten shillings according to the assessment of the commissioners and with the adjudication stamp, and no question arose as to the duty paid thereon.

By another deed, also dated the 10th of April 1899 (the marriage settlement in question), made between the Honourable Claud Eustace Hamilton-Russell of the first part, Maria Lindsay Wood of the second part, Sir Lindsay Wood of the third part, and the marriage settlement trustees of the fourth part, after reciting (1) the intended marriage between the said Claud Eustace Hamilton-Russell and the said Maria Lindsay Wood; (2) the two settlements of 1895 and 1896 which they related respectively to the funds specified in the first and second schedules to the marriage settlement and the two deeds of revocation above-mentioned; (3) the transfer to the marriage settlement trustees of the stocks specified in the third schedule thereto; and the agreement for making the settlement thereinafter contained, it was witnessed and declared that the marriage settlement trustees should stand possessed of the stocks specified in the third schedule thereto (the wife's trust fund) upon the trusts therein declared, and that after the death of the intended husband the trustees should stand possessed of the one-fifth share of the funds comprised in and settled by the settlements of 1895 and 1896 (the husband's trust fund) upon trusts also thereinafter declared.

The trusts under the marriage settlement of the husband's trust fund were to pay the annual income thereof to the intended wife during her life and during every coverture for her separate use and without power of anticipation, and after her death in trust for all or such one or more exclusively of the other or other of the children or remoter issue of the intended marriage at such time and in such shares and generally in such manner as the intended husband and the intended wife should jointly appoint, and in default of and subject to any such appointment then the survivor should appoint, and in default of and subject to any such appointment in trust for the child, one, or all the children equally, if more than one the intended marriage who, being male, should attain the age of twenty-one years, or, being female, should attain that age or marry under it.

The trusts under the marriage settlement of the wife's fund were to pay the annual income thereof to the intended wife during her life for her separate use and during any coverture without power of anticipation and after her death if the intended husband should survive her to pay to him during the remainder of his life if surviving the annual income of one-half of the same trust fund. After the death of the intended wife and subject to the life interest given to the intended husband in one-half of the wife's trust fund the trustees or trustee were to stand possessed of the wife's trust fund in trust for all or such one or more exclusively of the children or remoter issue of the intended marriage at such time and in such shares generally as the intended husband and intended wife should jointly appoint. The provisions in case of a default of appointment were similar to those provided with regard to the husband's fund.

The marriage settlement also contained a declaration that if there should be no child of the intended marriage who, being male, should attain the age of twenty-one years, or, being female, should attain that age or marry, then subject to the trusts and powers therein declared and contained or by law vested in the trustees the trustees should stand possessed of the husband's trust fund upon such trusts as the intended husband should by will appoint, and of the wife's trust fund in trust for Sir Lindsay Wood.

The commissioners expressed the opinion that ad valorem duty was payable upon the marriage settlement under the head "Settlement" in the first schedule to the Stamp Act, 1871, upon the amount or value of all the property thereby settled, including the husband's fund, and assessed the ad valorem duty accordingly.

The appellant acquiesced in the assessment of ad valorem duty in respect of the wife's trust fund, but did not admit that the duty was payable upon the husband's trust fund, and relied in respect of that fund upon the terms of the exemption under the head "Settlement" which is in favour of an "Instrument of appointment relating to any property in favour of persons specially named or described as the objects of a power of appointment, where duty has been duly paid in respect of the same property upon the settlement creating the power of the grant of representation of any will or testamentary instrument creating the power."

Ingpen, K.C. (Dunham with him), for the appellant.—Ad valorem duty having been paid on the original settlement, no duty is payable on the marriage settlement which, in regard to the husband's funds, is simply a deed annexed to the settlement, and is exempt under section 106, sub-sections 1 and 2, of the Stamp Act, 1871.

Sir R. B. Finlay, A.G. (S. A. T. Rowlatt with him), for the commissioners.—The instrument is a settlement and is liable to stamp duty as such.

KENNEDY, J.—It is said, as I understand the argument presented on behalf of the appellant, that this marriage settlement ought to be treated in reference to the husband's trust fund as coming under the exemption, because what is done in that deed is merely a setting out by reference that which in point of law was effectually done as a valid appointment by the deed of even date to which the trustees of the fund so appointed were parties, and that the marriage settlement ought to be treated simply as what we may call an annexe in respect of the husband's trust funds to the deed of even date. It is said, in fact, that nothing is really done by the marriage settlement—that it is a reference, the effectual appointment being made by the deed of even date, called the deed of revocation and new appointment, which there is no claim to tax. I cannot agree with that contention. The document is described on the face of it as a marriage settlement, and a marriage settlement it is, and it does more in regard to these very funds than merely serve as what one may call the descriptive portion to be attached to an earlier deed. It is a marriage settlement by which the various parties to that deed, including the husband and wife and the trustees of the marriage settlement, do in fact validly agree to the disposition. If this had been merely a deed between the same parties as the deeds of revocation and new appointment of the same date, and not supplementary in the sense of effectually supplementing, but merely setting out, as a book might set out, the powers and provisions declared in the earlier deeds, then I think there would have been a good deal to be said for the appellant's contention. But it is not so. It is an effectual document as a settlement. It is a necessary supplement for the purpose not merely of setting out these additional or descriptive provisions as to how the power of appointment is to be exercised, but it is also an agreement between the parties by way of settlement affirming and giving a real legal effect to that which could no doubt be done by the previous deed. I hold that this is not within the exemption a mere instrument appointing the "property in favour of persons specially named or described as the objects of a power of appointment where the duty has been duly paid in respect of the same property upon the settlement creating the power or the grant of representation of any will or testamentary instrument creating the power," but that it is a settlement not within that exemption, and therefore one upon which in respect of the husband's property the stamp must be the ad valorem stamp required by the Act.

PHILLIMORE, J.—I agree. The question here relates to the liability to ad valorem duty of an instrument under seal, which on the face of it purports to be a settlement, and therefore primâ facie would be liable to settlement duty. Three grounds have been given why it should be exempt. The first was that taken before the commissioners, that it was exempt as being within the exemption clause in the schedule to the Stamp Act as an instrument or appointment made under the powers given by the original settlement. I agree with the proposition that an instrument of appointment is none the less within that exemption when it purports (using ordinary language) to resettle the property appointed. I agree also with the proposition that, primarily speaking, every instrument of appointment under a particular power varies the trusts of the settlement, and must therefore be regarded as a resettlement and is exempt by the express words of the Stamp Act, and none the less exempt because it does not simply appoint to one object of the power but limits the appointment to various objects and powers. That is a very good reason why the instrument which has been called a deed of revocation and new appointment has not been held liable and is not now sought to be made liable to settlement duty; but the instrument with which we have to deal is not that instrument but a later one.

Now I accept the words of my learned brother. This is not a mere annexe or schedule. It carries the matter further. It is a necessary complement to the earlier deed, and as such necessary complement it acts by virtue of being a settlement, and therefore I think it is liable to duty.

It is worthy, I think, of notice that there are additional parties to this last instrument; but quite apart from that it is not a mere annexe but is a completion and further execution of the scheme and as such an execution by way of settlement and is therefore liable to duty.

The third point is worthy of consideration. It is this; that inasmuch as the two deeds of revocation and new appointment were sufficiently stamped because they came within the exemption, the other complementary document did not require a stamp. The answer, I think, is this. The exemption goes no further than it says. The deeds of revocation and new appointment are only sufficiently stamped because they are exempt from the settlement stamp. They are not sufficiently stamped as settlements. Then when we come to look at the last document, if it is liable to settlement duty, it must pay the duty none the less because the others have escaped taxation. I agree that our judgment must be for the Crown.

Judgment for the Crown.

Solicitors for the appellants, Tarry, Sherlock, & King.

Solicitor for the commissioners, Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

K. B. Div. (Channell, J.) } May 7.

ST. JAMES'S HALL CO. v. THE LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL. (a.)

Metropolis—Building—Prevention of danger from fire—Music-hall licensed prior to 1878—Powers of London County Council to require alterations—Second exercise of power—Metropolis Management and Building Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 32), s. 11.

When the London County Council or their predecessors, the Metropolitan Board, have exercised the powers conferred on them by section 11 of the Metropolis Management and Building Act, 1878, for the prevention of danger from fire in theatres, music-halls, and other public buildings which had been licensed for the first time prior to 1878, by requiring alterations to be made in a building, and such requirements have been duly complied with, they cannot again exercise the powers of the section by requiring further alterations, unless, in the meantime, the owner has so altered the building as in the opinion of the council to increase the danger from fire.

Trial of action without a jury.

The action was brought for a declaration that a notice served upon the plaintiffs by the defendants under section 11 of the Metropolis Management and Building Act, 1878, was ultra vires, and for an injunction.

The facts and arguments appear sufficiently from the judgment.

Avory, K.C., and Garland, for the plaintiffs.

Daldy, for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

CHANNELL, J.—This action, tried before me without a jury, was brought to obtain a decision upon the true interpretation of section 11 of the Metropolis Management and Building Act, 1878, which section gave to the Metropolitan Board (and now the London County Council, their successors) certain powers for the prevention of danger from fire in music-halls which had been licensed for the first time prior to 1878. The Metropolitan Board exercised those powers in 1885 in reference to the St. James's Hall, and the plaintiff company, the owners of that hall, contend that the powers of the section must be exercised once for all. The defendants have served another notice purporting to be under the powers of the section, and the plaintiffs bring this action for a declaration that the notice is ultra vires and for an injunction. The plaintiffs have obtained an interlocutory injunction restraining the defendants from acting upon the notice until the trial, and I have now to say whether the plaintiffs' view of the section is right. If it is, there is no dispute that the plaintiffs are entitled to the declaration and, if they require it, to an injunction. The facts are that in 1885 the Metropolitan Board, proposing to proceed under the section, prepared a draft notice of their requirements. This draft notice was the subject of negotiation between Mr. Walter Emden (who then, as now, was the architect of the plaintiffs) on the one hand and the architect of the board on the other. The result was that modifications of what was first proposed by the board were agreed to, and those modifications were embodied in the formal notice which was served and dated on the 10th of August, 1885. The works in that notice were done by the plaintiffs at a cost, it is said, of upwards of £7,000. There was no appeal as the works had been agreed, but the result seems to me to be the same in substance as if there had been an appeal against the original proposals of the board and the award had been that the works which, in fact, were in the notice of the 10th of August, 1885, should be done. At any rate it is not disputed that there was an exercise of the compulsory powers of the section. The original proposal of the board included the pulling down of an existing staircase and the re-erection of a better staircase at the same place. The modifications agreed on included the pulling down of that staircase, but it was agreed that it should not be re-erected, the necessary accommodation being provided elsewhere. One of the things which the county council now direct is the erection of a staircase at the same spot. I do not myself regard that fact as very important, but the change of view which has apparently taken place is an illustration of the mischief of holding that the powers of the section may be exercised from time to time whenever "it appears" to the fluctuating body that there is danger, for it certainly would be hard on the owner of the building if, as soon as he has complied with the requisition of the board, he is liable to be ordered to pull down and alter that very work on a change of views of the board, or its architect. Since the works were completed in 1885 the plaintiff company have from time to time, at the suggestion of the county council, voluntarily made some alterations in such matters as the seats in the hall, and otherwise, but they have done so without admitting the right of the defendants to require them to do those or other alterations, and it seems doubtful whether any of them were structural alterations. The London County Council now require, claiming the powers to do so by the 11th section, further works, the cost of which is estimated at upwards of £4,000, and they have obtained (though without prejudice to the question now raised) the leave of the Secretary of State to make the requirement. Under these circumstances it becomes necessary carefully to examine the words of the section. The material parts of the section are as follows:

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

"Whenever it appears to the board that . . . any house, room, or other place of public resort within the metropolis, containing a superficial area for the accommodation of the public of not less than 500 square feet, which was at the time of the passing of this Act authorized to be kept open, and which is kept open, for . . . music . . . under the authority of a licence granted by any court of quarter sessions, is so defective in its structure that special danger from fire may result to the public frequenting the same, then and in every such case the board may, with the consent . . . of her Majesty's principal Secretary of State . . . if in the opinion of the board such structural defects can be remedied at a moderate expenditure, by notice in writing require the owner of such house, room, or other place . . . to make such alterations therein or thereto as may be necessary to remedy such defects, within a reasonable time to be specified in such notice. . . ." There is also a provision for an appeal to an arbitrator appointed by the First Commissioner of Works, who may either confirm the notice with or without modifications, or refuse to confirm it, and whose decision shall be final. There is nothing in the words used which is consistent with the contention of either party. The word "whenever" seems to be as capable of meaning "at whatever time," which is the plaintiffs' contention, as it is of meaning "so often as," which is the defendants' contention. And it is necessary to look at the rest of the section and the context to see which of the two meanings it does bear.

The first observation on the section is that it relates entirely to defects in structure and not to defects arising from want of repair, or from the mode of control or management of the premises, such as keeping doors locked or the like. Further, it only gave power to the board to require alterations which could be effected at a moderate expenditure. The result of that is that, if in 1878 there was a licensed music-hall which was so defective in its structure that special danger from fire arose, and the defects were such that they could not be remedied except at an excessive expenditure, no alterations could be required to be made in that music-hall, and subject to any power the licensing authority might have to refuse to renew the licence the hall must continue with its defects. That being so, it seems clear that the Metropolitan Board could not, in reference to such a hall, divide its requirements and make successive requirements, each of which could be complied with at a moderate expenditure, although the total would be excessive. That goes to show that the powers of the section must be exercised once for all; otherwise, though the expenditure on each of the successive requirements might be moderate, the total might be excessive. Again, when the 12th and 13th sections are looked at, it certainly seems that, if a music-hall first licensed after 1878 complied with the regulations of the board in force at the date it was completed, and got a certificate to that effect, it could not be interfered with. It is unlikely that the existing halls would be put on a worse footing than new halls in this respect, but to this argument it is answered that the old halls can only be interfered with when it appears to the board that there is actual danger, and, further, that they are protected by the power of the Home Secretary to veto the requirement and by the right to require arbitration. These protections are, however, given in respect of the first exercise of the powers, and, therefore, they do not go far to show that there cannot be a second exercise. Further, the condition precedent is not that there should in fact actually be danger, but merely that there should "appear to the board" to be danger, and it is these words that give rise to the question whether the board can change their views. On the whole I have come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs are right in their contention. I think that the board had only power to order alterations if such alterations not only could be done at a moderate cost, but also would when done remedy the defects. It must, therefore, be assumed that, when the works done in pursuance of the former order were completed the defects were remedied, or, at all events, that in the opinon of that board they were remedied. That board could not in the next year have said that they themselves had made a mistake and ought to have ordered something more or something different, and if they could not, neither can the London County Council, who succeed to their rights. The word "whenever" is fully accounted for by its not being intended to compel the Metropolitan Board forthwith on the passing of the Act of 1878 to survey all existing music-halls. They were to exercise the power given whenever they chose, but when they did exercise it their judgment was in my opinion to be subject to the mode of appeal provided in the section, final not only as to the works ordered being required, but also as to the order being sufficient.

I may point out that this view of the section is in accordance with what has been decided in analogous cases in other Acts of Parliament—namely, that a power to a local authority to order structural works (as, for instance, sewers) at the expense of a private owner must be exercised once for all: see Bonella v. Twickenham Local Board, 36 W. R. 50, 20 Q. B. D. 63; Hornsey Local Board v. Davis, [1893] 1 Q. B. 756, 41 W. R. Dig. 127. I am, however, not prepared to hold that if the owner of an old music-hall after complying with a requisition under the section were himself to make further structural alterations and the effect of those alterations were to cause, in the opinion of the London County Council, danger from fire they might not then act on the section. That question does not arise now. If the owner of a hall should ever do this, it would probably be held that the hall as so altered was not the old hall which had been licensed prior to 1878, but a new hall coming under section 12, and that it must comply with the existing regulations. If, however, that was not held, it would be in my opinion an open question whether section 11 could not be applied to the case on the ground that although the hall had not lost the protection given by section 11 yet the powers of the board had never been exercised in reference to the defects in question. That case differs entirely from the present. Here undoubtedly the Metropolitan Board did exercise in 1885 the powers of section 11, and, if there are any defects now, they either existed prior to the order of 1885 and ought to have been dealt with, or they were occasioned by the works done in pursuance of that order. In either case the powers under section 11 were, in my opinion, exhausted. I therefore think that the London County Council cannot now exercise the powers. There must be judgment for the plaintiffs with costs.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Howlett & Wilkinson.

Solicitor for the defendants, Blaxland.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance, J.) May 2.

BARNETT AND ANOTHER v. MAYOR, &c., OF POPLAR. (a.)

Tramways—Contract by road authority to repair road—Liability for non-repair—Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), ss. 28, 29, 55.

By section 28 of the Tramways Act, 1870, the promoters of tramway companies are put under a liability to keep in repair so much of the road on which their tramway is as lies between their rails, together with 18 inches on the outside thereof.

By section 29 they are entitled to enter into contracts with the road authority with respect to the paving and keeping in repair of the roadway of any road on which their trams run.

By section 55: "The promoters or lessees . . . shall be answerable for all accidents, damages, and injuries happening through their act or default, by reason or in consequence of any of their works or carriages, and shall save harmless all road and other authorities, companies, or bodies collectively and individually . . . from all damages and costs in respect of such accidents, damages, and injuries."

Held, that the road authority, when it had contracted with the tramway company to keep in repair that part of the road on which the tramway ran, could be sued for non-repair.

Appeal against a decision of his Honour Judge French, nonsuiting the plaintiffs in an action brought by them against the council of the metropolitan borough of Poplar to recover damages in respect of injury caused to a van coming in contact with one rail of a tramway belonging to the North Metropolitan Tramway Co., which rail stood up, as was alleged, above the level of the street owing to the failure on the part of the defendants or their predecessors to keep the street in proper repair.

The North Metropolitan Tramway Co. had entered into an agreement with the Poplar road authority (the defendants in the county court) under section 29 of the Tramways Act, 1870, for the repair of the roads over which their tramways in the borough of Poplar ran. The county court judge having held that as the defendants were a public authority no action for mere nonfeasance would lie, the plaintiffs appealed.

Abinger, for the appellants.—The defendants, the road authority for the borough, having contracted under section 29 of the Tramways Act, 1870, with the North Metropolitan Tramway Co. to keep in repair the road in question, the tramway company ceased to be answerable for its non-repair, and the road authority became liable to that obligation as fully as the tramway company had been liable previously. That point was actually decided in Howlitt v. Nottingham Tramways Co., 32 W. R. 248, 12 Q. B. D. 16. That decision was subsequently approved by the Court of Appeal in Alldred v. West Metropolitan Tramways Co., 39 W. R. 609, [1891] 2 Q. B. 398. The plaintiffs, therefore, have a right of action against the defendants, and there should be a new trial.

Chester Jones, for the respondents.—The cases relied on by the appellants merely decide that when a tramway company enters into a contract with the road authority for the repair of the road on which their trams run, their liability for non-repair is gone. They do not lay down the principle that under such a contract the road authority's common law liability is thereby increased, and that as a public body they are to be held liable for acts of nonfeasance. Nothing would alter their common law liability but an express statutory provision: Municipality of Pictou v. Geldert, 42 W. R. 114, [1893] A. C. 524, and there is no express provision to this effect in the Tramways Act, 1870.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—In this case, speaking for myself, I think the learned county court judge was premature in nonsuiting the plaintiffs. But for the decisions in Howlitt v. Nottingham Tramways Co. and Alldred v. West Metropolitan Tramways Co. much could have been said in favour of the view that the action should have been brought against the tramway company. But in Howlitt v. Nottingham Tramways Co. it was laid down that the liability was transferred from the tramway to the road authority where the road authority had contracted to repair the company's part of the road under section 29 of the Act of 1870. It was said by Mr. Chester Jones that the expressions of the judges on that point were merely obiter dicta, because the decision of that question was not necessary for the judgment. I agree. But none the less the question was very material to it, because it would be a very strong thing to say that a liability could be got rid of altogether. At any rate, Lord Coleridge has expressed the opinion that the road authority would under such a contract be liable. Then in Alldred v. West Metropolitan Tramways Co., Howlitt's case, which I have just referred to, was reviewed by the Court of Appeal. Now, if the Court of Appeal had thought that an action would not lie against the road authority some dictum to that effect would surely have been expressed. In my judgment the road authority when by contract it agreed to repair took over from the tramway all liability for non-repair. The action must therefore be retried, and the case sent back for a new trial.

LAWRANCE, J., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Frederick George, Stratford; C. G. Bradshaw.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance, J.) April 25.

WINTER v. BANCKS AND ANOTHER. (a.)

Trover—Conversion—Police constable—Article taken by police from a person accused of theft.

A gig, the property of the plaintiff, disappeared and was found in the possession of B. B. was prosecuted for stealing the gig and was acquitted. The gig had been removed by the police to the police-station. Both the plaintiff and B. demanded possession of the gig from the defendant, who was the sergeant in charge at the police-station. The defendant, acting under instructions from his superior officer, an inspector, refused the demand of the plaintiff and delivered the gig to B.

Held, that the defendant was liable in trover.

Appeal from the Warrington County Court.

The facts and arguments in the case will be found sufficiently stated in the judgment.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

E. Sutton, for the defendant.

Trevor Lloyd, for the plaintiff.

Cur. adv. vult.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—This is an appeal on the part of the defendant from the judgment of his Honour Judge Gwynne James, who gave judgment for the plaintiff with £4 damages. The action was brought in trover by Mr. Winter to recover the value of a gig alleged to have been converted by the defendants—Bancks and Lings. Judgment was given for the defendant Bancks, but judgment for £4 damages was given against the defendant Lings. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the judge had rightly found that the defendant Lings had been guilty of conversion in having refused to deliver the gig to the plaintiff and in having subsequently delivered it to a man named Broderick. It was contended on behalf of the defendant that he had not been guilty of any act which rendered him liable in the action. The material facts appear to be as follows: On the 17th of May the plaintiff bought a gig at Newton Fair. Subsequently to the purchase the gig disappeared and was afterwards found in the possession of Broderick. Broderick was prosecuted for the larceny at Liverpool Quarter Sessions, and on the 17th of July was acquitted. On the same day Broderick's solicitor wrote to the police officer in charge at Newton-le-Willow police-station, and to all others whom it may concern, a letter demanding possession and return of the gig. On the 18th of July, the next day, the plaintiff's solicitor wrote to the sergeant in charge at Newton-le-Willow police-station claiming that the gig was still the plaintiff's property, and asking that it should not be given up to any other person than the plaintiff. On the 20th Mr. Grundy, the acting superintendent, wrote to the plaintiff's solicitor stating that it had been decided to return the gig to Broderick at twelve on Saturday, the 21st. On the 31st of July the plaintiff's solicitor wrote to Sergeant Bennett, the sergeant in charge at the police-station, giving him notice of his intention to commence an action on behalf of the plaintiff for the recovery of the gig. The only other material facts proved before the learned judge were that on the 18th of July the plaintiff asked the defendant Bancks for the gig and he refused to give it up, and that upon the 21st the plaintiff again asked Bancks and the defendant Sergeant Lings, who was Bancks's superior officer, to deliver to him the gig, and that one of them replied, "No, I am going to give it to Broderick," and that on the same day Bancks by Ling's instructions handed the gig to Broderick. Lings had not been made a defendant when the action was commenced, but he was added as a defendant by consent at the trial as he was Bancks's superior officer. Lings further stated at the trial that in handing the gig over to Broderick he acted under instructions received by telephone from his superior officer, Inspector Grundy. Under these circumstances the learned judge found that after demand by Winter and refusal to comply with it by defendant Lings he (the defendant Lings) handed over the gig to Broderick. No application was made under the first section of the Police Property Act, 1897, either by the plaintiff or the police for an order of a court of summary jurisdiction as to the custody of the gig. The case is undoubtedly near the line. It was contended on behalf of the defendant that there was no conversion by the defendant Lings, that he acted in doing what he did under the instructions of his superior officer, Inspector Grundy, that he did not intend to deprive the plaintiff of the property of the gig, but was simply handing it back to the person from whom it had been taken prior to the hearing of the charge at the quarter sessions. The learned judge found that the gig was in fact the property of the plaintiff, and that as the defendant Lings had taken upon himself to hand the property over, after demand and refusal, he was liable in trover. After careful consideration we have come to the conclusion that the judgment was right. We think it must be taken upon the findings to which we have referred that the defendant Lings was responsible for the custody of the gig and did, in fact, hand it over at a time when it was the plaintiff's property and after the plaintiff had demanded possession. We think the case falls within the principle laid down in the cases of Fowler v. Hollins, 20 W. R. 868, L. R. 7 Q. B. 616, L. R. 7 H. L. 757, and Stephens v. Elwall, 4 M. & S. 259, and that the defendant, though acting as a subordinate, is responsible. He was party to a dealing with the plaintiff's property and acted at his peril. We think, therefore, that the judgment should be affirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs.

LAWRANCE, J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the defendant,

Solicitor for plaintiff, William Calley, for A. Browne, Warrington.

C. C. R.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Mathew, Lawrance, Bruce, and Ridley, JJ.)

March 30.

REX v. HAMILTON. (a.)

Criminal law — Practice — Sentence of hard labour — Common law forgery — "Any cheat or fraud punishable at common law" — Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100), s. 29.

H. was tried and convicted for the common law misdemeanour of forging and uttering writing with intent to defraud. An order had been made in a county court that he should render an account of the money he had collected and received for one Cobb, which he had fraudulently misappropriated. He delivered papers in which the donors had entered their names and the amounts they had handed him, and he so altered these entries as to make it appear that smaller amounts had been given.

It was not alleged that Cobb had been defrauded or prejudiced, except so far as it appeared that he had been deprived by the prisoner's conduct of the evidence to support his claim. The question reserved was whether there was power to pass a sentence of imprisonment with hard labour.

The Court (Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Mathew, Lawrance, Bruce, and Ridley, JJ.) held that, as the indictment charged only a common law forgery, without alleging that anyone was thereby defrauded, the case did not come within the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851, s. 29, by which persons convicted of "any cheat or fraud punishable at common law" may be sentenced to hard labour.

Case stated by the Common Serjeant of the City of London.

The prisoner, F. T. Hamilton, was tried before him at the Central Criminal Court on the 5th of February on an indictment charging him in four counts with the common law misdemeanour of forging and uttering certain writings with intent to defraud. The prisoner had, in fact, fraudulently misappropriated the greater part of the money he had collected and received for one Cobb.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

An order had been previously made in the county court that he should render an account of the money he had so received. He thereupon delivered to the plaintiff's solicitor as true and genuine lists of the amounts received, papers on which the donors had entered their names and the amounts which they had handed him. He had, however, altered the entries made by the donors so as to make it appear that they had given much smaller sums, and so as, in some cases, to conceal their identity.

It was not alleged in the indictment that Cobb had, in fact, been defrauded or prejudiced except so far as it appeared in the third and fourth counts that Cobb was deprived by the prisoner's conduct of the evidence to support his claim.

The prisoner was an old offender, and in the opinion of the Common Serjeant ought to have been sentenced to imprisonment with hard labour under the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851, which provides by section 29 that "whenever any prisoner shall be convicted of any of the offences following as an indictable misdemeanour—that is to say, any cheat or fraud punishable at common law . . . it shall be lawful for the court to sentence the prisoner to be imprisoned for any term now warranted by law, and also to be kept at hard labour during the whole or any part of such term of imprisonment."

The jury having found the prisoner guilty, the Common Serjeant postponed sentence, and committed the prisoner to prison pending the determination of the question whether, as only the intent to defraud was alleged in the indictment, and there was no allegation of actual defrauding, the prisoner could be sentenced under this section to hard labour.

In the first count of the indictment the prisoner was indicted for, on the 8th of January, 1901, unlawfully, falsely, and deceitfully making, forging, and counterfeiting two writings, purporting to be true lists of moneys collected by him for the benefit of John Milbourne Cobb, with intent to defraud.

The second count charged him with unlawfully, falsely, and deceitfully uttering and publishing, as true, two false, forged, and counterfeited writings, purporting to be true lists of moneys collected by him for the benefit of J. M. Cobb with intent to defraud, he at the time he so uttered and published the same well knowing them to be false, forged, and counterfeited.

The third count alleged that the prisoner had collected and received money from subscribers in aid of Cobb, and that afterwards an action was brought on behalf of Cobb against the prisoner in the Brompton County Court for the delivery of an account of the said moneys, in which action Hamilton, by order, delivered to Cobb's solicitor two writings purporting to be subscription lists of moneys received by him; that Hamilton, intending to injure, prejudice, and defraud Cobb, and to deprive him of his just rights in the action, unlawfully, falsely, and deceitfully did forge and utter the said list in certain material particulars with intent to defraud; and the fourth count charged the prisoner with uttering and publishing as true the writings mentioned in the third count with intent to defraud.

No counsel were instructed to appear.

Herman J. Cohen, who had prosecuted at the trial, at the request of Lord Alverstone, stated to the court the case for the prosecution. The prisoner, he submitted, had been brought within section 29 of the Criminal Procedure Act of 1851, although he admitted that forgery at common law, apart from its being a "cheat or a fraud," was not punishable with hard labour. But the publication of forged instruments for the purpose of deceit was in itself a substantive offence indictable at common law.

He cited Rex. v. Minister and Churchwardens of St. Botolph, Bishopsgate, 1 W. Bl. R. 443; Hawkins' definition of forgery (Hawkins' Pleas of the Crown, ch. 1, p. 51), and Russell on Crimes (6th ed.), vol. 2, p. 467, where it is said that "the cheat or fraud must be effected by some deceitful and illegal practice or token, which affects or may affect the public, in order to be indictable at common law. And it seems also to result that a cheat or fraud in order to be punishable by the common law must be such against which common prudence could not have guarded." See also Rex. v. Govers, cited in 2 East's Pleas of the Crown, p. 824.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—In deciding this case we must be careful not to forget that it is one of concealing a fraud by forgery, and it is difficult to say that that is a "cheat or a fraud" in itself. We think the prisoner cannot be sentenced to hard labour on the present indictment. He might very well have been prosecuted for cheating, but he was indicted for forgery. At the time the statute was passed the offence of forgery was well known. And as he was indicted for forgery with intent to defraud the question arises whether the offence of which he has been convicted comes within section 29 of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100. In our opinion it does not, and therefore the Common Serjeant would have been wrong if he had sentenced the prisoner to imprisonment with hard labour upon a conviction on this indictment.

MATHEW, LAWRANCE, BRUCE, and RIDLEY, JJ., concurred.

Case remitted.

Court of Appeal.

From P. D. & A. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., A. L. Smith, M.R., and Romer, L.J.) May 23.

"THE HEATHER BELL." (a.)

Ship—Mortgage—Chartering ship on half profits—Impairing security—Validity of mortgage—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 34.

The mortgagor of a steamship, which was used for tourist and pleasure traffic, chartered her for six weeks in the summer to run from Liverpool to places on the coast of North Wales, the mortgagor to receive one-half of the net profits.

Held, that, though no freight was reserved by the charter-party, the mortgage was not one which impaired the sufficiency of the security, and was therefore valid against the mortgagee.

Judgment of Jeune, P. (ante, p. 352), affirmed.

Appeal from the judgment of Jeune, P. (reported ante, p. 352).

The action was by William Horton to recover damages for the wrongful taking possession by the defendant, William Ward, of the steamship Heather Bell at a time when she was under charter to the plaintiff.

The defendant was the registered mortgagee of the ship, and the charter was made by the mortgagors who were in possession.

The facts and arguments are stated in the report below.

Jeune, P., gave judgment for the plaintiff.

The defendant appealed.

W. Robson, K.C., and Ernest M. Pollock, for the defendant.

Carver, K.C., and Leslie Scott, for the plaintiff.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—It is contended before us that the agreement entered into on the 29th of August between the mortgagors and the plaintiff was invalid as against the mortgagee. We have to consider what are the rights of a mortgagor who is in possession of a ship, and the rights of the mortgagee depending upon the mortgage. I may say that I think no fraud was imputed or could be imputed on the evidence against Mr. Horton, who, as we are told, is a solicitor and a gentleman interested in developing his estate at Rhos by running steamers to bring traffic and tourists from Liverpool during the summer months. In the first place the position of mortgagee and mortgagor is defined by statute. Section 34 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, which is in all respects the same as the section referred to in Collins v. Lamport, 13 W. R. 283, 34 L. J. Ch. 196, provides that "except as far as may be necessary for making a mortgaged ship or share available as a security for the mortgage debt, the mortgagee shall not by reason of his mortgage be deemed the owner of the ship or any share therein, nor shall the mortgagor be deemed to have ceased to be owner thereof." Now it is obvious that if the owner remains in possession he may enter into contracts in dealing with the ship. When that question came before Lord Westbury in Collins v. Lamport, the only test which he laid down in his judgment is whether the dealings will materially impair the security of the mortgagee. If not, then they are to stand. When that test was discussed in the House of Lords in Keith v. Burrows, 25 W. R. 831, 2 App. Cas. 636, Lord Cairns used language in which I do not think he meant to go further, but which puts it in a somewhat different way. He says: "The mortgagee of a ship does not, ordinarily speaking, or by a mortgage such as existed in the present case, obtain any transfer by way of contract or assignment of the freight, nor does the mortgagor of a ship undertake to employ the ship in any particular way, or, indeed, to employ the ship so as to earn freight at all. The mortgagor of a ship may allow the ship to lie tranquil in dock, or he may employ it in any part of the world, not in earning freight, but for the purpose of bringing home goods of his own or for his own benefit." And later on, having referred to the incidents of contract, he says: "All those acts would be the ordinary incidents of the ownership of the mortgagor who remains the dominus of the ship with regard to everything connected with its employment until the moment arrives when the mortgagee takes possession." The real question therefore is, was this contract of the 29th of August one which would impair the sufficiency of the security, or, to adopt the other phrase, impair the security? Having heard all the evidence, I am not prepared to say that the agreement to run her on half profits must impair or does impair the security. It does take the boat for a period of six weeks out of the power to earn freight, unless that freight is produced by the profits, but I cannot say that under the circumstances there might not be an honest expectation that there would be profits. Therefore to undertake to run the boat at half profits seems to me not to be terms which either the mortgagor or the charterer might consider would do any wrong to the rights of the mortgagee. Several other clauses of the charter-party have been referred to, but I need not go through them. If under clause 4 the charterer or the mortgagor were attempting to sell part of the equipment of the ship, as at present advised I do not think they have any right to do it, but Mr. Robson has asked us to say that because those words are used in the agreement it must impair the security. I cannot say that the existence of that clause, though it might impair the rights of the parties if a sale of the equipment of the ship had been attempted, makes the charter-party such that it is not binding upon the mortgagee. Then again, by clause 7, certain expenses are to be paid out of the receipts. It may be a perfectly proper arrangement under the charter-party, although if under that Mr. Horton seeks to set off something else, when taking those accounts the question would have to arise whether the security was impaired. Then the only other point is that the ship is not insured. I quite agree that the mortgagee has a right to prevent the vessel being run unless she is properly protected against perils of the sea, but it cannot be contended that if a charter-party is otherwise binding on the mortgagee, the fact that he could have restrained her from running until properly insured would justify him in setting aside the charter-party. Therefore, having regard to the judgments of Lord Westbury and Lord Cairns in the case in the House of Lords, I cannot find that this agreement was one to impair the security of Mr. Ward, and therefore, being entered into by the mortgagor under his powers as owner, as contemplated in the section of the Merchant Shipping Act, it is binding on the mortgagee. He is entitled to take the benefit of it, but he is not entitled to treat it as of no effect.

A. L. SMITH, M.R., and ROMER, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Wynne, Holme, & Wynne, for Whiteley & Co., Liverpool.

Solicitors for the defendant, H. Forshaw & Hawkins, Liverpool.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

From P. D. & A. Div. (Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., A. L. Smith, M.R., and Romer, L.J.) (And P. D. & A. Div.) — May 22; March 23.

THE CARGO EX PORT VICTOR. (a.)

Ship—Salvage—Charterers having an interest in goods saved—Liability to contribute—Action in personam.

The defendants chartered a ship, in which they agreed to carry, amongst other cargo, certain Government stores from London to Jamaica upon the terms that they were to be responsible for the safe delivery of the cargo, subject to certain exceptions. During the voyage the ship, through her own default, came into collision with another vessel, and salvage services were rendered to her by the plaintiffs. A salvage award was made against the ship, cargo, and freight. the award including a sum in respect of the Government stores. The Government having refused to pay salvage, the plaintiffs brought an action in personam against the defendants to recover the amount payable in respect of the Government stores.

Held, affirming the judgment of Jeune, P., that, as the defendants had an interest in the Government stores saved, they were liable to pay salvage remuneration, and an action in personam lay.

The Five Steel Barges, 15 P. D. 142, 38 W. R. Dig. 192, approved.

This was an action in personam by the owners, masters, and crew of the steamship Amelie and the steam tugs Columbia and Shamrock against the Jamaica Fruit Importing and Trading Co. of London (Limited) to recover £279 15s. 8d. for salvage remuneration in respect of Government stores carried in the steamship Port Victor.

By a charter-party dated the 9th of October, 1896, the steamship Port Victor was chartered to the defendants for three years.

By clause 10 of the charter-party the charterers agreed to indemnify the owners from any consequences that might arise from the captain following the charterers' instructions and signing bills of lading; and by clause 22 negligence of the master and officers was mutually excepted.

In June, 1897, general cargo and Admiralty stores were shipped on The Port Victor at London for Jamaica.

The Admiralty stores were shipped under contracts and Admiralty regulations for the carriage of stores, which provided for bills of lading, and by the terms of which the owners (which meant the party or parties who engaged to convey the stores) were to be held responsible for the safe delivery of the stores shipped, the act of God, Queen's enemies, fire, and all other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers, and navigation excepted. The stores were shipped under bills of lading, which stated them to be shipped subject to the stipulations contained in the charter-party and the regulations of her Majesty's transport service.

While on the voyage The Port Victor collided in the English Channel with another steamship, and sustained serious injuries.

Salvage services were rendered to The Port Victor by the plaintiffs in the present action, and she was taken back to Tilbury Docks.

The Port Victor was found alone to blame for the collision.

A salvage action in rem was brought by the present plaintiffs against the owners of The Port Victor, her cargo and freight, and Barnes, J., awarded the plaintiffs the sum of £2,200, and reserved the question of the liability for the proportion of the award due in respect of the Government stores for further consideration if necessary. This proportion was agreed at £297 15s. 8d.

The Admiralty refused to pay salvage on the ground that the collision was caused by the negligence of The Port Victor, and that therefore the defendants were responsible.

The plaintiffs thereupon brought the present action to recover the £297 15s. 8d.

Aspinall, K.C., and Dawson Miller, for the plaintiffs, now contended that the defendants were liable for the sum claimed on the authority of the Five Steel Barges, 15 P. D. 142, 38 W. R. Dig. 192.

Carver, K.C., and Scrutton, K.C., for the defendants, contended that they were not the owners of the property salved, nor had they the right at any time to the possession of the property salved. The action in personam to recover salvage could, it was urged, only be brought against the persons who had actually obtained possession of the res salved.

They cited the cases of The Hope, 3 Ch. Rob. 215; The Trelawney, 3 Ch. Rob. 216*n*; The Thetis, 3 Hagg. 14; The Rapid, 3 Hagg. Adm. 419; The Zephyrus, 1 Wm. Rob. 329; The Cargo ex Schiller, 2 P. D. 145, 25 W. R. Dig. 270; Falcke v. Scottish Imperial Insurance Co., 35 W. R. 794; The Elton, 39 W. R. 703, [1891] P. 265.

Cur. adv. vult.

March 23.—JEUNE, P., read the following judgment: This is a claim for salvage in respect of certain Government stores carried in the steamship Port Victor, and the claim is made against the Jamaica Fruit Importing and Trading Co. of London, the defendants, as being interested in the cargo. The proportionate part of the salvage award for which the defendants are liable, if at all, has been ascertained, and the only question remaining is that of liability. The interest of the defendants in the cargo is of the following nature. By a charter-party of the 9th of October, 1896, the defendants became the charterers of The Port Victor for thirty-six months. By the tenth clause the charterers indemnify the owners against any claim arising under any bill of lading, and by clause 22 negligence of the master and officers is made one of the subjects of mutual exception. The defendants entered into various arrangements in respect of goods to be conveyed by The Port Victor, and inter alia engaged for the conveyance of the Government stores above mentioned, the engagement being made subject to the regulations for the conveyance of Government stores. These regulations provide for bills of lading, and further provide that the owners (which term is expressly declared to signify the party or parties who engage to carry the stores under the agreement for freight or charter-party) will be held responsible for the safe delivery of the Government stores shipped. The goods in question were shipped under a bill or bills of lading which state them to be shipped subject to the regulations contained in the charter-party and in the regulations for her Majesty's transport service. The salvage service was rendered necessary by reason of a collision caused by the negligence of The Port Victor. The result, therefore, is that, as between the Government and the defendants, the defendants were responsible for the safe delivery of the goods, and they are therefore directly interested in the preservation of the goods, and the salvage service was a direct benefit to them.

It was argued before me on behalf of the plaintiffs that the above facts bring the case within that of the Five Steel Barges, decided by Lord Hannen. In that case the defendants were under a contract to build and deliver certain barges to the Government. The barges were being towed by the plaintiffs for the defendants from Chepstow to Portland, and were salved by the plaintiffs, who brought an action in personam against the defendants in respect of two of the barges which were given up to the Government. It was argued for the plaintiffs that the defendants had an interest in the barges being delivered safely to the Government, and that, therefore, a service was rendered to them personally. It was said, in answer, that the plaintiffs had lost any rights they possessed against the barges by giving them up to the Government, and that the defendants had no property in them. Lord Hannen held that it was perfectly clear on the authorities that an action in personam lies against the owners of a vessel which has been saved, even though the property has been transferred to others, and the lien lost. "In this case," the learned judge proceeded, "the property does not appear to have been in the defendants, because it would, I think, under the contract, be in the Government. But I am of opinion that the right to sue in personam is not confined to the case of the defendants being the actual legal owners of the property salved. I think it exists in cases when the defendant has an interest in the property saved, which interest has been saved by the fact that the property is brought into a position of security. The jurisdiction which this court exercises in salvage cases is of a peculiarly equitable character. The right to salvage may arise out of an actual contract, but it does not necessarily do so. It is a legal liability arising out of the fact that property has been saved, that the owner of the property who has had the benefit of it shall make remuneration to those who have conferred the benefit upon him, notwithstanding that he has not entered into any contract on the subject. I think that proposition equally applies to the man who has had a benefit arising out of the saving of the property. In this case the defendants were under contract with the Government to supply them with barges at a certain price. Payment was to be made by certain instalments, of which only one remained unpaid at the time of the services. I think that, if Mr. Barnes's argument is well founded—viz., that those instalments were all paid on condition that the barges should be delivered all within twelve months of the date of the contract—it would follow that, if the defendants had not been in a position to deliver the barges within the twelve months, then either they would have been liable in damages for not performing the contract or liable to make restitution of the instalments which had been paid them on conditions not fulfilled by them. It appears to me, therefore, that they had substantially an interest to the full amount of the barges, at the time of the services, and that the same moral obligation to which the law has given force in the case of an owner applies to those who have an interest in the property." There is a decision in the Scotch Courts which appears to me to be in accordance with that in the Five Steel Barges. In Duncan v. Dundee Shipping Co., 5 Ct. Sess. Cas., 4th ser., 742, it was held by the Court of Session that the shipowners in that case were acting as common carriers, and were, in the circumstances of the case, liable for the safe delivery of the goods, and that, therefore, they had no defence to a claim for salvage in respect of such goods. "The case," Lord Shand said, "comes to this—that, the carrier of these goods being absolutely bound to deliver them at the end of the voyage, the salvage has directly enured to his benefit, for it has enabled him to fulfil his contract and to earn the freight which he charged for these goods. On the ground that it is established in this case as matter of fact that the benefit of this salvage, in so far as regarded the cargo, enured directly to the carrier, I am of opinion that he is liable for the salvage which is here claimed." It was argued before me that the present case can be distinguished from that of the Five Steel Barges on the ground that in that case the defendants had a lien for the price of the barges, and so, for practical purposes, were the owners, although the property in law was no doubt in the Government. It was contended that the claim for salvage is limited to a claim against the owners or at least against the persons who, like carriers, are in actual possession of the goods at the time of the salvage, but that in the present case the defendants were not the owners of the goods, nor were ever in possession of them. A legal foundation for this view was sought in the argument that the Admiralty action in personam is based on the supposition that the goods were allowed by the salvors to be returned to their former possessor on the terms that he should be liable to pay the salvage reward.

(a.) Reported by GWYNNE HALL, Esq., and W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barristers-at-Law.

I think that this contention is based on too narrow a view of the right of a salvor, and, in my opinion, the nature and origin of the Admiralty action for salvage do not impose any limits on that right narrower than those indicated by Lord Hannen and Lord Shand in the cases I have mentioned. It is quite true that in the case of The Elton, I said, relying on the authorities I there cite, that, "although salvage suits in the form of actions in personam are comparatively rare, the Court of Admiralty always had jurisdiction, founded apparently on the fiction of an action in rem having been brought, and the property salved having been allowed to be taken by the owners, to entertain such suits when at least there existed a corpus of property salved." But in the following year, when I had occasion in the case of The Dictator, [1892] P. 304, 41 W. R. Dig. 4, to examine the subject of the origin and nature of the Admiralty jurisdiction more fully, I came to the conclusion, which the approval expressed by the Court of Appeal in the case of The Gemma, [1899] P. 285, 48 W. R. Dig. 4, leads me to hope was well founded, that the action in personam did not arise out of jurisdiction in rem, and that the distinction between actions in personam and actions in rem depended only on whether the person or property of the defendant was arrested in the first instance. To rest the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court upon an implied request from the owner of the property in danger to the salvors, or on an implied contract between the salvors and owner with the relinquishment of the res for consideration, is, I think, to confuse two different systems of law and to resort to a misleading analogy. The true view is, I think, that the law of Admiralty imposes on the owner of property saved an obligation to pay the person who saves it simply because in the view of that system of law it is just he should; and this conception of justice naturally imposes a proportionate obligation on any person whose interest in the property is real, though falling short of that of ownership. I see no reason, therefore, why I should not follow the view of Lord Hannen, and of the Scotch Court of Session, that a man who has had a benefit arising out of the saving of the property is liable to a claim for salvage no less than the actual owner of it. It was urged before me that to take this view would expose mortgagees and insurers to salvage actions. I do not think it is necessary in this case to define exhaustively the classes of persons against whom, under various circumstances, claims for salvage might be made. There is no doubt the authority of eminent judges in the courts of common law for saying that contribution cannot be required by an owner from the lenders upon bottomry or respondentia: vide Parke on Marine Insurance, vol. 2, p. 898, and the judgments of Lord Mansfield and Lord Kenyon were cited. On the other hand, Dr. Lushington, in The Louisa, 11 W.R. 614, Br. & L. 59, held that mortgagees came within the term "owners" in the sections of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854 relating to salvage. It is, however, easy to see that the contingent interest of persons who make advantage by way of mortgage, or otherwise, on property, or of insurers, is of a different character from that of persons who have a direct interest in its safe delivery, and may negative, or, at least, impose different conditions on the right of a salvor against some of these persons. It may be, therefore, that it will become necessary hereafter to consider what is the exact definition of the interest in the property saved which gives rise to a claim for salvage. But in the present case I have no doubt that the defendant has such an interest, and my judgment must, therefore, be for the plaintiff.

The defendants appealed.

Carver, K.C. (Scrutton, K.C., with him), for the defendants.

Aspinall, K.C., and Dawson Miller, for the plaintiffs, were not called upon.

LORD ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—In the judgment I am about to deliver I do not desire in any way to infringe upon any of the main principles contended for by the appellants. Like the case of the Five Steel Barges, the facts of this case are of a very special character. The defendants chartered the ship for three years. They might have used that ship for their own purposes, putting their own cargo on board, or they might have used it for carrying other persons' goods, charging any rate of freight they could get. The particular amount of freight which they were going to pay to the shipowners was by no means the measure of the freight which they would earn. They could make any bargain they liked with the persons who put cargo on board; and it is clear that in this case the bargain between the owners of the goods and the defendants was different from the bargain between the defendants and the shipowners. Now, in that position of things the defendants came under contract with the Government to carry some Government stores. By the terms of the contract they were to be liable for the safe delivery of the stores. These Government stores which they were going to carry for freight were put on board of the hired ship, and that combined adventure then consisted of the ship, of the goods belonging to various owners, amongst others the Government, and of the interest that the charterers had in earning the freight. The vessel met with some disaster, and was salved and towed into an English port. The salvors, for some reason, did not arrest the cargo, and a salvage action in personam was brought against the defendants. Now it is admitted that an action in personam can be brought against the owners of the ship, and also against any person in the position of owner of the ship. It is not contended that an action in personam cannot be brought against the owners of the cargo. Therefore, whether or not the foundation of the action was that there must originally have been some arrest, in which I entirely agree, it was not conclusive as to the form of action, because dealing with the simple case of owner of ship and cargo, certainly an action in the present day can be brought in the Admiralty Court for salvage, either in personam or in rem.

We have now to consider what is the real position of these defendants, apart from the decisions to which I will presently refer, in respect of the interest which has been the subject of salvage. I think that the defendants were bailees of these goods. It is perfectly true that they were put, not upon their own ship, but upon a hired ship, but they were put there in pursuance of a contract made with the defendants and for the purpose of earning freight which was to go into the pocket of the defendants, and under a contract whereby the defendants undertook, if I may say so, in the event which happened, to deliver these goods. Now, when the accident happened which led to the salvage, what were the real interests which were at risk? There was the interest of the owners of the ship, the interest of the charterers in the freight — because the charterers' freight might be an entirely different thing from what the owners' freight was—in fact it is quite possible that the chartered freight would not be at risk at all, because it might be something paid for the hire of the ship in advance and so not be at risk at all—and then there was the interest of the owners of the goods. In my opinion this last category includes, for the purpose of what we are now considering, all the persons who were collectively or singly the owners of the goods for the purpose of that adventure. I do not think it at all necessary to go through the cases which have been suggested of persons whose contracts may be affected more or less directly by the destruction of the goods. I think that in a common maritime adventure of the kind we are speaking of at least the persons who have an interest in the goods similar to that of owners by virtue of the contract they have made for their delivery, have an interest which is the subject-matter of salvage. Now, before I come to the authorities, I wish to say one word upon a part of the argument to which I entirely assent. I quite agree that in all salvage services there must be some res saved. That was clearly established in the case of The Renpor, 31 W. R. 640, 8 P. D. 115, where Lord Esher laid it down clearly that something must be saved in order to give valid ground for a salvage action. That authority, together with others, is cited in Mr. Justice Kennedy's book upon Civil Salvage, at p. 113. The foundation of the doctrine of salvage is that there must be a property saved so as to represent a fund out of which the salvors can be remunerated. But when once that is secured, I think that at any rate at the present day, proceedings against the persons who properly can be made liable to pay that salvage may be either in rem or in personam. It is quite immaterial to consider what the original object of jurisdiction in personam was. In the present day, both in the county courts and in the Admiralty court, because property had been saved the persons who are liable to pay salvage can be proceeded against in personam.

Now, how do the authorities stand? Speaking for myself, I feel almost bound by an authority of so great a lawyer as Sir James Hannen on such a subject as this, the circumstances being practically identical with the circumstances of the present case. I should hesitate a very long time to overrule his decision in such a case as that of the Five Steel Barges. The defendants there were under contract to deliver the five barges to the Government. Three of the barges were still in such a position that they could be proceeded against in rem, and were so proceeded against. The other two had been delivered to the Government, and the action was brought against their late owners. Sir James Hannen said: "But on this point I am of opinion that the right to sue in personam is not confined to the case of the defendant being the actual legal owner of the property saved. I think it exists in cases where the defendant has an interest in the property saved, which interest has been saved by the fact that the property is brought into a position of security." He speaks of an interest in property which has been saved. Further on he says: "It is a legal liability arising out of the fact that property has been saved, that the owner of the property, who has had the benefit of it, shall make remuneration to those who have conferred the benefit upon him, notwithstanding that he has not entered into any contract on the subject. I think that proposition equally applies to the man who has had a benefit arising out of the saving of the property." I do not intend to decide more than is necessary for this case, but, having regard to ordinary commercial transactions, in my opinion that test of Sir James Hannen does include, and properly include, the class of persons within which the defendants in this case come—I mean the charterers of ships who have received goods put upon their hired ships and are liable to replace those goods if they are lost, and are interested in the earning of freight for carrying those goods. There is also the case in Scotland to which we have been referred, Duncan v. Dundee, &c., Shipping Co., in which four very learned Scotch judges came to the same conclusion. It seems to me that upon these authorities, as well as upon principle, the judgment of Jeune, P., was right. I come to the conclusion that these defendants had such a direct interest in these goods, in the fulfilment of the contract of carriage, that they are properly made defendants in this action. Therefore I am of opinion that the decision of the court below must be upheld.

A. L. SMITH, M.R.—We are asked to overrule the decision of so great an authority as that of Sir James Hannen. The judgment of Sir James Hannen in the Five Steel Barges was delivered in 1890, after the judgment of the Scotch Court of Session in the other case referred to, and curiously enough the Scotch case was not brought to the attention of Sir James Hannen when he decided that case of the Five Steel Barges. Therefore we have, independently of each other, four Scotch judges and afterwards Sir James Hannen spontaneously arriving at the same conclusion. Now we are asked in the year 1901 to say that all of those five learned judges were wrong in what they decided in those cases. I myself am prepared to rest my judgment upon the judgment of Sir James Hannen, and I will say this, that having read this judgment through twice during the argument of this case I consider it is founded upon common sense. A clearer judgment was never delivered by any learned judge, and I refuse to say it is wrong. I think this appeal ought to be dismissed.

ROMER, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, W. A. Crump & Son.

Solicitors for the defendants, Parker, Garrett, & Holman.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Kekewich, J. } June 5, 13.

In re CARY AND LOTT'S CONTRACT. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser — Freeholds — Conveyance by executors to devisee subject to a charge—Land Transfer Act, 1897, ss. 2 (2) (3), 3 (1)—Lord St. Leonards Act (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35), s. 29.

The purchaser from a devisee (of a testator who died in 1898) to whom freeholds have been conveyed by the executors under the Land Transfer Act, 1897, s. 3 (1), "subject to a charge for the payment of any money which the personal representatives of the testator are liable to pay," is not entitled, where the executors have given proper notices under Lord St. Leonards Act, s. 29, and have paid all debts of which they have received notice, to an indemnity in respect of that charge; in such circumstances the executors are exempt from liability for any debts of which they have received no notice, and such exemption extends to the real estate of the testator.

Vendor and purchaser summons.

The testator, R. S. S. Cary, who died in 1898, devised the freeholds in question to trustees upon certain trusts which are not material to be stated.

After the expiration of a year from the death of the testator his executors, by a deed dated the 29th of September, 1899, conveyed the freeholds to the trustees "subject to a charge for the payment of any money which the personal representatives of the testator are liable to pay."

The trustees sold a part of the freeholds and the purchaser made a requisition that the vendors must give him proper indemnities "against all the outstanding debts and liabilities of the testator, and also all moneys which at the date of the conveyance the said representatives were liable to pay and which moneys still remain unpaid or unsatisfied."

It was admitted that the estate had been fully and properly administered and that there remained unpaid no debt of the testator of which the executors had had notice.

The executors had given sufficient notices under Lord St. Leonards Act (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35), s. 29.

The purchaser's objection was that there might be other debts of which the executors had not had notice, and that by reason of the charge contained in the deed of conveyance these debts, if any, were an incumbrance on the freeholds.

The question of the purchaser's right to an indemnity was not treated as the substantial point of the summons, the real objection taken was that there existed or might exist a charge on the property which constituted a blot on the title.

Warrington, K.C., A. J. Mackey, and Romer, for the vendors.—By section 1 of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, the freeholds in question vested in the legal personal representatives in spite of the devise. The words in the conveyance by them to the trustees "subject to a charge for any money which the personal representatives are liable to pay," are taken from section 3 (1) of that Act. Sufficient notices had been given to satisfy the requirements of Lord St. Leonards Act, and by section 29 of that Act, where an executor shall have given such notices "he shall not be liable for the assets or any part thereof so distributed to any person of whose claim such executor shall not have had notice at the time of distribution." It is clear that before the Land Transfer Act, 1897, real property which passed into the hands of a purchaser was not liable for any debts of the testator: Spackman v. Timbrell, 8 Sim. 253; Richardson v. Horton, 7 Beav. 112; Pimm v. Insall, 1 Mac. & G. 449, at p. 458. So also in the case of personal property: Dilkes v. Broadmead, 9 W. R. 238, 2 De G. F. & J. 566. The same applies to chattels real. With regard to them, if the legal personal representative has issued the necessary notices and paid the claims of which he has notice, and then transfers the property, he is freed from all liability for the testator's debts. As to real property, if the executor had notice of debts, then after the Land Transfer Act, 1897, the land would remain liable. But the same principles now apply to real property as apply to chattels real (Land Transfer Act, 1897, s. 2 (2)), and the effect of Lord St. Leonards Act, s. 29, here is to free the executors from liability. So, at the time of conveyance, the executors were liable to no creditors of the testator.

(a.) Reported by H. CLAUGHTON SCOTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

T. H. Carson, K.C., and F. H. H. Greenland, for the purchaser.—The question is, what does the charge in the conveyance mean—that is, what liabilities were the legal personal representatives under at the date of the conveyance? Section 3 of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, does not affect the question. Section 29 of Lord St. Leonards Act deals with personal estate only. Under that section the executor remains liable so long as the property is in his hands. The immunity against unknown debts only arises after distribution. So the words in section 3, "subject to a charge for the payment of any money which the personal representatives are liable to pay," means money for which they were liable at or just before the conveyance. The meaning of section 3 is perfectly clear, and cannot be controlled by the general expression found in section 2 (2). The purpose of the Act is to give creditors a continuous security which they did not possess before.

Warrington, in reply.

Cur. adv. vult.

KEKEWICH, J., after stating the facts, said: It is beyond doubt that such an objection if made with regard to freeholds devised by the will of a testator dying before the 1st of January, 1898 (the day when the Land Transfer Act, 1897, came into operation), would have been untenable, and I approach the consideration of that Act with a strong and, I believe, thoroughly sound opinion, that I ought not to regard it as altering a settled rule of law and disturbing the recognized practice of conveyancers unless convinced that this alteration is clearly expressed or is so necessarily implied in the provisions of the Act that it is impossible to give reasonable effect to those provisions on any other footing. The neat question, then, is whether, if it be hereafter discovered that there are debts unpaid of which the personal representatives of the testator have no notice, such debts will be money charged on the freeholds. I have thus stated the question because, although the deed says generally "any money which the personal representatives of the testator are liable to pay," yet it being common ground that there is nothing now remaining unpaid to the knowledge of the executors, that is really what I have to decide. Study of the Act for the purpose of determining this particular question has disclosed numerous and great difficulties of construction and of the application to the new statutory provisions of old rules, and having regard to these difficulties and to the danger of indicating an answer to any question which has not been argued, and the equal danger of suggesting questions which, after all, may not require solution, I think it better to decide the point actually before me on as simple grounds as circumstances permit and with a statement of as few reasons as are compatible with judicial decision.

The Act undoubtedly introduces a new element into the administration of estates in making real property assets for the payment of debts. That this is so is clear from the 3rd sub-section of section 2. The same sub-section says that real estate shall be administered in the same manner, subject to the same liabilities, costs, and expenses, and with the same incidents as if it were personal estate. There is nothing here making the executors liable for moneys for which they would not otherwise have been liable, but only the assets available for satisfaction of the liabilities are increased, and it is reasonable to conclude that if, apart from this increase of assets, the executors are under no liability, such increase was not intended to create one. Before considering whether, under such circumstances as we have here, there is any liability on the part of the executors, it is well to notice the 3rd section, because it justifies the language of the conveyance making the freeholds "subject to a charge for any money which the personal representatives are liable to pay." Those are the words of the Act, and they have been taken from the Act and put into the conveyance. One therefore looks at the Act for an indication of what was intended to be charged, but I observe that the Act only permits the conveyance to be made subject to a charge, leaving it optional to the executors whether they will require that or not, and in consequence it is the conveyance and not the Act which creates the charge, if any there be. I do not think the 3rd section in any way helps one to determine what the charge is.

Prior to the Act 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35 (Lord St. Leonards Act) an executor remained liable to creditors notwithstanding all precautions on the executor's part and want of notice of claims, and, indeed, absolute safety could only be obtained under an administration judgment. That Act, however, provided (section 29) that where an executor has given notice such as would have been directed by the court in an administration suit, then, at the expiration of the time named in such notices, he shall be at liberty to distribute the assets and shall not be liable for the assets or any part thereof so distributed to any person of whose claim such executors shall not have had notice at the time of the distribution of such assets, or part thereof, as the case may be. In this case the executor has given notices of the character contemplated by the Act, and they are, in my opinion, such as would have been given by the court in an administration suit. Therefore, so far as the personal estate is concerned, the executor remains under no liability if he distributes the assets on the footing of there being no claims of which he has received no notice. Applying this as having regard to section 2, sub-section 3, of the Land Transfer Act, 1897 I ought to apply it, to real estate; the exemption from liability is complete also as regards that. But it remains to be observed that the 29th section of Lord St. Leonard's Act concludes with a proviso that nothing in that Act contained shall prejudice the right of any creditor or claimant to follow the assets or any part thereof into the hands of the person or persons who may have received the same respectively. If the result of the two Acts together is, as regards real estate, merely to exempt the executors from liability but to leave the real estate charged, the purchaser's objection still stands good, but, as already stated, real assets could not have been followed in the hands of a purchaser before the Land Transfer Act, 1897, and there is nothing in that Act to create a right in the creditors to follow them. The proviso to section 29 of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35 is not, therefore, applicable to real estate, the law respecting which is, in this particular, intact.

I will declare, as asked by the summons, that the purchaser is not entitled to any indemnity in respect of claims against the testator's estate of which the executors had no notice at the date of the conveyance, and the purchaser must pay the costs.

Solicitors, Robbins, Billing, & Co., for H. Dymond, Exeter; Wood, Bigg, & Nash, for Kitsons, Mackenzie, & Hext, Torquay.

Chan. Div.
Byrne, J. } May 23.

In re CLUTTERBUCK.
FELLOWS v. FELLOWS. (a.)

Will—Accumulations of rents and income—Investment in purchase of real estate—Purchase of land—Accumulations Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 58)—Interpretation Act (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 3.

A direction to accumulate and invest the rents and annual income of property to be employed in the purchase of real estate is bad under the Accumulations Act, 1892.

In re Danson, Bell v. Danson, [1895] W. N. 102, discussed.

Summons.

This was a summons on the part of the plaintiffs, the executors and trustees of the will of Thomas Clutterbuck (deceased), who died in June, 1900, to determine (inter alia) whether a trust contained in the testator's will for the accumulation of the income of his mining properties was valid to any and what extent.

The facts of the case were as follow:

By his will bearing date the 22nd of April, 1893, testator appointed the present plaintiffs his executors and trustees and devised (inter alia) his mining properties unto and to the use of his trustees upon trust out of the income arising therefrom to pay certain charges therein mentioned and subject thereto "upon trust to invest in the Parliamentary stocks or funds of the United Kingdom the rents and annual income of my mining property for the period of ten years computed from my death and during that period to pay the income arising from such investments to my nephew Algernon Barlow, and I direct that at the expiration of that period the whole of such investments be transferred or paid to my nephew Algernon Barlow if he be living, but if he be dead at such expiration then the same shall be invested in the purchase of real estate so as to go along with my estate at Whittle. And subject to the aforesaid trusts I direct that my mining property shall be held upon trust for my said nephew Algernon Barlow for his life with remainder upon trust for his first and other sons according to seniority in tail, with remainder upon trust for his first and other daughters respectively in tail, with remainder upon trust for my own right heirs." And testator devised his freehold estate at Whittle to the use of Algernon Barlow for life without impeachment of waste, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with remainder to his first and other daughters in tail, with remainder to testator's right heirs.

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The defendant Algernon Barlow, as tenant for life, claimed that he was entitled to the immediate receipt of the rents of the mining properties on the ground that in the event of his dying before the expiration of the period for accumulation, the accumulation was for the purchase of land only and was, therefore, void under the Accumulations Act, 1892, and that in the event of his surviving the period it was an accumulation for his own benefit. The said defendant A. Barlow had an infant daughter, E. Eleanor Barlow, who was made a defendant to the summons.

The Accumulations Act, 1892, s. 1, enacts that "no person shall after the passing of this Act settle or dispose of any property in such manner that the rents, profits, or income thereof shall be wholly or partially accumulated for the purchase of land only, for any longer period than during the minority of any person or persons who, under the trusts of the instrument directing such accumulation, would for the time being, if of full age, be entitled to receive the rents, profits, or income so directed to be accumulated."

Eastwick, for the plaintiffs.

Dauney, for the defendant E. Eleanor Barlow.—The word "land" in the Accumulations Act, 1892, as defined by the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 3, means corporeal hereditaments: In re Danson, Bell v. Danson, [1895] W. N. 102. It is not necessary for the purpose of satisfying the trust in the will for the purchase of real estate that corporeal hereditaments should be purchased.

Levett, K.C., and A. E. Ellis, for the defendant A. Barlow.—The direction to accumulate for the purchase of real estate is a direction to accumulate for the purchase of land only, and is void. The word hereditaments includes everything that is capable of being inherited. The alleged dictum of Chitty, J., in In re Danson was probably a slip of the reporter. It was not necessary for the decision.

Rowden, K.C., and C. Gurdon; Carson, K.C., and E. S. Ford; Borthwick and A. F. Peterson, for other parties, took no part in the argument.

Dauney replied.

BYRNE, J.—The question in this case turns upon the true construction to be placed upon the Accumulations Act, 1892. [His lordship read section 1.] The testator devised his mining property upon trust after paying certain charges to invest the rents and annual income thereof in the Parliamentary stocks or funds of the United Kingdom for a period of ten years to be computed from his death and during that period to pay the interest arising from such investments to his nephew Algernon Barlow. It is therefore a partial accumulation that is directed. Then the testator directs "at the expiration of that period the whole of such investments to be transferred or paid to my nephew Algernon Barlow if he be living, but if he be dead then the same shall be invested in the purchase of real estate so as to go along with my real estate at Whittle." There is in the case before me no minor in existence who if of full age would be entitled to receive the rents, issues, and profits so directed to be accumulated, and the question is whether, inasmuch as there was a direction to invest in the purchase of real estate, that direction comes within the rule hit at by the Accumulations Act.

In order to ascertain the meaning of the words "for the purchase of land only," we must have recourse to the Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), to find out what is the true meaning of "land," because unless a contrary intention appears, the word "land" will have the meaning attributed to it by that Act.

Section 3 of that Act provides: "The expression 'land' shall include messuages, tenements, and hereditaments, houses and buildings of any tenure." It is argued that the real estate which by the will is directed to be purchased need not necessarily be land. It need not necessarily be land in the ordinary sense of the word land. The question is whether you can find any real estate which is not messuage, tenement, or hereditament, house or building of some tenure or other. Mr. Dauney admitted that he could not point out anything that would not be real estate and would not be covered by those words. He could point out certain real estate which is not land in the ordinary sense; but none that is not land within the exclusive meaning to be given to the expression land by virtue of the Interpretation Act.

One difficulty has arisen in consequence of a case of In re Danson, decided by Chitty, J., when he is reported as saying, "It is not in my view possible to say that the terms used in the Act of 1889 import 'money to be laid out in the purchase of land'; that could only be effected by an express definition clause. Land, therefore, in the definition of the Interpretation Act means corporeal hereditaments. That definition I read into the Act now before me (the Accumulations Act), whose words I consequently find to mean that which they would naturally at first sight appear to mean." That expression was not necessary for the determination of that case at all, because, as was pointed out by the learned judge then, you might have a permanent investment in Consols by virtue of the powers of the Settled Land Act, and the decision would be just as good if the judge had said it meant corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments. I think that it would be too strong to safely import into the report of this judgment the meaning sought to be put on it—namely, that land within the meaning of the Accumulations Act, 1892, must mean corporeal hereditaments. The judgment was not corrected by the judge, and I think that there must be a slip in the report. Under these circumstances I think that the direction to lay out the investments at the expiration of ten years if Algernon Barlow be then dead in the purchase of real estate is bad. The result is that in any event Algernon Barlow takes the rents so directed to be accumulated.

Solicitors, Pontifex, Hewitt, & Pitt, for Nevinson & Barlow, Malvern, Black & Moss; Oldman, Clabburn & Co., for Wilson, Gilbert, & Co., Norwich; Hardisty, Rhodes, & Hardisty.

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } May 7, 8, 17.

MEARS v. CALLENDER. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Removable fixtures—Fruit trees—Glasshouses—Compensation—Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 61), ss. 3, 34, 54, 55, 60—Market Gardeners' Compensation Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 27), ss. 3, 4, 6.

Where a market gardener has erected glasshouses for the purposes of his trade he may, in the absence of a covenant in his lease to the contrary, remove them as trade fixtures at the end of his tenancy.

Where a clause in a lease gives power to the tenant to convert meadow-land into an orchard, such a clause constitutes the consent in writing of the landlord required by section 3 of the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, and entitles the tenant to claim compensation for orchard trees planted by him.

If the said Act is excluded by the lease, such exclusion is good as regards section 34 of the Act, and is not, to that extent, hit by section 55.

Section 4 of the Market Gardeners' Compensation Act, 1895, gives no right to compensation except in respect of improvements made after the Act.

Action.

About twenty years ago Mr. Joseph Mears bought of Mr. Wiltshire a farm called Kingwood Farm, in Oxfordshire. It was a purely agricultural holding.

For some few years he occupied the farm, but on the 17th of August, 1887, he granted a lease of it to the defendant for seven, fourteen, or twenty-one years, from Michaelmas, 1887, at the yearly rent of £165.

The lease contained the usual covenants applicable to a small farm and farmhouse, and in addition the following provisions, which were not in common form: "(10) Subject to clause 14, the tenant shall not break up or convert into tillage any meadow or pasture land without the landlord's written consent, and if he shall do so he shall, during the remainder of the tenancy, pay the additional yearly rent of £50 for every acre of land which shall be so broken up or converted into tillage, and so in proportion for any less quantity than an acre, such additional rent to be payable half-yearly on the days aforesaid, and to be recoverable by distress or otherwise as rent hereby reserved, and generally the tenant shall manage and cultivate the farm in a husbandlike and in the best manner, so as not to impoverish any part thereof, and shall leave the same at the end of the tenancy in good heart and condition. (11) If the landlord shall at any time during the said term, by agreement with the tenant, expend any money in draining, building, or other permanent improvements on the said premises, the tenant shall during the said term pay to the landlord interest on the sum expended after the rate of £5 per centum per annum, such interest to be considered as additional rent, and to be recoverable as such by distress or otherwise. (12) The tenant shall not in the last year of the tenancy prepare and sow with a white corn crop more than one-half part of the arable land. (13) In the last year of the tenancy the landlord or his incoming tenant shall be at liberty to enter upon the lands for a wheat season so soon as the crop for that year is cleared off, in order to prepare the same for such season, and may also sow seeds among the Lent or summer corn, which the tenant shall harrow in; and the tenant shall also leave gratis for the landlord or his incoming tenant all the roots remaining unconsumed in the ground, and also all improvements made by the tenant, and all cultivations, dressings, and manures, in consideration of no claim being made by the landlord for similar matters on the tenant now entering. (14) The tenant may at any time during the said term, at his own cost, extend the present kitchen garden, part of the said premises, eastwards across the full extent of the pasture field surrounding the said house by a line at right angles with the present kitchen garden wall, and also at the like cost convert into an orchard so much of the meadow land surrounding the said house as he may think proper. (21) The Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, shall not apply to the contract of tenancy."

Shortly after the lease the defendant converted part of the meadow surrounding the house into an orchard. There were at the commencement of the action upwards of 1,200 trees in the orchard

(a.) Reported by W. MORRIS CARTER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

—apples, pears, plums, and cherries—in good bearing condition. These trees, though not capable of removal, were worth several hundred pounds to anyone taking the farm. The defendant also erected ten glasshouses, in which grapes, peaches, nectarines, tomatoes, and strawberries were grown. From these houses he supplied fruit to Reading and also to Covent Garden, and he carried on the trade of a market gardener on the premises with considerable success, and with the full knowledge of his landlord.

The defendant gave notice to quit the farm at Michaelmas, 1901, and he claimed the right to remove the houses and to have compensation for the orchard trees. He pulled down three houses before action brought, and the question raised in this action was whether the plaintiff, who was the present reversioner, could take the benefit of the orchard trees and of the remaining houses without making any compensation or payment for the same. As to one of the houses which had concrete sides and which was erected in or shortly after 1893, the glass span roof was not attached in such a way as to constitute it part of the freehold. It substantially rested by its own weight upon the concrete wall, and it could be lifted up and removed without in any way pulling to pieces or damaging the walls. As to the other houses, wooden piles were driven into the ground, on the top of which wide sills were placed which supported the glass span roofs, except in the case of the vinery, where there was a lean-to roof. The roofs were nailed to the sills or backings, which in turn were nailed to the posts.

Eve, K.C., and J. G. Wood, for the plaintiff.—Clause 13 binds the tenant to leave roots and all improvements; he was let into the tenancy without any valuation, and it was the intention that he should go out without any valuation; the contract excludes the Agricultural Holdings Act. Section 55 of that Act is limited to the exclusion of tenants' rights under sections 1 and 3, and not of those under section 34, which is the section in point here. The glasshouses are not trade fixtures, nor are they chattels capable of removal without losing their original character: Whitehead v. Bennett, 6 W. R. 351, 27 L. J. Ch. 474; Wake v. Hall, 31 W. R. 585, 7 Q. B. D. 295, 8 App. Cas. 195; Elwes v. Maw, 3 East 38. The trees cannot be removed, they were not planted to be replanted and sold as young plants.

Vernon Smith, K.C., and A. F. Peterson, for the defendant.—We do not claim removal of, but compensation for, the trees under sub-section 11 of Part I. of Schedule I. of the Agricultural Holdings Act; clause 14 in the lease gives the consent in writing required by section 3. As to the glasshouses, clause 13 does not apply, as they are not "similar matters." By general law we can remove those placed on concrete as trade fixtures (King v. Ottley, 1 B. & Ad. 161; Wansbrough v. Maton, 4 Ad. & E. 884), and also the other houses connected with the land: Penton v. Robart, 2 East 88; Dean v. Allalley, 3 Esp. 11. The cases cited on the other side referred to solid and substantial brick buildings. In the alternative we claim to come under section 4 of the Market Gardeners' Compensation Act, 1895, in conjunction with section 3, sub-section 1, of the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883.

Eve, K.C., in reply.—As to the trees, the landlord could withold the consent required in section 3, for he could give an illusory compensation merely. Here the tenant has had his compensation in anticipation because he entered without giving compensation. As to the houses, if they are tenant's fixtures they fall within clause 13, and will have to be delivered up: West v. Blakeway, 2 Man. & Gr. 729, at p. 756. The true test as to removal is not, will the removal interfere with the soil, but can the fixture be removed as an integral fixture without being knocked into pieces—that is, without losing its chattel character.

COZENS-HARDY, J., after stating the facts, read the following judgment: It is contended on the part of the plaintiff that the defendant is bound to leave the orchard and all the houses without claiming compensation. On the other hand, the defendant claims, both at common law and under the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, as enlarged by the Market Gardeners' Compensation Act, 1895, to be entitled to remove or to have compensation for all the glasshouses, and he claims under those Acts or one of them to be entitled to compensation for the orchard trees.

It will be convenient to consider—first, what are the rights of the parties irrespective of the Acts of 1883 and 1895, and next to what extent their rights are modified or affected by those Acts. Now at common law it is plain that the defendant could not cut down or remove the orchard trees or claim compensation. But, as to the glasshouses, a much more difficult question arises. If erected for the mere purpose of pleasure and ornament, and not for the purpose of a trade, they would not be removable: Buckland v. Butterfield, 2 Br. & B. 54; Jenkins v. Gething, 2 J. & H. 520. If, however, they were erected, as in the present case, by a market gardener for the purposes of his trade, different considerations arise. In Penton v. Robart, 2 East, 88, Lord Kenyon intimated a strong opinion in favour of the tenant: "The old cases upon this subject leant to consider as realty whatever was annexed to the freehold by the occupier, but in modern times the leaning has always been the other way—in favour of the tenant in support of the interests of trade, which is become the pillar of the State. What tenant will lay out his money in costly improvements of the land if he must leave everything behind him which can be said to be annexed to it? Shall it be said that the great gardeners and nurserymen in the neighbourhood of this metropolis, who expend thousands of pounds in the erection of greenhouses and hothouses, &c., are obliged to leave all these things upon the premises, when it is notorious that they are even permitted to remove trees, or such as are likely to become such, by the thousand in the necessary course of their trade? If it were otherwise the very object of their holding would be defeated. This is a description of property divided from the realty." On the other hand, Lord Ellenborough, in the leading case of Elwes v. Maw, 3 East, 38, did not approve of Lord Kenyon's observations, at least in so far as they might be taken to apply to agriculture: "He"—i.e., Lord Kenyon—"certainly seems, however, to have thought that buildings erected by tenants for the purposes of farming were, or, rather, ought to be, governed by the same rules which had been so long judiciously holden to apply in the case of buildings for the purposes of trade. But the case of buildings for trade has been always put and recognized as a known allowed exception from the general rule which obtains as to other buildings." I am not satisfied that Lord Ellenborough dissented from Lord Kenyon's view, so far as market gardeners were concerned. If, however, there be any difference between Lord Kenyon and Lord Ellenborough, I prefer the view that glasshouses erected by a nurseryman for the purposes of carrying on his trade may be removed. The dicta of Lord Bramwell in Wake v. Hall supports this view. Moreover, the whole tendency of the courts in recent years has been to enlarge the rights of tenants in respect of fixtures. Nor do I consider that there is anything in Kindersley, V.C.'s, judgment in Whitehead v. Bennett, which ought to lead me to a contrary conclusion. Unless, therefore, the defendant is precluded by some covenant in the lease, I think he is entitled to remove the glasshouses. But it is contended that by clause 13 the defendant is bound to leave all the houses without claiming any compensation from the plaintiff, these houses being "improvements" made by the tenant within the meaning of clause 13. Upon the whole I do not think this contention can prevail. I think clause 13 only applies to "similar matters" to those in respect of which the landlord made no claim when the defendant entered—in other words, to the tillages, &c., in respect of which, according to the custom of the country, payment would otherwise have to be made to an outgoing tenant of an agricultural holding. I cannot read them as applying to extensive houses of the nature of trade fixtures erected by a market gardener on the property.

The next question is as to the effect of the Acts of 1883 and 1895. Now, the Act of 1883 divides improvements into three classes—(1) those to which the consent of the landlord is required; (2) those in respect of which notice to the landlord is required; and (3) those which require neither consent nor notice. By section 3 compensation under the Act is not payable in respect of improvements of the first class, unless the landlord has previously consented in writing to such improvement, and any such consent may be given by the landlord unconditionally or upon such terms as to compensation or otherwise as may be agreed upon between the landlord and the tenant, and in the event of any agreement being made between the landlord and the tenant any compensation payable thereunder shall be deemed to be substituted for compensation under this Act. The improvements of the first class include planting of orchards or fruit bushes and erection or enlargement of buildings. By section 34 where after the commencement of the Act a tenant affixes to his holding any engine, machinery, fencing, or other fixture, or erects any building for which he is not under this Act or otherwise entitled to compensation, then such fixture or buildings shall be the property of, and be removable by, the tenant before or within a reasonable time after the termination of the tenancy. There are provisions to which I need not refer in detail by virtue of which the tenant removing must make good all damage and give the landlord one month's notice so as to enable the landlord to elect to purchase. By section 54 the Act applies to a holding such as the defendant's. By section 55 any contract, agreement, or covenant made by a tenant by virtue of which he is deprived of his right to claim compensation under this Act in respect of any improvement mentioned in the first schedule hereto (except an agreement providing such compensation as is by this Act permitted to be substituted for compensation under this Act) shall, so far as it deprives him of such right, be void both at law and in equity. By section 60 what I may call the common law rights of the tenant are preserved. I am relieved from the necessity of considering the effect of section 4 of the Act of 1895, which confers certain benefits upon market gardeners holding under a current tenancy. For since this case was argued before me it has been held by the House of Lords in Callander v. Smith, Ct. of Sess. Cas., 5th series, vol. 2, 1140, that under a precisely similar section in the Market Gardeners' Compensation (Scotland) Act, 1897, no right to compensation is given except in respect of improvements made after the Act. The consequence is that I must put aside the Act of 1895, and consider only the Act of 1883. Now as to the glasshouses, the written consent of the landlord was not obtained, and the Act does not help the plaintiff. The attempt in the lease to exclude the Act of 1883 succeeds as to section 34, which is not hit by section 55. But the landlord's consent in writing to planting the orchard was given by the lease, and there is nothing in clause 13 which sufficed to deprive the tenant of his statutory right to compensation. If, however, my view of the true construction of clause 13 is not correct, then it seems to me that section 55 of the Act of 1883 applies, and that the contract by which, on that hypothesis, he is said to be deprived of his right to claim compensation is void both at law and in equity. A landlord cannot impose as a condition of his consent the term that no compensation shall be paid. The Act prohibits this. The result is that, in my opinion, the plaintiff fails in his contentions, and the action must be dismissed with costs.

Action dismissed.

Solicitors, Coode, Kingdon, & Cotton; Drake, Son, & Barton.

Chan. Div. } June 11, 12.
Buckley, J. }

CHAPLIN & CO. (LIMITED) v. MAYOR, ALDERMEN, AND COUNCILLORS OF WESTMINSTER. (a.)

Metropolis — Management — Highway — Obstruction — Lamp-post—Use of street by adjoining occupier—Private right—Special individual interest—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 130.

The placing of a post in a highway which interferes with the use of the highway by the occupier of premises abutting on the highway to the maximum of his convenience is not an interference with his private right, but with his public rights, if any, although he has such a special individual interest as to be able to sue to enforce those public rights, if any, without joining the Attorney-General as a party.

A local authority, acting in good faith and making a reasonable use of their statutory authority, cannot be sued by an adjoining occupier for interfering with his convenient use of the highway.

The defendants, acting under section 130 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, proposed to set up a lamp-post in a particular place in a London street where the plaintiffs occupied business premises. The plaintiffs alleged that a lamp-post in that place would interfere with the use they had been accustomed to make of the highway for loading and unloading their goods, and they asked for an injunction to restrain the defendants.

Held, that in the absence of bad faith being shown on the part of the defendants, the court would not interfere with their discretion, and the injunction was refused.

This was an action by a company carrying on business in premises in Villiers-street, Strand, London, to prevent the local authority from erecting a lamp-post in the street near their premises.

Villiers-street is a street which runs north and south immediately on the eastern side of Charing Cross Railway Station, and it has a slope downwards from north to south.

The plaintiffs were wine and spirit merchants, who were lessees of certain cellars running a considerable distance along Villiers-street both to the north and, to a slight extent, to the south of a passage-way called Craven-passage, which runs east and west from Villiers-street under Charing Cross Railway Station, and their offices were situate on the western side of Villiers-street, immediately south of Craven-passage. The frontage of their premises upon Villiers-street was 37ft. 6in., and Craven-passage was 30ft. wide.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The defendants stated they had a large business and that many of their vans were daily discharging or receiving goods from their cellars and premises. They were accustomed to have three vans or drays in the street at one time. One received empties from a door upon the southern part of the premises; another unloaded casks higher up the street; and a third stood higher up still from which goods were carried by hand. The middle van or dray carried heavy casks of fifteen or sixteen hundredweight, and this was unloaded by a "slide" or "pulley" from the tail of the dray, which had to be turned so that the slide pointed towards the rise of the slope, otherwise the casks got out of hand. The end of the slide came near the midde of Craven-passage.

In or soon after the summer of 1899 the Corporation of Westminster, or their predecessors, the Vestry of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, determined to light Villiers-street by electricity, and for that purpose they erected certain standards or lamp-posts to hold the lights. They were minded to put one of these standards or lamp-posts on the western side of the street opposite the centre of Craven-passage, and they did in fact erect as a trial a temporary post there, which after standing two months was taken down.

This arrangement of the plaintiffs of having three vans at work in the street at one time necessitated the end of the slide of the middle van being brought up nearly to the place of the proposed post, with the result, as stated by the plaintiffs, that there was danger that the men in unloading the van might get pinned between the cask and the post.

The plaintiffs contended that the defendants had no right to place the standard in the position proposed, having regard to the inconvenience and danger thus caused to them and to their men. They suggested that instead of having a lamp-post the lamp should be suspended from a bracket fastened to their premises, and they offered facilities for this being done. This suggestion was not accepted by the defendants, and the plaintiffs brought this action asking for an injunction to restrain the defendants from placing or erecting, and permitting to remain erected, any structure or post on the west side of Villiers-street in such a position as to cause obstruction to them as occupiers.

The action was heard without pleadings.

H. Terrell, K.C., Hatfield Green, and E. J. M. Chaplin, for the plaintiffs.—The defendants are committing a common law nuisance by their lamp-post, and they are not authorized to do this. The Act only authorizes them to put up lamps where they can do so without committing a nuisance: Vernon v. St. James's Vestry, 29 W. R. 222, 16 Ch. D. 449; Metropolitan Asylums District Board v. Hill, 29 W. R. 617, 6 App. Cas. 193. They are interfering with the access of the plaintiffs to their premises, and thus with their private right: Attorney-General v. Conservators of Thames, 11 W. R. 163, 1 Hem. & Mill. 1, at p. 32; Lyon v. Fishmongers' Company, 25 W. R. 165, at p. 167, 1 App. Cas. 662, at p. 675; Fritz v. Hobson, 28 W. R. 459, 14 Ch. D. 542.

Astbury, K.C., and A. à B. Terrell, for the plaintiffs.—The defendants are authorized and required by the Metropolis Management Act, 1885, s. 130, to set up lamp-posts in the street, and unless they are shown to be acting in bad faith, which is not suggested, they may put their lamp-post where they think best: Goldberg & Son (Limited) v. Mayor, &c., of Liverpool, 82 L. T. Rep. 362, 48 W. R. Dig. 191.

H. Terrell in reply.—In Goldberg & Son (Limited) v. Mayor, &c., of Liverpool the statute authorized the defendants to do the particular act complained of.

BUCKLEY, J.—Having regard to what I am going to say, I do not think that it is within my province to ascertain whether the defendants might or might not have reasonably accepted the suggestion of the plaintiffs that the lamp should be suspended from a bracket. The defendants say the position of the proposed standard lamp is the most convenient, in fact the only convenient position for it, and it is for them to decide where the posts or brackets are to be placed, if at all. The plaintiffs in substance set up a supposed right to have this particular portion of the highway so kept as that they shall be easily able to have three vans loading or unloading opposite their premises at one time. That supposed right is based on this, that the plaintiffs' claim to have part of the highway so kept as that they shall be able to exercise this supposed right of using it to the maximum of their own convenience. I do not think that they have any such right. It has been put forward that they have some private right here. I think not. The right they claim is a right which they enjoy in common with all other members of the public to use the highway. They have a special individual interest in the public right which enables them to sue without joining the Attorney-General as plaintiff, inasmuch as, by reason of the neighbourhood of their premises, they use this part of the highway more than other people, but it is not a private right. I apprehend that a person who owns premises abutting on a highway does enjoy as a private right the right of stepping from his own premises on to the highway, and if any obstruction is placed in his doorway or gateway, so as to prevent him doing this, it is an interference with a private right: see the judgment of Lord Hatherley, when Page Wood, V.C., in Attorney-General v. Conservators of the River Thames, of Lord Cairns in Lyon v. Fishmongers' Company, and of Fry, J., in Fritz v. Hobson. It appears to me that the former of these cases is exactly in point, applying it by analogy. The proposed lamp-post is an obstruction to the highway adjoining the premises of the plaintiffs, but no obstruction of their private right of stepping from the highway on to their premises. Then the plaintiffs say that the lamp-post will be an obstruction to the highway, and as such a common law nuisance. But under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, s. 130, a statutory duty is cast upon the defendants to cause the streets to be lighted, and for that purpose that they "shall maintain, or set up and maintain, a sufficient number of lamps in every such street." Their bona fides in what they are doing is not questioned. What they say, and it commends itself to one's common sense, is that when you put up a physical obstruction the cardinal question is, How far is that obstruction from the next obstruction? The proximity of the two points will to a greater or less extent increase the difficulty of circulation. They say that this particular fixed point is at a greater distance than any other position that they can take from another fixed point. If they put the lamp-post in the middle of Craven-passage at the edge of the kerb, it is at a greater distance from the plaintiff's premises, and at a greater distance from the next adjoining premises to the north than if placed anywhere else. And if they place it rather more towards the north—that is, not immediately opposite Craven-passage—it would not light the passage so well. The duty of lighting the passage is cast, not upon the defendants, but upon the railway company, but they might very well consider the fact that if they placed the lamp at the side it would cast a shadow down the passage. They are therefore selecting a position which in their discretion they think best for the convenience of the public. Now the plaintiffs' right is to use this portion of the highway for loading and unloading their goods reasonably in common with the rest of the public. The highway has under the statute to be lighted, and lighted if necessary by fixed obstructions, and it appears to me that the plaintiffs cannot set up an individual interest in this public right against the reasonable use by the defendants of their statutory authority. I agree that the local authority must not so use their powers as to commit a nuisance. They ought to use it so as to benefit all the members of the public whom they have to consider reasonably to the best of their judgment; and I think that they may, for the benefit of all, affect to some extent the convenience of one. Now a word as to the evidence. [His lordship then reviewed the evidence as to the obstruction caused by the temporary post, and continued:] I arrive, therefore, at the conclusion that the erection of the proposed post will be in no reasonable sense an obstruction to the plaintiffs in unloading their goods at the entrance of the passage. It is obvious that it will to some extent affect the elasticity of their operations, but that is all that can be said. It seems to me that both upon the law and the facts the action fails, and I dismiss it with costs as between solicitor and client.

Action dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Dale, Newman, & Hood.

Solicitors for the defendants, Fladgate & Co.

Chan. Div. Joyce, J. April 17, 18; May 23.

In re DU BOCHET.
MANSEL v. ALLEN. (a.)

Will—Construction—Illegitimate children—Repute—Child born after the date of the will, but before the death of testator.

Following Holt v. Sindrey, 17 W. R. 249, L. R. 7 Eq. 170, and Hill v. Crook, 22 W. R. 137, L. R. 6 H. L. 265, illegitimate children born before the date of a will, who have acquired the repute of being the children of a certain man, may take a bequest given to them as children of that man, notwithstanding that they take as members of a class with the legitimate children of other persons. A child, however, born after the date of the will, but before the death of the testator or testatrix, is not entitled to take, although he or she may have acquired such repute before the death of the testator or testatrix.

Occleston v. Fullalove, 22 W. R. 305, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 147 distinguished.

In re Bolton, Brown v. Bolton, 34 W. R. 325, 31 Ch. D. 542, followed.

Summons for directions by the trustees of the will of Julia Elizabeth Du Bochet.

(a.) Reported by C. W. MEAD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

By her will dated the 17th of July, 1876, the testatrix bequeathed her residuary estate in trust equally for all such of the children (being daughters) of her nephew Richard Du Bochet, her niece Alice, wife of Josiah Allen, and her neice Julia, wife of George Hall, as should live to attain the age of twenty-one years or marry under that age, each child to be paid his or her share on attaining that age or marrying under it.

The testatrix died on the 2nd of July, 1883, before which date a daughter of her niece Alice Hall had attained the age of twenty-one years.

At the date of the will the nephew Richard Du Bochet was then and had for many years previously been living with a lady known as Mrs. Du Bochet and reputed and believed by the testatrix and the rest of the family to be his lawful wife. Richard Du Bochet and this lady were not, however, married till 1890. Before this event three daughters had been born to them, two of whom, Gertrude and Alice, were born before the date of the will in 1876, the youngest, Jessie, was born in 1879, after the will was made. The testatrix always spoke of and treated Mrs. Du Bochet as her nephew's wife, and the three daughters as their children.

On these facts becoming known to the trustees of the will this summons was taken out for directions, inter alia, as to whether the three children of Richard or any of them were entitled to a share in the testatrix's residuary estate.

Badcock, K.C., and E. Ford, for the three children of Richard.—With regard to the elder children born before the date of the will it is certain that they are entitled to share in the residuary estate; they are sufficiently described and are ascertainable, and it matters nothing whether they are legitimate or illegitimate, so long as they are properly described they may be legatees as well as legitimate children: Holt v. Sindrey, 17 W. R. 249, L. R. 7 Eq. 170; In re Haseldine, Grange v. Sturdy, 34 W. R. 327, 31 Ch. D. 511. [JOYCE, J., referred to Andrews v. Partington, 3 Bro. C. C. 401.] In view of the surrounding circumstances the court should read the words other than in their strictly primary meaning: In re Deakin, Starkey v. Eyres, 43 W. R. 70, [1894] 3 Ch. 585. In In re Jeans, Upton v. Jeans, 72 L. T. Rep. 835, 43 W. R. Dig. 193, step-children were held to be intended by "children." As to the child born after the date of the will—the old rule excluding after-born illegitimate children did not apply to wills—the rule only applied to settlements on the grounds of public policy and morality, but in the case of wills this was not needed, as a man by making such a provision could not encourage himself in immorality; much less then will this rule apply to the will of a third person when the child is born before the death of the testator: Wilkinson v. Adam, 1 V. & B. 422; Occleston v. Fullalove.

J. Ashton Cross, for the other residuary legatees.—"Children" must mean "legitimate children," and the gift to the children of Richard fails. The evidence which has been brought forward to show that the testatrix recognized his illegitimate children is really an attempt to bring in evidence of what the testator intended, under guise of the surrounding circumstances, Kay, L.J., in In re Fish, Ingham v. Rayner, 42 W. R. 520, [1894] 2 Ch. 83. Neither the children born at the date of the will nor the child born afterward are entitled to take: In re Bolton, Brown v. Bolton; Hill v. Crook, 22 W. R. 137, L. R. 6 H. L. 265; Dorin v. Dorin, 23 W. R. 570, L. R. 7 H. L. 568; Seale-Hayne v. Jodrell, [1891] A. C. 304, 40 W. R. Dig.

Badcock, K.C., replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 23.—JOYCE, J., after stating the facts, continued: Upon the facts properly admissible in evidence and proved I do not, nor as I believe does anyone else, entertain the smallest doubt that the testatrix died in the full belief that these three girls were included as children, being daughters of Richard Du Bochet, in the class among whom she had directed her residuary estate to be divided. It is now contended that they are not so included and that none of them take a share.

In Holt v. Sindrey a testator bequeathed an annuity to trustees "upon trust during the life of his daughter M., the wife of J. L., for her separate use, and after her death for all and every the child and children of his said daughter M. L., begotten or to be begotten. The testator was not aware when he made his will that his daughter, was not the wife of J. L. and that four children then borne by her to J. L. were illegitimate. The testator had always treated his said daughter and J. L. and their children as if the parents had been married and their children lawfully begotten. After the date of the testator's will, M. L. bore three other children to J. L., which also were illegitimate. A sum of £703 13s. 1d., Bank £3 per Cent. Annuity had been appropriated to answer the bequest to M. L. and her children. M. L. died without having had any other than the aforesaid children. It was held that the four children born before the date of the will were, although illegitimate, sufficiently described in it as legatees of, and therefore entitled to, the fund in court." I have read the head-note from the report at p. 126 of volume 28 of the Law Journal, for the head-note in 7 Eq. is imperfect and erroneous, as pointed out by Lord Selborne in Occleston v. Fullalove. As appears by the report in the Law Journal, Mr. Hinde Palmer admitted that the three children born after the date of the will could not claim any part of the fund. This decision is an undoubted authority. It has never been overruled, nor, so far as I am aware, questioned, and in numerous cases it has been implicitly if not expressly recognized. Crook v. Hill is reported in 19 W. R. 649, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 311, 24 L. T. R. 488, and sub nomine Hill v. Crook in 22 W. R. 137, L. R. 6 H. L. 265. I think that the head-note is hardly accurate in either report. Of the report in the House of Lords it is, I think, not only inaccurate but misleading. The facts were as follows: A testator gave a legacy to his son-in-law John Crook, and gave leaseholds to trustees upon trust during such part of the testator's term and interest therein as his "daughter Mary, the wife of the said John Crook," should happen to live, to pay the rents to her for her separate use "independently of her present or after-taken husband," and after her decease he directed that the premises should go, remain, and be upon such trusts for such one or more of the children of his said daughter Mary Crook in such manner as his daughter Mary Crook should by will appoint; and in default of appointment as in the will mentioned. The testator died on the 22nd of March, 1859. The marriage between John Crook and Mary Crook, which had taken place with the testator's sanction in 1854, was to the knowledge of the testator void, John Crook having been the husband of Mary Crook's deceased sister. They had two children born in the testator's lifetime who were recognized by the testator as his grandchildren. At the date of the will Mary Crook was enceinte of a third child, born after the testator's death, and named Robert Crook; and subsequently she had another—that is, a fourth child. Mary Crook died in 1868, having by will exercised her power of appointment in favour of such of her four children as being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry.

The two eldest children of Mary Crook filed a bill against the trustees and executors, making their brother Robert Crook also a defendant, praying to have it declared that the plaintiffs and, if the court should be of such opinion, the defendant Robert Crook, were intended by the testator's will to take as children of his daughter Mary Crook. It was not suggested that the fourth child had any interest. The executors demurred, and the demurrer was allowed by Stuart, V.C. The plaintiffs appealed. The Lord Justices reversed his honour's decision. The case then went to the House of Lords, when the decision of the Lord Justices was affirmed. The gift there in question was not, as I understand the case, that set out between inverted commas in the head-note in L. R. 6 H. L., but the one which preceded it and is not set out, and the decision was not that there was a sufficient designation of the children of Mary as the intended object of the testator's bounty, but that there was a sufficient designation of the two children of Mary who were born before the date of the will of the original testator. Lord Cairns in concluding his judgment says distinctly: "I do not go over what has been said as to the impossibility of providing for future illegitimate children, that is out of the question here. The question here is whether those children who have filed this bill, and who were born before this will was made, can take under this bequest, and in my opinion they can. And Mellish, L.J., at the end of his judgment in the Court of Appeal (L. R. 6 Ch. App. 311, at p. 320), said: "I consider that we are bound to say, according to the principle laid down in the authorities, that the two children who were born before the date of the will are entitled to take under the gift. We are not called upon to decide whether the third child, who was in vêntre sa mère at the date of the will, and of the testator's death, is entitled to participate." It does not appear how in fact the property was ultimately divided—it would be interesting to know. In the case I have just mentioned James, L.J., said (L. R. 6 Ch. App. 311, at pp. 315, 316): "The question then resolves itself into this: whether, having regard to the language of this will, guarding ourselves scrupulously against indulging in conjecture, or in an attempt to do what we think the testator would have done if he had been better informed or better advised, but taking into consideration the whole of the will and the whole of the surrounding circumstances at the time the will was made, which are legitimately to be brought in for the purpose of explaining his expressions, though not for the purpose of altering or adding to them, there is in this case so strong a probability of intention to include, or not to exclude, the children in question, as that a contrary intention cannot be supposed."

Applying that test to the present case I hold, upon the facts proved and appearing by admissible evidence (and in my opinion no rational person can doubt), that the testatrix when she made her will intended the two girls then in existence, whom she knew and regarded with affection, to be included in the class among whom her residuary estate was to be divided, subject to their attaining the age of twenty-one years or marrying. In other words, there is so strong a probability of it being the intention of the testatrix to use in her will the words "children being daughters of her nephew Richard Du Bochet" as including the two children Gertrude and Alice that a contrary intention cannot be supposed. I am of opinion, therefore, that at all events the children

Gertrude and Alice must be treated and share as daughters of Richard Du Bochet in the distribution of the residuary estate of the testatrix under this will, notwithstanding that they take as members of a class with the legitimate children of other persons. But with respect to the youngest child Jessie, who, though born in the lifetime of the testatrix, and fully recognized by her, was not in existence at the date of the will, there is a serious difficulty, she not having been a reputed child of Richard Du Bochet at the date of the will. Crook v. Hill, as I have shown, is no authority for admitting her to share. In Occlestone v. Fullalove a testator made a bequest to his reputed children C. and E., and all other children whom he might have or be reputed to have by M. L. (his deceased wife's sister), then born or thereafter to be born; a third child was born in the testator's lifetime, but after the date of the will. It was held (reversing Wickens, V.C.) by James and Mellish, L.JJ., dissentiente Lord Selborne, that this third child was entitled to share. In In re Goodwin's Trusts, 22 W. R. 619, L. R. 17 Eq. 345, Sir George Jessel says: "The principle of the decision in Occlestone v. Fullalove, as I understand it, is this, that a gift by a testator or testatrix to one of his or her children by a particular person is perfectly good if the child has acquired the reputation of being such child as described in the will before the death of the testator or testatrix."

In In re Bolton, Brown v. Bolton, the head-note says: "G. B. went through the ceremony of marriage with J. A. C., whose husband had deserted her and gone abroad many years before and was believed to be dead, but G. B. was aware that there was no certain information as to his death. Shortly afterwards G. B. made his will, by which he gave 'to my dear wife J. A. B., formerly J, A. C.,'" an interest in certain chattels during the widowhood, and also gave to her the income of his residuary personalty during her widowhood, and after her decease or remarriage he gave the "corpus" to "all and every my child and children," as therein mentioned, and in default of children to his nephews and nieces. G. B. and J. A. C. cohabited for more than a year and a-half after the date of the will, when G. B. died, leaving J. A. C. enceinte of her only child. She enjoyed the income of the residue till her death, upon which event the nephews and nieces claimed the property under the gift over, and proved that J. A. C.'s child was illegitimate, her former husband having been alive at the time of her marriage to the testator. It was held by the Court of Appeal, affirming the decision of Kay, J., that the child could not take. Cotton, L.J., says (31 Ch. D. 542, at p. 552): "Occleston v. Fullalove was much relied on, but in my opinion that case does not cover this, and leaves untouched the rule that there cannot be a valid gift to a future illegitimate child described only by reference to paternity. In that case the gift was to two reputed children whom the testator named, and all other the children which he might have or be reputed to have by Margaret Lewis then born or thereafter to be born. The court thought that a description sufficient to include an illegitmate child of which Margaret Lewis was enceinte when the will was made. It was argued on behalf of the appellant that the present is the same case, for that, under the circumstances the testator must by 'children' have meant reputed children. But you cannot treat 'child' as denoting a man's reputed child, unless a particular child is referred to. To ascertain whether this child is the testator's child we should have to inquire into circumstances which the law does not permit to be inquired into. The argument really comes to this, that the testator's description of the woman as his wife carries with it the same consequences as to children born during the cohabitation as if there had been a valid marriage. Crook v. Hill is quite different from the present case, and I am unable to come to a conclusion in favour of the appellant." He then proceeds to record his dissent from the view expressed by Sir George Jessel in In re Goodwin's Trusts. Moreover, in Occleston v. Fullalove, James, L.J., points out the great practical difference between a gift to the future illegitimate children of a male and a gift to the future illegitimate children of a female, as In re Hastie's Trusts, 35 W. R. 692, 35 Ch. D. 728.

I should have been glad to have held the gift in the present case to have been equivalent to a gift to all the children, being daughters, which my nephew Richard Du Bochet may be reputed to have by his reputed wife. But after much consideration and with great regret I do not in the face of the decision of Kay, J., and the three Lords Justices affirming Kay, J., in In re Bolton, see my way to admitting the daughter Jessie born and begotten after the date of the will to any share under the residuary gift.

Solicitors, Tucker, Lake, & Lyon, for Gem, Docker, & Tartelon, Birmingham; Eley & Winch.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance, J.) — May 1.

NELSON & CO. v. THE BOARD OF TRADE. (a.)

Assurance—Life—Life assurance company—Grant of annuities in connection with tea dealing business—Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 61), ss. 2, 3.

N. & Co., tea dealers, in order to promote the sale of their tea, offered to every woman who should have become a widow since Christmas, 1897, and who since that date should have purchased not less than a specified quantity of tea per week for the last five consecutive weeks previously to her becoming a widow, a pension payable as long as she remained a widow, and they offered a similar pension to every woman who became a widow previously to Christmas, 1897, or previously to her commencing to purchase N. & Co.'s tea, provided she should have purchased a specified quantity of tea per week for ten years. Cards were issued to women who desired to qualify for a pension at a charge of 1*d. The holder of a card entered the purchases of tea made by her, and the entries were checked from time to time by N. & Co.'s manager. Records of the purchases were also kept in N & Co.'s books. By a trust deed N. & Co. undertook to pay to trustees a proportion of their profits for the purpose of forming a fund for the payment of this pension.*

Held, upon these facts, that justices were justified in finding that N. & Co. carried on the business of "granting annuities upon human life," and were a life assurance company within the meaning of the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870.

Case stated by justices for the borough of Louth.

At a petty sessions held for the borough of Louth in Lincolnshire on the 29th of November, 1900, an information was preferred by Thomas Mountain on behalf of the Board of Trade the respondents, against Nelson & Co., otherwise known as Rasmus Jensen, the appellants, for that they, being a company not registered under the Acts relating to friendly societies, and being a company who grant annuities upon human life and carry on the business of life assurance within the United Kingdom, and being established after the passing of the Life Assurance Act, 1870, did on the 19th of May, 1900, unlawfully make default in depositing the sum of £20,000 with the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, and that such default had since continued and still continued.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Upon the hearing of the information the following facts were proved or admitted:

The appellants were not registered under the Acts relating to friendly societies and had not on the 19th of May, 1900, or since, deposited the sum of £20,000 with the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery pursuant to section 3 of the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870. The appellants were established after the passing of the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870, for the purpose of carrying on business under the scheme described below, which they commenced to do in January, 1898, and had since done.

The appellants published in a leaflet issued in January, 1898, the following announcement:

"In commemoration of the sixty years' reign of her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, the greatest and most noble widow the world has ever known,

"NELSON & CO.,

"THE GREAT TEA MEN,

Will pay to every woman who shall have become a widow since Christmas, 1897, and who, since that date, shall have purchased not less than one half-pound of their tea per week for the last five consecutive weeks previously to her becoming a widow, ten shillings per week as long as she remains a widow, and to every woman who became a widow previously to Christmas, 1897, or previously to her commencing to purchase Nelson & Co.'s tea, ten shillings per week as long as she remains a widow, provided she shall have purchased half-a-pound of tea per week for ten years.

"Customers who require only a quarter-of-a-pound of tea weekly, and purchase the same under the above conditions, will receive five shillings per week instead of ten shillings.

"Customers—always provided that those not being widows before commencing to take Nelson & Co.'s tea shall have purchased the tea for the last five consecutive weeks previously to their becoming widows—will not lose the benefit should they occasionally omit their weekly purchase of tea, but as many weeks as they omit purchasing the tea since they began, so many weeks' money will they lose when they come into benefit.

"Nelson & Co. are determined that widows shall have an income of not less than ten shillings per week.

"Nelson's tea is a very fine tea, sold at two shillings per pound, but one spoonful will go as far as two of common tea.

"Estimated yearly balance of 1,000 branches, selling 500 pounds of tea weekly each branch:

	£	s.	d.
Tea sold, 260,000 chests, 2s. per pound	2,600,000	0	0

	£	s.	d.
Salaries	208,000	0	0
Rents	52,000	0	0
Costs of growing tea, carriage, &c.	1,083 333	6	8
Duty, 4d. per pound of tea... ...	433,333	6	8
10,000 widows at 10s. each, weekly	260,000	0	0
Reserve Fund, 1d. on every pound sold...	107,313	6	8
Balance of cash in hand and at bankers	456,020	0	0
	2,600,000	0	0

"Bankers: The Stamford, Spalding, and Boston Banking Co. (Limited), Louth. Solicitor, H. F. V. Falkner, Esq., Louth. Auditor, Mr. Geo. Vere, Louth (Fellow of the Society of Accountants and Auditors).

"This is to certify that I have had the books of Messrs. Nelson & Co. examined for the half-year ending the 1st of July, 1898, by the auditor, Mr. George Vere, and that the reserve fund, as shown in the balance-sheet, has been handed to me to hold in trust for the benefit of the widows, the half is intended to be invested in freehold property, and the other half in Government securities.

"January 20, 1898. H. F. V. FALKNER.

"London offices, 30 & 32, Ludgate-hill, E.C.

"Head offices, The Limes, James-street, Louth, Lincs.

"Branches and depôts for packing and distributing the tea everywhere."

Other leaflets were issued from time to time containing the same announcement with some variations, and the following condition was introduced: "The only condition is that at the commencement of the continuous taking of tea the husband must be certified to us by a duly qualified medical practitioner to be in good health, but a certificate of health will be dispensed with in the case of customers who have purchased the tea every week for twelve months next previous to the husband's death." The leaflets also contained lists of the widows receiving weekly pensions.

Cards were provided by the appellants at a charge of 1d. upon which purchasers entered the dates and amounts of their purchases. These were initialled from time to time by the manager of the branch and corresponding entries were made in the appellants, books. The following words were printed on the cards: "The entries on this card must correspond with the books of the branch, such books being considered the only evidence of the consecutive purchase of the tea."

A trust deed was executed by the appellants on the 17th of February, 1900, whereby after reciting that they had already paid to the trustees of the settlement a sum of £20,000 they covenated to pay until the determination of the trust a sum equal to 1¾d. for every pound of tea sold by them to be held by the trustees in trust to pay to the settlors weekly the amounts which should be required for the payment of the pensions.

The women mentioned in the leaflets bought the appellants' tea pursuant to the scheme set forth in the leaflets, having respectively produced to the appellants certificates of the health of their respective husbands. The women respectively received a purchaser's card and were widows who had proved to the appellants the death of their respective husbands. The appellants paid the above widows 5s. or 10s. per week, whichever amount they were respectively entitled to under the appellants' scheme, and such of the widows as were living at the date of the information were in receipt of the weekly sum.

The justices were of opinion on consideration of the above facts that the appellants were on the 19th of May, 1900, and subsequently, carrying on the business of life assurance within the United Kingdom within the meaning of the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870, and convicted the appellants and ordered them to pay a fine of £5 and £5 costs.

The term "company" is thus defined by section 2 of the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870: "Any person or persons, corporate or incorporate, not being registered under the Acts relating to friendly societies, who issue or are liable under policies of assurance upon human life within the United Kingdom, or who grant annuities upon human life within the United Kingdom."

Haldane, K.C. (G. Wood Hill with him), for the appellants.—A perusal of the Act shows that the life assurance companies which are intended to be within its purview are life assurance companies which carry on the ordinary business of life assurance, and that it does not extend to everybody who happens to, or even does systemically, grant pensions. Sections 4, 5, 7, 8, 12, and 14 bear out this view. Nelson & Co. were not liable under any policy, for the card issued to purchasers was not a policy within 14 Geo. 3, c. 48, because it did not set out the husband's name as would be required to be done under the provisions of that statute; nor was the insurance granted an insurance in the ordinary sense; for though, no doubt, Nelson & Co. would be liable to any person who complied with the conditions, yet they may refuse to sell the tea. Again, no inquiry is made into the age of the husband nor, in certain cases, into the state of his health, and there are no actuarial calculations of any kind as in ordinary insurance. Nelson & Co. are merely tea dealers who give a bonus, not as some do, by way of a Christmas present, but by way of an annuity depending upon certain contingencies.

Sir R. Finlay, A.G., and H. Sutton, for the Board of Trade, were not called on.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—In this case the magistrates came to the conclusion on the facts that the appellants were on the 19th of May, 1900, carrying on the business of life assurance in the United Kingdom within the meaning of the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870. The question for the court is whether, on the facts stated in the case and disclosed by the documents, Messrs. Nelson & Co. are a company granting annuities upon human life. This is really a question of fact, but as the case has been submitted to us I think we ought to express our opinion upon the facts before us inasmuch as the case arises upon documents and it is obviously a case of importance.

The facts, as I understand them, are these: Messrs. Nelson & Co., perfectly bonâ fide and with the intention of promoting their own business, devised a very attractive scheme whereby widows would in certain events receive annuities on the deaths of their husbands of 10s. or 5s. a week. Of course it is not suggested that the annuities are given out of charity, but they come out of the profits on the sales of tea. A proportion of the price of the tea is the money which Messrs. Nelson & Co. use for the purpose of insuring the annuities to these widows. A purchaser of tea takes a card on which is entered her name. A weekly record is kept of the number of pounds of tea bought by the person holding a card. That would indicate so much money paid to Messrs. Nelson & Co. by that particular woman upon the terms of the bargain or contract, whichever it is right to call it, which is held out by Messrs. Nelson & Co. to her. There is entered in the books of the branch a record which is to be primâ facie evidence, if not the only evidence, of the fact of the purchase. Therefore these gentlemen are perfectly bonâ fide and properly keeping a record with regard to customers who may become entitled to this annuity.

Some will and some will not become entitled. Some will drop off and will not continue to pay, and others will not become widows under circumstances that will enable them to obtain the annuity. I only use this for the purpose of seeing whether the magistrates were right in the conclusion to which they came, as to the nature of the business that was being carried on. In addition to that, Nelson & Co. published an attractive advertisement in which they say that they are establishing a business which, if by the assistance of many customers it reaches the magnitude therein indicated, will show profits sufficient, after deducting salaries, rents, taxes, costs, and duty, to pay 10,000 widows 10s. a-week, with an enormous balance of cash in hand which would be available as security for the insurance. Further, they purport to set aside a penny for every pound of tea sold, and there is a trust deed which says that £20,000 is held in respect of the business.

In the face of those facts it is, in my opinion, quite impossible to come to any other conclusion than that in connection with their tea business Messrs. Nelson & Co. are carrying on a scheme of insurance by granting annuities to women who buy their tea, which become effective on the death of their husbands.

I do not think that the argument based upon what is a policy within the Act of Geo. 3 has any real relation to the subject. But, even if it had, the business carried on by Messrs. Nelson & Co. is within the latter words of the definition "granting annuities upon human life," because the annuities are to be for the life of the widow commencing upon the death of her husband, and I think that the section points to the payment of annuities dependent upon the duration of human life.

I will only add, further, that the £20,000 deposit required by section 2 has no relation to the amount or kind of business done. It was, no doubt, considered to be a sort of indication that the person or company who carried on this kind of business was in a substantial position. I think that the magistrates came to a perfectly right conclusion, and had the facts been submitted to me as a judge of first instance I should have come to the same conclusion.

LAWRANCE, J., concurred.

Solicitors for the appellant, Collyer-Bristow, Hill, Curtis, & Dods.

Solicitor for the respondents, Treasury Solicitor.

Court of Appeal.

From K. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, M.R., and Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ.) July 1.

CARRITT v. BRADLEY. (a.)

Mortgage—Redemption—Collateral advantage to mortgagee—Advantage continuing after redemption—Fetter on redemption.

The holder of shares in a tea company mortgaged them to secure repayment of an advance, and at the same time agreed to use his best endeavours to secure that the mortgagee should always thereafter have the sale of all the company's teas as broker, and, in the event of the company's teas being sold otherwise than through the mortgagee, to pay to the mortgagee the amount of the commission which he would have earned if the teas had been sold through him.

Held, that the collateral advantage secured to the mortgagee by this agreement was one which might be bargained for; for, although the effect of it was to continue after redemption, it did not fetter the mortgagor's right to redeem.

Application for judgment or a new trial in an action tried before Bigham, J., and a jury.

In May, 1892, in consideration of an advance of £2,250 made by the plaintiff by way of loan to the defendant William McKenzie Bradley, the said defendant mortgaged to the plaintiff 1,541 shares in the Sephinjuri Bheel Tea Co. (Limited) to secure repayment of the loan, and at the same time agreed to use his best endeavours to secure that the plaintiff should always thereafter have the sale of all the company's teas as broker, and he personally engaged and agreed, in the event of the company's teas being sold otherwise than through the plaintiff, to pay to the plaintiff the amount of the commission which the plaintiff would have earned if the teas had been sold through him.

The defendant James Bradley, who was the brother of the first-named defendant, entered into a similar agreement with the plaintiff.

In 1899 the plaintiff called in the loan, and the defendant W. M. Bradley repaid it.

The company having ceased to employ the plaintiff as their broker, and having appointed a new broker, the plaintiff brought this action against the defendants to recover damages for breach of their agreements.

The defence was that the agreements were limited to the duration of the mortgage security, and that, if not, they were a clogging of the equity of redemption, and were, therefore, void.

At the trial the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for £750 damages, and Bigham, J., gave judgment accordingly.

The defendants applied for judgment by way of appeal, or, in the alternative, for a new trial.

Dickens, K.C., and Montague Lush, for the defendants.

J. A. Hamilton, K.C., and Dawson Miller, for the plaintiff.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 1.—STIRLING, L.J., read the judgment of the court: This is an action the object of which (so far as it is material to state it) is the recovery of damages from the defendants, W. M. Bradley and James Bradley, for breach of two agreements, both dated the 16th of May, 1892.

The defendant W. M. Bradley was at that date the holder of a large number of shares in a company named the Sephinjuri Bheel Tea Co., and by virtue thereof had a controlling interest in the company. The defendant James Bradley, is his brother. The plaintiff carries on business as a tea broker, and at the same date acted as broker for the sale of the company's teas.

In May, 1892, the defendant W. M. Bradley was desirous of obtaining a loan on the security of his shares in the company, and through his brother, the defendant J. Bradley, applied to the plaintiff to make him an advance. After some negotiations the plaintiff advanced to the defendant £2,250, upon the defendants' respectively executing the following documents:

"Thomas Carritt, Esq., 130, Fenchurch-street, E.C.

"Dear Sir,—In consideration of £2,250 this day advanced by you to me—1 I undertake to repay to you the said sum of £2,250 on or before the 30th of June, 1893, together with interest thereon until repayment at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, payable quarterly on the 30th of June, the 30th of September, the 31st of December, and the 31st of March, the first payment to be made on the 30th of June next. 2. As security for the repayment of the said loan and interest, I herewith hand you (1) my promissory note payable on demand to your nominee or order for said sum of £2,250, with interest at the rate aforesaid, (2) transfer to your nominee of 1,541 fully-paid shares in the Sephinjuri Bheel Tea Co. (Limited), and (3) certificate of said 1,541 shares in my name. 3. In case of default in payment of the principal sum on the date aforesaid or of any interest thereon on any due date, and if any such default shall continue for seven days after such date as aforesaid, you or your nominee shall be entitled at any time thereafter, without giving any notice or taking any preliminary step, either to take over the said shares in satisfaction of the said sum and interest absolutely, or to sell the said shares at such price and in such manner in every respect as you shall see fit, and in the event of there being a deficiency after such sale of the shares I agree to make good the same (without prejudice nevertheless to the obligations on my part herein contained). You or your nominees shall further be entitled in case of any such default as aforesaid to enforce payment of the said promissory note as and when you see fit. 4 I further agree as a shareholder in the Sephinjuri Bheel Tea Co. (Limited) and in every other capacity to use my best endeavours to secure that you or any firm of brokers of which you for the time being shall be a partner (as you shall elect) shall always hereafter have the sale of all the company's teas as broker. And in the event of any of the company's teas being sold otherwise than through you or your firm, I personally engage and agree to pay to you or your firm the amount of the commission which you or your firm would have earned if the teas had been sold through you or your firm. This engagement on my part is in addition and without prejudice to any previous engagements to you and in particular to the contract dated the 14th of August, 1889, by which I agreed on behalf of the proprietors to give you the sale of all the company's teas."

The rest of the agreement is not material. This document was signed by "Wm. McKenzie Bradley," and dated the 16th of May, 1892. The second document was as follows:

"Thomas Carritt, Esq.

"Dear Sir,—In consideration of your having at my request this day lent to my brother William McKenzie Bradley the sum of £2,250 at interest, I agree to use my best endeavours as a shareholder in the Sephinjuri Bheel Tea Co. (Limited) and in every other capacity that you or any firm of brokers of which you for the time being shall be a partner (as you shall elect) shall always hereafter have the sale of all the company's teas as broker, and in case of any of the company's teas being sold otherwise than through you or your firm I personally engage and agree to pay you the amount of the commission which you or your firm would have earned if the teas had been sold through you or your firm.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

"This agreement is in addition and without prejudice to the letter dated the 14th of August, 1889, signed by Mr. W. McKenzie Bradley as attorney for myself and my co-proprietors, in which I agree to give you the sale of the company's teas, which letter I adopt and confirm.

"I also agree to use my best endeavours to secure to you or any firm of brokers of which you shall be a partner for the time being (as you shall elect) the sale at all times hereafter of the entire tea crops of the Jetinga Valley Tea Co. (Limited) or any continuation or amalgamation thereof.—I am, yours truly,

"May 16, 1892." "JAMES BRADLEY.

In 1899 the plaintiff called in the loan; the defendant repaid it, and had the shares in the company transferred into his own name. Immediately afterwards he again transferred them by way of security for a fresh loan. The new transferee took advantage of his position to oust the plaintiff from his position as broker of the company, and thereupon the present action was brought.

The defendants raised three defences: (1) That on the true construction of the documents of the 16th of May, 1892, the operation of the stipulations as to the plaintiff occupying the position of broker was confined to the existence of the security; (2) that, if not, these documents ought to be rectified on the ground of mutual mistake; and (3) that the stipulations just referred to were bad in law as between mortgagor and mortgagee.

At the trial Bigham, J., held that on the construction of the documents the stipulations were not limited to the period during which the security might remain in force. The question of mutual mistake was left to the jury, who gave a verdict for the plaintiff for £750. Bigham, J., held that the stipulations were not bad in law, and gave judgment for the plaintiff accordingly.

From his judgment the defendants appeal, asking that judgment may be entered for them or a new trial ordered. Upon the argument the application for a new trial was practically abandoned, and the questions to be decided are those as to the construction of the documents and the validity of the stipulations.

Upon the former question we agree with Bigham, J. According to the natural meaning of the documents the words "always hereafter" do not mean during the existence of the security, and we are unable to see that there is anything in the context or in the surrounding circumstances which renders it proper for the court so to limit their operation.

The remaining question requires careful consideration. It was laid down in Jennings v. Ward, 2 Vern. 520, decided in 1705, that "a man shall not have interest for his money and a collateral advantage besides for the loan of it, or clog the redemption with any by-agreement." These words have in some modern cases been treated as an accurate statement of the law: see, for example, James v. Kerr, 37 W. R. 279, 40 Ch. D. 449. It has, however, been held by Romer, J., and by the Court of Appeal in Biggs v. Hoddinott, 47 W. R. 84, [1898] 2 Ch. 307, that the proposition stated in Jennings v. Ward is too wide, and that a collateral advantage may be bargained for unless either (1) the mortgagor's right to redeem on payment of principal, interest, and costs is fettered; or (2) the bargain is unconscionable or oppressive. We consider that we are bound by what is so laid down.

It is then to be considered, in the first place, whether the stipulations referred to do fetter the plaintiff's right to redeem. It was contended that any obligation on the part of the mortgagor which does not cease to have effect after redemption must be such a fetter. It was said (and with truth) that in the recent cases of Biggs v. Hoddinott and Santley v. Wilde, 48 W. R. 90, [1899] 2 Ch. 474, the stipulations ceased on redemption; but in neither of those cases, nor in any other case, has it been laid down that it is essential for their validity that they shall do so; nor, as it seems to us, could it be so held without departing from the principle on which (as we understand it) the decision in Biggs v. Hoddinott was based. Lord Lindley, then Master of the Rolls, there remarked that it would be unfortunate for business men if the following proposition were laid down—viz., "That while two people are engaged in a mortgage transaction they cannot enter into any other transaction with each other which can possibly benefit the mortgagee, and that any such transaction must be before or after the mortgage, and be independent of it, so that it cannot be said that the mortgagee got any additional benefit from the mortgage transaction." He subsequently remarked: "Of course we must follow settled authorities, whether we like them or not; but do they support this proposition?" We take this to mean that while existing rules are to be obeyed they are not to be extended.

The cases in which redemption has been hitherto held to be fettered divide themselves into two classes —(1) those in which the mortgagee has stipulated that on redemption he shall receive something beyond principal, interest, and costs, and (2) those in which it is stipulated that the mortgaged property shall upon redemption come back to the mortgagor in a worse condition than it was when mortgaged. Of the former class Broad v. Selfe, 11 W. R. 1036, may be taken as a modern example; and it is enough to remark that this case has been somewhat narrowed in recent times by such decisions as those in Potter v. Edwards, 5 W. R. 407, 26 L. J. Ch. 468, and Mainland v. Upjohn, 37 W. R. 411, 41 Ch. D. 126. As regards the second class the recent case of Rice v. Noakes, 48 W. R. 629, [1900] 2 Ch. 445, affords a striking illustration of the rule. There the subject-matter of the mortgage was a leasehold public-house, and the mortgagor covenanted so as to charge the premises, into whosesoever possession the same might come, and to the further intent that the obligation of the covenant might run with the land, that the mortgagor would not use or sell or permit to be sold on the premises during the continuance of the term of the lease any malt liquors except those purchased from the mortgagee; and, further, that if and whenever there should be a breach of the foregoing covenant the mortgagor would pay £1,000 as liquidated damages for each such breach. It was held that these covenants in effect converted the public-house from a free into a tied house and were within the doctrine of the court. Rigby, L.J., says: "The property which comes back to the mortgagor must not be worse than it was when it was mortgaged, and the mortgagee must not either expressly or by implication reserve to himself any hold upon the property after the time for redemption has arrived and the right of redemption has been put in force." The present case certainly does not fall within the first class, whatever its extent may be; the mortgagor was entitled to redeem and did redeem without paying anything beyond principal, interest, and costs. Further, on redemption the property came back to the mortgagor just as it was when it was mortgaged; and the mortgagee did not expressly reserve to himself any hold upon the property after redemption. Neither did he do so in our opinion "by implication," an expression which we consider to have been used by Rigby, L.J., with reference to a class of cases in which the obligation takes the form of a penal sum or liquidated damages by way of penalty on the doing of a particular thing. In such cases courts of equity, when satisfied that the object was to prevent the doing of the particular thing, have granted relief by way of injunction: see, for example, National Provincial Bank of England v. Marshall, 37 W. R. 183, 40 Ch. D. 112. It is said, however, that the shares after redemption are fettered inasmuch as the stipulations into which the mortgagor has entered will prevent him from dealing so freely with his property as he otherwise would; that he will, upon any proposed dealing with them, as, for example, by way of sale or mortgage, have to take into consideration that the result may be to deprive him of his controlling interest in the company and disable him from securing the position of broker to the plaintiff and thus expose himself to a serious liability. It is quite possible that an indirect effect of this nature may flow from these stipulations; but the same result would have followed if the stipulations had been entered into on the occasion of an advance being made by the plaintiff to the defendant W. M. Bradley on his personal security; and in that case the stipulation would, as it seems to us, have been perfectly valid; indeed, the contrary was hardly contended. There is no decision that such indirect effect of the stipulations brings them within the doctrine of equity under consideration; and so to hold would reduce the operation of the decision in Biggs v. Hoddinott within very narrow limits. For these reasons we think that the equity of redemption ought not in the present case to be held to be clogged.

It is, lastly, to be considered whether the transaction was oppressive or unconscionable. Now, the persons engaged in it were business men in the City of London, dealing at arms' length. There is no evidence of anything in the shape of undue influence or pressure. We cannot say that the stipulations were of themselves unreasonable; they seem to us eminently of a kind as to which business men in such a position may well be left to decide for themselves. In our judgment the transaction cannot be impeached on this ground. The result is that the appeal fails and ought to be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, William A. Crump & Son.

Solicitors for the defendants, Merriman, White, & Thomson

From K. B. Div. (Collins and Stirling, L.JJ.) } April 23, 25; May 13.

EADY v. ELSDON. (a.)

Practice—Costs—Taxation—Official solicitor—Guardian ad litem—Party and party or solicitor and client taxation—Costs of issue that failed—R. S. C., ord. 65, r. 13.

In taxing the costs of a guardian ad litem, the established practice is to tax the costs as between party and party and not as between solicitor and client, in the absence of a direction to the contrary in the order directing the taxation.

The costs of a guardian ad litem ought to be taxed on the footing that he is a successful party. The costs, therefore, even of an issue on which he has failed ought not to be disallowed him.

This was an appeal from a decision of Grantham, J., directing the master to review his taxation of costs in an action against an infant for whom a guardian ad litem had been appointed. The question arose out of an action by a schoolmaster against an infant who had set fire to the school and burnt it down; the plaintiff claimed damages in respect of that tort. The official solicitor was appointed guardian ad litem, the action was tried, and after two questions had been put by the judge to the jury damages were awarded to the plaintiff for £450. The two questions put to the jury were these: "(1) Was the boy deranged, and out of his mind when he set fire to the plaintiff's house? (2) Was it part of the bargain on which the plaintiff took the boy that he should be responsible for such an act as this was and undertake the risk of it?"

Both questions were answered in the negative, and the plaintiff was awarded £450 damages.

And then came the question of the costs of the guardian ad litem, and an order in respect of that was made in these terms: "It is ordered that the plaintiff do pay the costs of the official solicitor, the guardian ad litem of the defendant, and that the question of such costs be referred to one of the masters of the Supreme Court of Judicature to tax same and certify the amount thereof."

The rule with respect to the costs of a guardian ad litem is ord. 65, r. 13, which is in these terms: "Where the court or a judge appoints one of the solicitors of the court to be guardian ad litem of an infant or person of unsound mind, the court or judge may direct that the costs to be incurred in the performance of the duties of such office shall be borne and paid either by the parties or some one or more of the parties to the cause or matter in which such appointment is made, or out of any fund in court in which such infant or person of unsound mind may be interested, and may give directions for the repayment or allowance of such costs as the justice and circumstances of the case may require."

When the matter came before the master, the official solicitor claimed to be entitled to costs as between solicitor and client. Master Pollock taxed them on what he called the party and party scale and found as to a particular issue—namely, the issue of the boy's lunacy, against the guardian ad litem, who was only given costs on the footing that he was really a party and a defeated party.

There was an appeal to the judge on objections taken—first, that the guardian ad litem, under that order and under the rule, was entitled to costs as between solicitor and client; secondly, that the master was wrong in giving him costs on the issue on which he had failed only on the footing of a defeated party.

Grantham, J., made an order sending it back to the master "with a view to allowing costs as between solicitor and client" to the guardian ad litem.

From this order the plaintiff appealed.

Hon. M. M. Macnaghten, for the plaintiff.

Montague Lush, for the official solicitor.

Macnaghten replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 13.—COLLINS, L.J., stated the facts and continued: Mr. Macnaghten contended before us that where the learned judge has made an order without giving any special indication of the scale to be applied in assessing the costs payable to the guardian ad litem, the rule of practice is that the standard called party and party costs shall be applied, and not the method of solicitor and clients costs. Dealing with that issue I am of opinion that Mr. Macnaghten is right. We took time to consider this matter in order that we might inquire into the practice of the masters, because in a question of this kind it is exceedingly important that a well-ascertained practice if it exists should be followed. There is nothing more dangerous than interfering with matters of practice. We have had the opportunity of consulting two most experienced masters, one on the Chancery and one on the common law side, and they tell us that the uniform practice is, in the absence of special directions giving solicitor and client costs, to tax the costs of a guardian ad litem on the footing of party and party costs; and though, strictly speaking, that principle cannot be logically applied inasmuch as for this purpose the guardian ad litem is not a party, in practice what they mean by party and party costs in this relation is that the costs payable by the plaintiff to the guardian ad litem are such costs as the guardian ad litem, assuming he were a successful party in a litigation with the plaintiff, would be entitled to on taxation against the plaintiff. That decides the appeal on the first point.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

But then comes the second point as to the costs of the issue on which the guardian ad litem has failed. The master has treated him as a real party who has failed, and he has assessed the costs on that footing. That would probably be right on a true party and party taxation but it is wrong on the hypothesis by which the costs of the guardian ad litem are ascertained. He has to be treated as a successful party. That is the standard as far as we can understand it, and it is the standard applied both in Chancery and common law. Now, that being so, the appeal succeeds as to part and fails as to part, but I agree that the appeal should be allowed without costs, and I think the same result ought to follow in respect of the hearing below, so that the appeal will be allowed without costs.

STIRLING, L.J.—In this case two points are raised—first, that the costs ought to be allowed as between solicitor and client; and second, that the costs of the issue on which the defendant failed, which have been disallowed by the taxing-master, ought to be allowed.

Now, as regards the first question, as to whether the costs are to be taxed as between solicitor and client. I think, having regard to the uniform practice which has existed in the Chancery Division apparently ever since the year 1842, when the first rule of the kind was introduced, adopted under the consolidated order of the old Court of Chancery and adopted by the rules made in pursuance of the Judicature Act, I think that costs can only be allowed as between party and party in the absence of a direction to the contrary. This is in accordance with the universal rule as to the construction of orders as to taxation, and if the official solicitor considers there are circumstances which entitle him to solicitor and client costs they ought to be called by him to the attention of the judge when he is invited to deal with the costs under the rule, and an order made in terms authorizing the taxing-master to deal with them as between solicitor and client.

As regards the other point, the disallowance of the costs of the issue on which he failed, the master assigns two reasons. First, that the issue was found against the defendant, and even if it had been found in his favour it would have been immaterial. Both issues were found against the defendant, and if that rule were applied strictly the guardian ad litem would recover no costs at all under this order. Therefore I cannot agree with the master as to that.

And then, as regards the other point, that even if it had been found in his favour it would not be material. It is to be borne in mind that the learned judge gave the issue to the jury. That implies, to my mind, clearly an opinion on the part of the learned judge that if the issue had been found the other way—that is to say, found in favour of the defendant, there would have been something to discuss, and therefore he must have been of opinion that the issue was one which if found the other way was not entirely irrelevant. Now, having that before him and in his mind, the learned judge directs the costs of the official solicitor to be paid by the plaintiff. I cannot see that the master has any right to deprive him of the costs of either issue on which he fails. And I say that, fully remembering the power which is conferred on the taxing-master by ord. 65, r. 27, sub-rule 20. I do not think that the disallowance of these costs is brought within that rule. I think, therefore, that on this point the appeal fails.

Solicitors, A. W. Mills; The Official Solicitor.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } April 24.

TAYLOR v. PONCIA. (a.)

Practice—Payment out—Estate duty—Fund in court—Tenant for life—Finance Act, 1900 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 7), s. 11.

When payment out of court is authorized of funds in which one of the petitioners had a life interest now released, the practice of the court is to retain a sufficient sum of money to satisfy the amount of estate duty payable in the event of the death of the tenant for life within twelve months of the date of the release.

A testator, Robert Fletcher, died on the 6th of September, 1867, having by his will, dated the 12th of May, 1864, given and bequeathed to John Poncia, William Taylor, and Eliza Fletcher (inter alia) two sums of money upon trust for Maria Louisa Maher.

The testator's estate was distributed, and the amount accruing to M. L. Maher and her children, in pursuance of orders made in the action, was carried over to the credit of an account entitled "The account of Maria Louisa Maher, widow, and her children."

They now petitioned the court that a portion of the said sums should be paid out of court.

Under the testator's will Maria Louisa Maher only received a life interest in the share of the property bequeathed to her, but she had a power of appointment to her children.

In 1896 she released all the trust funds and property held upon or subject to the trusts of the said will from the powers of appointment to the intent that the said powers might be absolutely extinguished except so far as they had already been exercised.

The question was now raised whether the fund could be properly paid out without providing for the duty payable in case the tenant for life died within twelve months of the date of the release.

Methold, for the petitioners.

Galbraith, for other parties.

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

COZENS-HARDY, J., made an order for the payment out of the sum according to the prayer of the petitioners, but subject to the payment of the duty. If the duty was not paid or an arrangement made with the Revenue authorities a sufficient sum was to be left in court to provide for the payment, and for the expenses of obtaining payment out of court.

Solicitors for all parties, Emmet & Co., for Banks, Kendall, & Taylor, Liverpool.

Chan. Div. }
Cozens-Hardy, J. } April 17.

In re WHITHAM.
WHITHAM v. DAVIES. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Requisitions of title—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 70—Sale by order of court—Conditions of sale—Abstract of title.

By order of the court certain landed property was put up for sale. In the contract for its sale a clause was inserted that "all facts or matters appearing to be proved or to be certified by a chief clerk or master attached to the chambers of the said judge, or to be stated or implied in any judgment or order in the action in which this sale is made, are to be deemed thereby sufficiently and conclusively evidenced." The master certified that the property to be sold formed part of the estate of one Joseph Whitham, deceased, from whom the title was derived.

Held, that, having regard to section 70 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and to the terms of the contract, a good title had been shown.

This was a summons on behalf of Mary Eleanor Robinson, of Holmfield, Aigburth, for a declaration that requisitions made by her on the title of the Holmfield estate, of which she was the purchaser, had not been sufficiently answered, and that a good title had not been shown to the said premises.

It appeared that Joseph Whitham, who died in February, 1866, by his will dated the 13th of December, 1865, gave and bequeathed his real and personal estate (which included the property now in question) to trustees upon trust for his children, one only of whom, Joe Whitham, was now alive.

Since the death of the testator Joseph Whitham numerous transactions touching the title to the property had taken place, culminating in an action brought by Joe Whitham against the trustees of the estate. By an order made in this action and dated the 1st of July, 1899, it was among other things ordered that the hereditaments and property comprised in the 1st schedule to the master's certificate, dated the 27th of June, 1899 (in which the above-mentioned property was included), be sold with the approbation of the judge freed from incumbrances of such of the incumbrancers as should consent to the sale and subject to the incumbrances of such of them as should not consent, and it was ordered that the proceeds of such sale be paid into court.

The property was subsequently sold by private treaty to the applicant M. E. Robinson and an agreement for sale dated the 15th of December, 1900, was entered into. An abstract of title was delivered to the purchaser under the said agreement, but it did not contain an abstract of certain deeds which the purchaser contended she was entitled to have abstracted.

The vendors declined to comply with the requisitions made by the purchaser and contended that they were under no obligation to do so.

W. H. Cochran, for the purchaser, said the order alone was not a sufficient title.

Peterson, for the vendors, referred to section 70 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), and to the case of In re Hall Dare's Contract, 30 W. R. 556, 21 Ch. D. 41.

COZENS-HARDY, J.—The purchase was made under a contract clause 6 of which is "All facts or matters appearing to be proved or to be certified by a chief clerk or master attached to the chambers of the said judge, or to be stated or implied in any judgment or order in the action in which this sale is made, are to be deemed thereby sufficiently and conclusively evidenced." It has been certified here by the master that the property in question formed part of the estate of Joseph Whitham. There is an order for the sale of this estate. It is admitted, and could not really be disputed, having regard to section 70 of the Act, that that order for sale binds all beneficiaries of every kind. It is not disputed that the purchaser will get the legal estate. She gets the legal estate from the mortgagees who concur in the sale.

But it is argued that the purchaser is entitled to an abstract showing the will of Joseph Whitham, and the appointments of the trustees prior to the year 1885, by which the property was conveyed to Joe Whitham, in order to show that they were duly appointed trustees of the will. However, the purchaser of the legal estate gets the whole of the beneficial interest. She gets every deed relating to the land in question. It is not as though the trustees of the will were selling out of court and had to make a title in their character of trustees of the will. It does not matter in the least whether these trustees were well or badly appointed, they had the legal estate. Even if they had not the legal estate the equitable interest would be bound by the deed, for the estate is not under the trustees, but under the will, affected by the order of the court. The purchaser has all she is entitled to; an abstract of title beginning in August, 1868, as stipulated by the contract, and including every deed affecting or dealing with this property. I think that I must therefore make no order on the summons except that the purchaser do pay the costs.

Solicitors for the purchaser, Field, Roscoe, & Co., for Batesons, Warr, & Wimshurst, Liverpool.

Solicitors for the vendors, Blair & W. B. Girling.

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Chan. Div. }
Farwell, J. } June 6, 12.

GREENHALGH v. BRINDLEY. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Easement—Light and air—Non-disclosure of deed of acknowledgment—Specific performance – Compensation — Costs — Prescription Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 3.

A contract for the sale of a house with windows looking over land of a third person does not imply any representation or warranty that such windows have any right to access of light over such land.

The vendor of new houses having windows which overlooked a recreation ground vested in a town corporation, had, before his open contract with the purchaser, entered into a deed of covenant with the corporation that the owner of the houses should pay one shilling yearly as an acknowledgment that no easement of light or air over the recreation ground attached to the houses. This deed was not disclosed to the purchaser before the contract.

(a.) Reported by WARWICK H. DRAPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that the vendor was entitled to enforce specific performance of the contract and without making compensation, but the court declined to order the purchaser to pay the vendor's costs of the action.

Witness action.

On the 4th of October, 1900, the plaintiff, C. Greenhalgh, who was the owner in fee of twelve houses in Florence-street, Stockport, entered into a written contract with the defendant, Miss Brindley, for the purchase by her of that property.

The contract was an open one, and in the course of the negotiations that led up to it the plaintiff wrote to the defendant on the 27th of August stating that the houses were four years old, and in September the defendant visited and saw the houses for herself.

The property abutted on Florence-street, which was 18ft. wide, and had windows looking over the street on to public recreation grounds on the other side.

These recreation grounds were vested in the mayor and corporation of Stockport under a conveyance from Lord Egerton of Tatton and his trustees, dated in 1873, and were subject to covenants which prevented the erection of buildings thereon and their user for any purpose other than recreation grounds without the consent of the grantors.

Nothing was said either in the negotiations or in the contract with reference to the access of light to the windows.

But the defendant ascertained after the contract that the plaintiff had entered into a deed of covenant with the corporation, dated the 10th of February, 1900, and she relied on this as a ground for declining to perform the contract.

This deed was as follows: "This indenture, made between the corporation of Stockport of the first part, William Walmsley, the mortgagee of the houses, of the second part, and the plaintiff (hereinafter called the owner, which term shall include the owner for the time being of the houses) of the third part, witnesses that the owner covenants with the corporation that the owner will pay to the corporation the yearly sum of 1s. on the 25th of March in each year, the first payment to be made on the 25th of March, 1897, and the owner and the mortgagee declare each of such payments to be a fresh acknowledgment that the owner has not been nor is he entitled as of right to the uninterrupted flow of light or air to any windows or lights in the southerly walls of the said houses over or from the recreation ground. And it is hereby declared that in case of the non-payment of the said sum of 1s. in any year or in any number of years the fact of any such non-payment or non-payments for any year or any number of years shall not be taken as an abandonment of the rights of the corporation to obstruct on their own land the admission of light or air to the said lights or windows, but these presents so far as is hereinbefore contained shall remain in full force notwithstanding such non-payment."

The defendant having declined to perform the contract without compensation, the plaintiff commenced this action for specific performance.

W. H. Upjohn, K.C. (T. T. Methold with him).—The plaintiff, in executing the deed of covenant, could not charge the land so as to bind a purchaser with the payment of the shilling. There is no period of years fixed for the payment or conveyance to uses, but only a kind of tenancy at will. As soon as the defendant renounces the agreement the twenty years will begin to run. It is not a question of defective title; we have contracted simply to sell the houses, and the defendant now claims a right to a future easement. It is not a burden or consent affecting the land, the only object of the covenant being to protect the ground of the corporation. An access for a few years gives no easement: Bonner v. Great Western Railway Co., 32 W. R. 190, 24 Ch. D. 1. It is not a case for compensation, even if it could be assessed.

C. E. E. Jenkins, K.C. (F. Russell with him), for the defendant.—I do not say there was a warranty of any easement or light, and I agree that I could not be sued for the shilling. But I say that there was a negative representation of freedom from incumbrances, and that I was entitled to think I should get free light in sixteen years and am entitled to the property unhampered by conditions which prevent my acquiring an easement. On the sale of freehold property a purchaser is entitled to the property with all ordinary easements and rights (Bewley v. Atkinson, 28 W. R. 638, 13 Ch. D. 283), and the potentiality of acquiring an easement is an ordinary right of property. I am entitled to compensation if I am to be forced to complete. [FARWELL, J.—But there is no tangible legal entity cut off for which you can have compensation. There is only the potentiality of acquiring an easement.] Then my remedy is rescission.

W. H. Upjohn, K.C., in reply.—It is not a part of the bargain for the sale of a house that a purchaser should get a potentiality.

Cur. adv. vult.

FARWELL, J. (after stating the facts as above), said: In this case both parties knew that the houses were new, and it is not, nor, in my opinion, could it have been, contended that a contract for the sale of a house with windows looking over land of a third person implies any representation or warranty that such windows have any right to access of light over such land. As to the contract with the corporation, no purchaser would be bound by the covenant to pay therein contained; but as against a purchaser with notice the deed would have the effect of a consent in writing within section 3 of the Prescription Act granted by the corporation and accepted by the purchaser, and continuing until determined by notice of repudiation. In this respect the arrangement bears some resemblance to that which formed the subject of the decision in Bewley v. Atkinson. Notwithstanding Mr. Jenkins's argument, I have no doubt that the arrangement created by the deed can be put an end to by a subsequent purchaser. The very nature of the transaction shows this, for the object is to prevent time from running under the Prescription Act against the corporation, and notice of repudiation gives them twenty years in which to assert their rights by blocking the windows. Further, on the construction of the deed, the person to make the payments is the owner for the time being; but the covenant cannot bind him to make any such payment, and the proviso that follows and that does bind him merely negatives the presumption of abandonment of right by omission to receive, and does not extend to the presumption or inference arising from a positive refusal to pay and acquiescence in such refusal. The effect of the deed, therefore, as against the purchaser is merely to postpone the commencement of the statutory period until he has given notice of repudiation; and this he can do as soon as he has completed his purchase. It is argued that the purchaser is prejudiced by this in two ways: (1) By losing four years of the statutory period; and (2) by being compelled to give notice of repudiation, with the consequent probability of exciting the corporation to block the lights at once. But, as I have already said, a contract for the sale of a house with windows looking over the land of a third person implies no representation or warranty that the windows are entitled to the access of light over such land. If such access has in fact been enjoyed for the statutory period, then the property has the easement of light; but an access for ten years creates nothing at all (Bonner v. Great Western Railway Co.), and what counsel called the potentiality of the acquisition of the easement within less than twenty years is not an interest in land or easement known to the law. It is a mere question of the doctrine of chances; and assuming that the owner of the adjoining land is alive to his own interest, the chances are far greater that he will block up lights in the second than in the first half of the period. There is no such period of twenty years to the lapse of a portion of which the purchaser is entitled, as the defendant's argument assumes. There is either an easement of light or there is not. If there is not, there is no intermediate stage which has any legal existence; and the vendor does not fail to possess the fee simple of a house free from incumbrances, because he has not got the easement of light over the adjoining property nor because the time necessary for acquiring that easement has not commenced to run. I find, therefore, no ground on which I can refuse to grant specific performance or on which I can give the defendant compensation. Compensation is given in respect of the difference between the expressed subject-matter of the contract and the property offered by the vendor as answering that description, and in this case there is none. But although I must make the usual decree for specific performance, I make no order as to costs, for this reason. A vendor knows and a purchaser does not know the incumbrances of the property before the contract. In this case the vendor has chosen to enter into a contract with the corporation which renders his position different from the normal position of the vendor of a house, and he appeals to this court for its equitable remedy of specific performance. I think he ought to have informed the defendant before the contract of his covenant with the corporation and left her to judge for herself whether it was or was not advantageous to the property; and in refusing to make the defendant pay costs I am only following the example of Romer, L.J., in In re Summerson, [1900] 1 Ch. 112*n.*, which I have already followed in Hepworth v. Pickles, 48 W. R. 184, [1900] 1 Ch. 108.

Solicitors, Rowcliffe, Rawle, & Co., for Russell, Coppock, & Helm, Stockport; Robinson & Bradley, for Joseph Grundy, Stockport.

Chan. Div.
Farwell, J.

Feb. 26.

In re BIRD.
In re EVANS.
DODD v. EVANS. (a.)

Settlement—Tenant for life and remainderman—Apportionment—Unauthorized investment—Breach of trust—Loss.

Where a trustee, in breach of trust and without the knowledge of the tenant for life or remainderman, sells out an authorized investment and invests the proceeds in an unauthorized investment, resulting in a loss of some capital and income, the tenant for life is entitled to such a proportion of the amount realized by the unauthorized investment plus the income he received therefrom during its continuance, as the dividends he would have received from the authorized investment in the same period bear to the capital value of the authorized investment plus those dividends, the tenant for life being liable to bring into account all income received by him from the unauthorized investment, although not liable to refund any portion of this income.

Further consideration of an administration action.

On the 16th of March, 1885, John C. Evans, the trustee of certain funds settled by the will of T. Bird, hereinafter called the testator, invested, without the knowledge of the tenant for life or remaindermen and in breach of trust, the sum of £10,000, being the proceeds of sale of £10,021 Consols, part of the settled funds, at 4 per cent. on an equitable mortgage of real property belonging to himself, and known as the Merton Grange and Paine's estates, Cambridgeshire, the interest on which was regularly paid by the trustee or his executor up to the 10th of March, 1894, when it fell into arrear. The trustee died on the 1st of June, 1893, and on the 19th of December, 1894, the plaintiffs, who were some of the remaindermen, having discovered the breach of trust, commenced this action against the trustee's executor and others to administer the estates of the testator and the trustee.

On the 18th of May, 1895, North, J., pronounced judgment, declaring that the investment of the £10,000 was a breach of trust, and that the trustee's executor was liable out of the assets of the trustee to pay that amount to the trustees of the testator's will when appointed with interest at 4 per cent. per annum from the date of the investment until payment, and that until payment that amount and interest should stand charged upon the Merton Grange and Paine's estates, and ordering (inter alia) administration of the real and personal estate of the trustee.

New trustees of the testator's will were subsequently appointed and added as defendants. A receiver of the rents of the mortgaged estates was appointed, and these estates were gradually sold during the years 1895 to 1897, the proceeds being paid into court and invested in New Consols, and various payments being made to the tenant for life out of the rents and dividends until her death on the 25th of February, 1900.

By the master's general certificate of the 25th of January, 1901, which incorporated the results of previous certificates, it was certified that the tenant for life had received from the trustees or his executor £3,400 on account of the income of the investment in seventeen half-yearly payments of £200, beginning the 6th of February, 1886, and ending the 16th of March, 1894; and that since that date she had received from the trustee's executor, or the receiver in the action, or under orders of the court, a further sum of £666, making a total of £4,066 paid to her on the account aforesaid up to her death.

It was also certified that the net proceeds of sale of the mortgaged estates were represented by a sum of £6,629 New Consols and £173 cash in court to the credit of the action, "proceeds of sale of John Carbery Evans' real estate known as Merton Grange and Paine's estates," and by a sum of £39 which had been raised by a sale of £35 New Consols for repairs of other estates, and was now to be repaid to this account.

The trustee's estate being of no appreciable value, one of the questions on the further consideration was how the fund in court ought to be divided as between the estate of the tenant for life and the remaindermen so as to apportion the loss fairly between them.

J. G. Butcher, K.C. (Metcalfe with him), for the plaintiffs.—The actual aggregate amount of income and capital produced by investment, after deducting accretions since the death of the tenant for life belonging to the remaindermen, must be divided as between tenant for life and remaindermen in the proportion borne by the total interest which the tenant for life would have received on £10,021 Consols from the date of the wrongful investment to her death, to the value of £10,021 Consols at that date, and the executor of the tenant for life must give credit for the whole amount of the £4,066 received on account of income: In re Foster, Lloyd v. Carr, 39 W. R. 31, 45 Ch. D. 629; In re Hobson, Walker v. Appach, 34 W. R. 70; In re Baker, W. N. (1897) 154.

(a.) Reported by WARWICK H. DRAPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

W. H. Upjohn, K.C. (Martelli with him), for the representative of the tenant for life.—The account must only be taken from the 10th of March, 1894, when the interest first fell into arrear, and the fund in court should be divided in the proportion borne by the arrears of interest at the tenant for life's death to the value of £10,021 Consols at that date: In re Moore, Moore v. Johnson, 33 W. R. 447; Lyon v. Mitchell, W. N. (1899), 27. The tenant for life was not responsible for the breach of trust, but we are willing to calculate the arrears on the present interest on Consols. The principle laid down in In re Foster, which is confined to the case of a mortgagee in possession, was not followed in Lyon v. Mitchell, but if it is to be applied here, the account should only be taken from the 10th of March, 1894. Bate v. Hooper, 3 W. R. 639, 5 De G. M. & G. 338, shows that the plaintiffs are not entitled to make the estate of the tenant for life recoup income paid in respect of an unauthorized investment of which she knew nothing.

FARWELL, J.—The question I have to answer is, how the loss caused by the breach of trust is to be borne. The authorities are in a perplexing condition, and I am unable to reconcile the decision of Pearson, J., in In re Moore, with that of Kay, J., in In re Foster. The present case is distinguishable from both those authorities as in neither of them was the loss caused by a breach of trust. I think the true principle is that stated by James, V.C., in Cox v. Cox, 17 W. R. 790, L. R. 8 Eq. 343: "The true principle in all these cases is that neither the tenant for life nor the remaindermen is to gain an advantage over the other—neither is to suffer more damage in proportion to his estate and interest than the other suffers—from the default of the obligor. The two must share the loss in the same way as they would have shared it had it occurred when they first became entitled in possession to the fund."

Applying this principle, I have first to ascertain what the fund for division ought to be, on the assumption that the sale and wrongful investment never took place. In that case there would have been £10,021 Consols for division, and the tenant for life would have received the interest on those Consols down to her death. As a matter of fact she received altogether the sum of £4,066 in respect of the wrongful investment. She was in no way responsible for, or indeed cognizant of, the breach of trust, and I could not order her executor to refund any portion of this income. But I am dealing with a case of adjustment of a loss as between tenant for life and remaindermen, and so long as any funds are available for that purpose I must so apportion them as to throw the loss on income and capital rateably. The proper method of doing this is to ascertain the total amount of the dividends on £10,021 Consols that the tenant for life would have received if the sale and wrongful investment had not been made, and also to ascertain the value of £10,021 Consols at her death, the proper time for distributing the fund. This will show the amount that ought to have been available for income and capital respectively. On the other hand, the fund in court, plus the £4,066 income actually received, minus accretions since the death of the tenant for life, which accretions belong to the remaindermen, gives the aggregate amount actually produced by the wrongful investment up to the death of the tenant for life.

In order to throw the loss on income and capital rateably, this aggregate must be divided between the estate of the tenant for life and the remaindermen according to the rule in In re Foster—i.e., in the proportion which the total amount of dividends that the tenant for life would have received on the £10,021 Consols from the date of the wrongful investment to her death bears to the value of £10,021 Consols at her death, her executor giving credit for the £4,066 actually received, but not being liable to refund any overpayment for the reason above stated.

Whether this is the proper mode of apportionment in a case where the loss has not arisen from a breach of trust is not for me to determine. There was a breach of trust in the present case, and I must restore the status quo ante as far as the funds available will permit.

Solicitors, Gasquet & Metcalfe; Pollock & Co.; J. E. Mason.

K. B. Div.
(Kennedy and Phillimore, JJ.) } May 7, 8.

In re TOWNSEND. (a.)

Inland revenue—Estate duty—Trust property—Income to children subject to annuity to widow—Division on widow's death — Testator died before 1894 — Time when property passed—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 10.

A testator, who died in 1892, by his will gave his real and personal estate to trustees on trust to invest, and out of the income of the invested fund to pay an annuity to his wife and to pay the residue of the income of the said trust fund during his widow's life to his eight children; and after his widow's death, if the trust fund exceeded £9,600, to pay eight-ninths of such excess to his eight children in equal shares and the remaining one-ninth of such excess to the children of a ninth child who had predeceased him. The testator's widow died in 1900.

Held, that the testator's estate (save one-ninth of the excess above £9,600), subject to the widow's annuity, passed to his children upon his death, and that estate duty was consequently not payable on the death of the testator's widow.

Petition of Charles Benjamin Townsend and Joseph Fielding Johnson.

Thomas Townsend, of Attleborough Hall, Attleborough, in the county of Warwick, cycle manufacturer, deceased, by his will bequeathed certain real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale and investment and out of the income thereof to pay an annuity to his widow, and subject to such annuity to pay the income in equal shares to his eight children. After his widow's decease, the trust fund, if the same exceeded £9,600 then, was as to eight-ninths of such excess, given to the children in equal shares; and if the fund exceeded £9,600, the remaining ninth part was given to the children of his deceased son Isaac Thomas Townsend equally between them.

Thomas Townsend died on the 10th of January, 1892, and probate, estate, and succession duty was paid in respect of his real and personal estate.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Sarah Townsend, the widow, died on the 29th of May, 1900.

The Commissioners of Inland Revenue now claimed that upon the death of the said Sarah Townsend the entirety of the trust estate of the testator passed to his children within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1894, and that estate duty became and was payable upon the real estate, subject to an appropriate allowance in respect of the succession duty that had been already paid.

The petitioners contended that upon the true construction of the will all the trust estate of the testator (save one-ninth part of the excess thereof over £9,600), subject to the widow's annuity, passed to his children upon his death, and not upon the death of the said Sarah Townsend, and that the only property that upon the death of his widow passed under the will of the testator was the said one-ninth share of the excess of the trust fund of the testator over £9,600, and the benefit which accrued to the eight children of the testator by the cesser of the annuity by the will given to the testator's widow.

Montague Lush, for the petitioners.—The testator died in 1892, and the Crown then considered that this property as to eight-ninths then passed, and they claimed and obtained succession duty thereon. [He referred to Salmon v. Green, 18 L. J. Ch. 166.] The Crown cannot now say that the same property did not pass until the death of the testator's widow.

Sir R. B. Finlay, A.G., and Vaughan Hawkins, for the Crown.—Until the death of the widow the beneficiaries could not have come to the court and asked that enough might be set aside to pay the annuity, and that the residue should be paid over to them in their proper proportions. The property therefore cannot be deemed to have passed until after the death of the testator's widow: In re Greenwood, 17 W. R. 861, L. R. 4 Ex. 327; Earl Cowley v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 47 W. R. 525, [1899] A. C. 198.

KENNEDY, J.—In this case my judgment must be for the petitioners. Their contention is that the trust estate (except as to one-ninth part of the residue and the amount required to satisfy the annuity) passed on the death of the testator. If it did, the claim of the taxing authorities is bad. The petitioners are willing to pay in respect of the benefit they get by the cesser of the annuity. My difficulty is that I cannot understand how the Crown hopes to maintain its contention. As to the £9,600 the children took a definite share each on his father's death. The only uncertainty is as to the amount of residue beyond the £9,600.

PHILLIMORE, J.—I also think that the petitioners should succeed, and I am not a little astonished that the law officers should have supported this claim made by the taxing authorities. The testator gave eight legacies of £9,600 in all, and then the residue of his estate in ninths. The peculiarity of the will is that the testator does not give the legatee of one-ninth's share any share of income during the life of his widow. It seems to be obvious that as regards the legacies of £9,600 and eight-ninths of the residue the property passed on the death of the testator. The contention of the Crown would indeed lead to serious consequences against the Crown in other cases, and we must save the Crown from itself.

Judgment for the petitioners.

Solicitors for the petitioners, Crowders, Vizard, & Oldham, for Browetts, Coventry.

Solicitor for the respondent, The Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

K. B. Div. (Darling and Channell, JJ.) — March 12.

BLAND (Petitioner) v. BUCHANAN (Respondent). (a.)

Election law—Municipal election—Election of mayor—Vote of councillor subsequently disqualified—Validity of such vote — Vote of chairman — Casting vote—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 10, 15 (3), 42, 61 (4), 102.

At a municipal election N., a councillor, voted, whose election as a councillor was then about to be challenged on the ground that he had an interest in a contract with the council.

T., the retiring mayor and chairman of the meeting, who had himself voted, said if N.'s vote was disallowed there would be an equal number of votes for each of the two candidates for the position of mayor, and he should therefore give a provisional casting vote for the respondent.

On the hearing of the petition N. was held disqualified from acting as a member of the town council, and the question was then raised for the decision of the High Court, (1) whether, on the authority of Nell v. Longbottom, [1894] 1 Q. B. 767, his vote given for the election of the mayor was valid; (2) whether the chairman at a meeting of the council for electing a mayor may give a casting vote to take effect in case the votes turn out to be equal, owing to one of the votes being disallowed.

Held, (1) that as N. had been found to be disqualified to act as a councillor, his vote was bad and ought to be disallowed; (2) that under the Municipal Corporations Act T., the outgoing mayor, would have been entitled to give an original vote, and that there was nothing in the Provisional Order of 1900 to take away that right; (3) that T. had a right, under the circumstances, to give a casting vote, as the number of lawful (i.e., valid) votes—N.'s not being a lawful vote—were equal, and therefore both the original and casting vote of T. were good and the respondent entitled to claim the seat.

Arguments on questions of law reserved by Mr. H. R. Mansel Jones, a commissioner, to whom was assigned the trial of an election petition under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, against the return of the respondent to the office of mayor for the city of Gloucester.

There were originally three petitions presented. The first petition alleged that the election of W. J. Newth, as a councillor, was null and void on the ground that he was interested in a contract with the corporation at the time of his nomination.

The two other petitions were against the election of the mayor, the present respondent, Albert Buchanan, and ten aldermen on the ground that their election was due to the vote of Newth, who was disqualified from voting.

The commissioner who heard the petitions held that Newth had an interest in a contract with the corporation at the time of his nomination, and was therefore disqualified from being elected. He further held that the election of the mayor and aldermen was also void, on the ground that it was carried by the vote of Newth.

Against this decision Newth, the mayor, and the ten aldermen appealed, and the court, after hearing argument, dismissed the appeal in the case of Newth, holding that he was interested in a contract with the corporation, and therefore his election was void: see ante, p. 345.

The appeal of the mayor now came on for argument, the question of law being raised in the following form: The commissioner stated that the petition was heard by him on the 30th and 31st of January, 1901, at Gloucester. The election was held on the 9th of November, 1900, when the respondent was declared elected mayor. The petition prayed that it might be declared that the said Albert Buchanan was not duly elected, and that his election was null and void, and that the petitioner, Samuel Bland, was duly elected, and ought to have been declared elected; that W. J. Newth purported to vote at the election for the respondent, and his vote was counted as a good vote. That Frank Treasure, who had been elected mayor at the last election (9th of November, 1899) presided as chairman and purported to vote for the respondent in the first instance and counted the vote so given as a vote for the respondent. Sixteen votes, including those of Newth and Treasure and the respondent, purported to have been given for the respondent, and fifteen were given for the petitioner, and Treasure (the outgoing mayor and chairman)—the voting being then sixteen to fifteen—thinking that Newth's vote might be impeached (as in fact it was), gave a casting vote for the respondent.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

By the Local Government Board's Provisional Order Confirmation Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. clxxxiii), the area of the city of Gloucester was extended.

By article 9 it is provided that for the purposes of an election of a town council for the city the following provisions shall apply: (a) The town clerk and the mayor of the existing city, or such persons as the Local Government Board shall appoint, shall perform the duties devolving upon the town clerk and mayor respectively under the Municipal Acts and the mayor of the existing city or such other person as he shall appoint shall be the returning officer at the election of each ward; (b) thirty councillors of the city shall be elected on the 1st of November, 1900, and ten aldermen of the city shall be elected on the 9th of November, 1900; (c) notwithstanding anything in the Municipal Corporations Acts to the contrary, all the councillors of the existing city who shall be in office on the 1st of November, 1900, shall go out of office on that date, and all the aldermen of the existing city who shall be in office on the 8th of November, 1900, shall go out of office on that date, and all such councillors and aldermen shall be eligible for election as councillors on the 1st of November, 1900. Mr. Treasure, who had been a councillor up to the 1st of November, did not avail himself of that provision, and was not re-elected among the thirty councillors who were elected on the 1st of November.

At the conclusion of the trial, after hearing argument, I determined, subject to the opinion of the High Court of Justice on the question of law hereinafter submitted, that Mr. Treasure was entitled to vote as mayor in the first instance, but that the second so-called casting vote which he gave was bad, but I postponed granting a certificate until the questions which I now submit for the consideration of the High Court have been determined by them.

The questions are: (1) Was Mr. Treasure as mayor entitled to vote in the first instance? (2) Was he, under the circumstances above stated, entitled to give a casting vote?

If the court answers both the above questions in the affirmative, my certificate will be that the respondent was duly elected, and the petition dismissed.

If the court answers the first of the above questions in the affirmative, and the second in the negative, my certificate will be that the respondent was duly elected, and the petition will be dismissed.

If the court answers both questions in the negative, then my certificate will be that the respondent was not duly elected, and that his election was void, and the petition is to be allowed.

If the court answers the first of the above questions in the negative, and the second in the affirmative, my certificate will be that the respondent was duly elected, and the petition is to be dismissed.

The document was signed H. R. Mansel Jones, and dated the 6th of February, 1901.

It was agreed by the parties at the hearing of the petition that the following question should be taken as included among the questions reserved by the commissioner: (3) "Whether Newth's votes upon the election of the mayor was good notwithstanding that he had a contract at the time in respect of which his election had been declared void."

The following sections of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, are material:

Section 42 (i.): "The acts and proceedings of a person in possession of a corporate office, and acting therein shall, notwithstanding his disqualification, be as valid and effectual as if he had been qualified."

Section 102: "Where a candidate who has been elected to a corporate office is by a certificate of an Election Court, or a decision of the High Court, declared not to have been duly elected, acts done by him in execution of the office before the time when the certificate or decision is certified to the town clerk shall not be invalidated by reason of that declaration."

H. Terrell, K.C. (Lewis Coward and Daldy with him).—We say that Newth's vote was valid although his election was subsequently declared void. That is the effect of sections 42 and 102 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, for the effect of those sections is to make Newth's act in respect of his municipal office valid. Nell v. Longbottom, 38 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, 309, [1894] 1 Q. B. 767, was wrongly decided, and that is the only authority contrary to our contention that Newth's vote was good.

Asquith, K.C. (Ruegg, K.C., and S. H. Day with him).—We say that Nell v. Longbottom absolutely concludes the matter. Whether it was rightly or wrongly decided, it has been followed as good law and never before questioned.

THE COURT intimated they thought Newth's vote was bad.

Asquith, K.C., then submitted that the original and casting vote of the mayor was bad. The provisions of the Act of 1882 could not be applied when a new city was called into existence, as had been the case with Gloucester. The mayor only continued in office for the specific purposes mentioned in the provisional order. Section 61 (4) showed his casting vote was bad. There was no such thing as a right to give a prospective or contingent future vote. It was not for the chairman to go into the question of a voter's qualification, and to say in effect that if a particular vote was successfully challenged then he would give a casting vote.

Terrell, in reply.—One of the duties of a mayor specified in article 9 is to vote. As to the casting vote, equality of votes must mean equality of valid votes. [He referred to sections 42 (i.) and 102.] If the mayor was unseated, and no new mayor elected, the result would be that the ten aldermen would be seated before the mayor was elected, yet the Act provided that they could not elect aldermen before the mayor. Who, then, was to elect in that case the mayor, for the Act only authorized the outgoing aldermen to elect the mayor, and the aldermen had ceased to exist. [DARLING, J.—Suppose a mayor was elected and then the election of aldermen was proceeded with, and the proper number returned, and it was then discovered that the election of the mayor for some reason or other was void. Do you say the election of the aldermen would be void?] I should say so, because you have elected your aldermen before your mayor. [DARLING, J.—Suppose the mayor died?] If the mayor died that would be another matter, but in this case the mayor has been declared not elected ab initio. The order of things cannot be reversed. The Act gives directions that the mayor is to be elected first, and then the aldermen. [DARLING, J.—Is Gloucester now without a corporation altogether?] It is in a state of hopeless chaos. The effect of the order was not to do away with the office of mayor, who had a vote and an existence until the appointment of his successor.

DARLING, J.—In this case Mr. Terrell has contended on behalf of the respondent that although Mr. Newth's election had been declared void, his vote could not be questioned by reason of section 42 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882. If the decision in Nell v. Longbottom is right then that contention fails. It may be that Nell v. Longbottom is an authority not binding on this court; but I think on the whole it was rightly decided, and therefore Newth's vote can be questioned and in my judgment was rightly disallowed. Now the object of the provisional order to which we have been so frequently referred during the argument was to enlarge the boundaries of Gloucester, and for that purpose it was necessary that the corporation of the old and smaller city should come to an end, and the provisional order provided how that was to be brought about. It provided that the old councillors and aldermen should cease to exist on given days, but that the mayor and town clerk of the old city, or others whom the Local Government Board might appoint, should remain in office to perform the duties devolving upon them under the Municipal Corporations Act, and that the mayor should be returning officer in the new elections. Mr. Asquith said the mayor was only retained as returning officer and nothing else. Now the mayor himself was part of the town council, and the first thing in which he was engaged was the election of a mayor to succeed him. Therefore he had to do something as mayor, and he acted as such when he took part in the election of mayor, and although he was mayor of the old corporation, which was gone, he had a part in the reconstructed district which had been enlarged. The provisional order did not deprive him of it; and I do not think it was intended to deprive him of the power of taking part in the election of mayor. I therefore think his original vote was a good one. Next comes the question of his casting vote. If his original vote was a good one, as things turned out, it made an equality of votes for the mayor, if Mr. Newth's vote was held bad, for "equality of votes" must mean an equal number of valid votes; but if Mr. Newth's vote was held good, there was not an equality of valid votes. But as Mr. Newth's vote was challenged, the mayor said he would give a casting vote in case there turned out to be an equality of votes. As it had turned out, Mr. Newth's vote being struck off, there was an equality of votes; but it was said that Mr. Treasure could not give a casting vote as to a contingency. I do not think that that was the meaning of the provision as to casting votes. I think that the mayor, when the number of valid votes was equal, may give a casting vote. Now Newth's vote was bad, the mayor's original vote was good, and that resulting in an equality, his casting vote was good, and therefore the person for whom he voted was elected by a majority of one. There must, therefore, be judgment for the respondent. As to whether there should be an appeal, we will grant leave on the assumption that it is proceeded with at once, or else it will be practically useless, as the people affected in Gloucester are only elected for a short period.

CHANNELL, J.—I concur. In my opinion it would be wrong for us not to follow the decision given in Nell v. Longbottom, which is a decision directly in point. As I agree with it I feel myself under no duty to consider whether that decision can be reviewed after the years that have elapsed since it was decided, coupled with the fact that it has often been cited with approval before the courts. I do not wish to decide whether it is right or wrong, for although I admit that the reasoning cannot be said to be conclusive, I do not see why the result arrived at should be otherwise than correct. As to the casting vote there appears to be no direct authority on that point, but in my opinion it would be a very practical thing for a chairman to say: "I do not know whether I have a casting vote or not, but if I have then I give a casting vote in favour of Mr. A. B." I see nothing in the Act to prevent a chairman doing this. As to the original vote given by the chairman in this case, I agree with all that has been said by Darling, J., and I agree, therefore, that our judg- should be for the respondent with costs.

Terrell, K.C.—The aldermen's case will also depend on whether Mr. Newth's vote was a good one. I asked the court to request the commissioner to give formally some points in that case, and then the court can give judgment upon it.

DARLING, J., said the commissioner had given no decision on the aldermen's case.

CHANNELL, J., said no doubt the commissioner would reserve his decision until the time of the appeal came.

Terrell, K.C.—He will no doubt make a certificate in the ordinary way.

Judgment for the respondent, with costs. Leave to appeal granted.

Solicitor for the petitioner, C. T. Courtney Lewis, for W. Langley Smith, Gloucester.

Solicitors for the respondent, Ayrton, Biscoe, & Barclay.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). May 20.

INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. MULLER & CO.'S MARGARINE (LIMITED). (a.)

Inland revenue—Stamp duty—Goodwill—Agreement executed in England—Sale of foreign business—"Property situate locally out of the United Kingdom"—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 59, sub-section 1.

For the purposes of the Stamp Act, 1891, an agreement for sale executed in this country by the purchasers is made in England.

The goodwill of a business situated and carried on abroad is "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom," and an agreement executed in England for the sale of such goodwill is excepted from duty under section 59, sub-section 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Decision of Court of Appeal, [1900] 1 Q. B. 310, 48 W. R. Dig. 77 (Earl of Halsbury, L.C., dissenting), affirmed.

Appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (A. L. Smith, Collins, and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.), [1900] 1 Q. B. 310, 48 W. R. Dig. 77, reversing a judgment of the Queen's Bench Division (Day and Lawrance, JJ.).

The following statement of the facts is taken from Lord Macnaghten's judgment: One Muller, who carried on the business of a manufacturer of margarine at Gildehaus, in Germany, under the style or firm of Muller & Co., was minded to sell his business there with all that appertained to it. He gave an option of purchase to one Newman. Newman, or the person for whom he was acting, transferred this option to a syndicate. The syndicate found or formed a company called Muller & Co.'s Margarine (Limited) to take the purchase off their hands.

On the 4th of October, 1897, an agreement, in which the intermediaries were joined, was made between Muller and the company for the sale and purchase of the business. This agreement was executed by Muller abroad and by the company in England. In it, though the price was a lump sum, in addition to the ascertained value of the stock-in-trade, the subject of the sale is split up and described under different headings, one of which is in the following terms: "The goodwill of the said business, with the exclusive right to use the name of Muller & Co. as part of the name of the company, and to represent the company as carrying on the said business in continuation of the vendors and in succession to them."

The Crown claimed duty on the value of the goodwill and on the value of the pending contracts of Muller & Co., and the appellants found that the proportion of the total purchase-money applicable to these subjects of sale was £77,418—the whole consideration for the sale being £122,500—and assessed the duty at the rate of 10s. per cent.—namely, £387 5s. in addition to a fixed duty of 10s. in respect of other matters not chargeable with ad valorem duty. The claim was allowed by the Divisional Court, and disallowed by the Court of Appeal.

Sir R. B. Finlay, A.G., and Danckwerts, K.C. (Rowlatt with them), for the appellants.

A. T. Lawrence, K.C., and Compton Smith, for the respondents.

The House took time for consideration.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—In this case your lordships have listened to an interesting disquisition on the subject of that which is commonly called goodwill. Most, if not all, of the many cases touching upon that subject have been cited at the bar with the view of satisfying your lordships that the goodwill of a foreign business, which was confined within certain known and narrow limits on the Continent, and which apparently never had a single customer in this country, cannot be described as "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom." [His lordship here stated the facts as given above.] There are two questions in the case—first, Was this agreement made in England? and secondly, Was the goodwill of this business property locally situate out of the United Kingdom?

Now, as to the first question I do not think there can be any difficulty. It seems to me that according to the true construction of the Stamp Act of 1891 an agreement is made in England if it is executed in England by a party to the agreement whose execution is required to make the instrument on the face of it complete and perfect. The argument that because section 59 of the Act speaks of an agreement for sale, and not of an agreement for sale and purchase, regard is only to be had to the execution by the vendor, is in my opinion too refined to be substantial. I think the agreement was made in England, and not the less so because it may also be described with equal propriety as made abroad.

I now come to the second point. It was argued that if goodwill be property, it is property having no local situation. It is very difficult, as it seems to me, to say that goodwill is not property. Goodwill is bought and sold every day. It may be acquired, I think, in any of the different ways in which property is usually acquired. When a man has got it he may keep it as his own. He may vindicate his exclusive right to it if necessary by process of law. He may dispose of it if he will—of course, under the conditions attaching to property of that nature.

Then comes the question, Can it be said that goodwill has a local situation within the meaning of the Act? I am disposed to agree with an observation thrown out in the course of the argument—that it is not easy to form a conception of property having no local situation. What is goodwill? It is a thing very easy to describe, very difficult to define. It is the benefit and advantage of the good name, reputation, and connection of a business. It is the attractive force which brings in custom. It is the one thing which distinguishes an old-established business from a new business at its first start. The goodwill of a business must emanate from a particular centre or source. However widely extended or diffused its influence may be, goodwill is worth nothing unless it has power of attraction sufficient to bring customers home to the source from which it emanates. Goodwill is composed of a variety of elements. It differs in its composition in different trades and in different businesses in the same trade. One element may preponderate here, and another element there. To analyze goodwill and split it up into its component parts, to pare it down as the commissioners desire to do until nothing is left but a dry residuum ingrained in the actual place where the business is carried on while everything else is in the air, seems to me to be as useful for practical purposes as it would be to resolve the human body into the various substances of which it is said to be composed. The goodwill of a business is one whole, and in a case like this it must be dealt with as such.

For my part, I think that if there is one attribute common to all cases of goodwill, it is the attribute of locality. For goodwill has no independent existence. It cannot subsist by itself. It must be attached to a business. Destroy the business and the goodwill perishes with it, though elements remain which may perhaps be gathered up and be revived again. No doubt where the reputation of a business is very widely spread, or where it is the article produced rather than the producer of the article that has won popular favour, it may be difficult to localize goodwill. But here, I think, there is no difficulty. We have it in evidence that the firm of Muller & Co. had no customers out of Germany, and it is a significant fact that the protected area—the limit within which the vendor is prohibited from setting up in business—was the limit of fifty miles from Gildehaus. Moreover, under the Stamp Act of 1891 we are not required to define the local situation of the goodwill. We have only to determine whether it is or is not situate out of the United Kingdom. Surely if there were an agreement made in England for the sale of a local German newspaper, the circulation of which did not extend beyond a limited district in Germany, no one would doubt that the goodwill of that business was locally situate out of the United Kingdom, and so it must be, I think, in the present case.

I am therefore of opinion that the judgment of the Court of Appeal is right and ought to be affirmed, and I move your lordships accordingly.

Lord DAVEY.—The questions on this appeal arise on the construction of a few words in section 59, sub-section 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39). By an agreement of the 4th of October, 1897, the goodwill of a business carried on in Germany, together with the factory and buildings in which the business was carried on, and all the plant, machinery, apparatus, rolling stock, and chattels employed in the business except stock-in-trade and all pending contracts and orders in connection with the business, books of account, documents, and papers, was sold for a lump sum to the respondents, who are an English company. The principal question is whether the goodwill so sold was either wholly or partially "property situate out of the United Kingdom" within the meaning of the exception in the section referred to. But other subsidiary points have been argued, to which I will first address a few remarks.

First it was said that the agreement was not made in England because the vendors executed it in Amsterdam. It was not, however, a completed agreement for purchase and sale till it was executed by the purchasers, and that was done in England. It was argued that the acceptance by the purchasers might have been proved by oral evidence—which is true. But what we have to deal with is the document in which the acceptance by the purchasers was expressed by the execution of it in this country.

Another point made was on the construction of the section. It was suggested that the word "property" ought to be read as ejusdem generis with the words which immediately precede it—namely, "lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritages"—and to be confined to real property. The first observation which occurs to one is that if such had been the intention it would have been so easy to have expressed it—to have said "real property." But the word "property" occurs in two places in the earlier part of the section. It is there used in its widest sense as meaning property of every description, and I can find no sufficient reason in the context for thinking that it is used in a more restricted sense in the passage in question. The clause is drawn in rather a confused manner. The material words "any contract or agreement . . . for the sale of any estate or interest in any property, except lands, &c.," or "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom, or goods, &c." Whatever the word "property" means in the words imposing the duty I think it must have in the words of exception. It is not disputed that property in its wider sense may include whatever rights or benefits pass under the term "goodwill."

I pass now to the principal question which has been argued—namely, whether goodwill can be said to be situated outside the United Kingdom or to have any local situation. A more accurate way of stating the question would, in my opinion, be whether the goodwill which is comprised in this contract has a locality for the purpose of the Stamp Act. Now the subject of the contract is the sale as a going concern of a German manufacturing and commercial business carried on by a German in Germany, with the buildings in which the business is carried on and all the plant, &c., necessary for carrying it on. It does not appear to me that the mention of goodwill adds anything to that which would be included in a sale of the business. What rights pass to the purchaser of the goodwill, in my opinion, depends primâ facie on the German law, but the parties have to a certain extent defined them for themselves as "the exclusive right to use the name of Muller & Co. as part of the name of the company, and to represent the company as carrying on the said business in continuation of the vendors and in succession to them," and they have protected the purchaser by the vendor's covenant not to carry on the business of manufacturers of margarine, at any time thereafter, within fifty miles of the business premises. It is said that the purchaser might remove the business (say) to England. Whether he could do so and still retain the rights conferred by the contract is, in my opinion, a question of German law. It seems to me, however, immaterial whether they can do so or not, because (I repeat) this business was at the date of the contract in Germany. What we have to look at is the state of things at the date of the contract, and the possibility of its removal no more affects the question than if it were a valuable chattel, such as a picture or a statue.

The position taken up by the Attorney-General was a singular one, and somewhat embarrassing to persons who have to stamp their contracts. He admitted that so far as the goodwill was attached to the business premises, and thereby enhanced their value, he did not claim that an ad valorem stamp should be affixed in respect of that value. But I am not aware that you can split up goodwill into its elements in that way, and I see great difficulty in doing so. The term "goodwill" is nothing more than a summary of the rights accruing to the respondents from their purchase of the business and property employed in it. As that business and property undoubtedly had their local habitation in Germany at the date of the contract, I have no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the Court of Appeal were right, and this appeal ought to be dismissed.

I do not find it necessary to say anything about the numerous cases which were referred to in the course of the argument, because, in my opinion, they have no direct bearing on this case. Nor do I express any opinion on the abstract question whether an incorporeal right can have a local situation, beyond saying that I am not impressed with the difficulty of holding that it may have one for revenue purposes in analogy to the decisions in the probate cases.

Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD.—I share the view that the judgment of the Court of Appeal is correct, and that this appeal should be dismissed.

For the reasons already given, I think the contention of the Crown that this contract was made in England is correct.

The principal question for decision by your lordships no doubt afforded great opportunity for ingenious argument; but that question can, I think, easily enough be solved by the application of mere common sense.

The question whether the agreement for the sale of the goodwill of a manufacturing business should be charged with an ad valorem stamp under the Stamp Act of 1891 depends upon the application of certain facts existing in this case to the words of that Act.

The business sold was a wholesale manufacturing business carried on in premises situated at Gildehaus, in Germany. All the stock and plant of the company were on those premises. All the customers of the company were resident in Germany.

Now, as the Stamp Act imposes no duty on agreements referring to property locally situated out of the United Kingdom, the question arises, where is the goodwill of this business to be found? I would premise that in my view no substantial difference can be established between the words "locally situated" and the word "situated." It is admitted that goodwill is property within the Act, and the Act assumes that the property—primâ facie all the property mentioned in the Act—may be situated out of the United Kingdom. Now in this case we have a business in respect of which a goodwill exists. This business, without doubt, lies abroad. It cannot be otherwise, for premises, plant, manufacture, trade, residence of customers are all in Germany. And this business, locally situated out of the United Kingdom, has a goodwill attached to it. It is difficult to separate them; certainly out of the business the goodwill springs, and its value depends entirely upon the local existence of the premises and the manufactory, and the existence and action of more or less local customers. The parties to the agreement certainly attached value to the continuance of the business in the locality, for the vendor contracted not to carry his business on within fifty miles of the existing premises.

I entirely dissent from the view that the goodwill of a business, either wholesale or retail, cannot be locally situated. On the contrary, I should say that the goodwill of most businesses is locally situated. There may be exceptions; but this case is not one of them, and I therefore think that no stamp duty is chargeable upon that part of the agreement which refers to the goodwill of the business sold, and that therefore the judgment of the Court of Appeal should be affirmed.

Lord BRAMPTON.—By section 59, sub-section 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891, it is enacted that "any contract or agreement made in England . . . for the sale of any equitable estate or interest in any property whatsoever, or for the sale of any estate or interest in any property, except lands, tenements, or heritages, or property locally situate out of the United Kingdom . . . shall be charged with the same ad valorem duty, to be paid by the purchaser, as if it were an actual conveyance on sale of the estate, interest, or property contracted or agreed to be sold." Before dealing with the contents of the instrument sought to be charged with the stamp duty in this case, I think it desirable to describe in a few words the relative positions of the parties to it. Wolf Muller (the vendor) carried on, under the style of Muller & Co., at Gildehaus, in Germany, the business of a manufacturer of margarine. One Newman, as a trustee for Wigley, acquired from Muller the right to purchase the said business and the assets thereof for a sum of £80,000, exclusive of the stock-in-trade and book debts, which were to be taken on a valuation. Subsequently Newman, with the sanction of Wigley, agreed to make over his rights to a syndicate, and the syndicate afterwards arranged to sell its rights of purchase to the respondent company, which before the contract in question was made had been incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1893.

To put this arrangement in the form of a written agreement the instrument in question, which bears date the 14th of October, 1897, was prepared, the above-named persons and company being all parties to it, Wolf Muller being described as "the vendor," and the respondent company (called the company) being treated as the purchaser; the others—Newman, Wigley, and the syndicate—being joined for the mere purpose of testifying their concurrence. By the first article of the instrument it was agreed that the vendor, by the direction of the three intermediate parties, should sell and the company should purchase as from the 1st of June then last—first, the goodwill of the said business, with the exclusive right to use the name of "Muller & Co." as part of the name of the company, and to represent the company as carrying on the said business in continuation of the vendor, and in succession to him. Secondly, all the freehold hereditaments specified in the first schedule thereto, and therein described as "all those four acres of land with the factory and buildings erected thereon, situate in the parish of Waldseil, in the community of Gildehaus, Hanover, Germany; also all those two houses, situate in the Bahnstrasse at Gildehaus aforesaid." A description of the remainder of the property made the subject of the agreement is not material to this case.

The price to be paid by the vendor was £122,500, which included the profit made by the intermediate parties. This sum was not divided and appropriated part to the goodwill and part to the premises, but they were treated as one subject of sale. The purchase was to be completed on or before the 22nd of November, 1897, and possession of the premises to be then given; in the meantime it was to be retained by the vendor, who during that time was to carry on the same business as a going concern, and be deemed to have been so carrying it on as from the 1st of June on behalf of the company. By the 11th clause the vendor bound himself not to carry on the business of a margarine manufacturer within fifty miles of the said freehold premises, with one exception immaterial to be stated.

The agreement was executed under seal by the vendors, and by Newman and Wigley, at Amsterdam, and afterwards by the syndicate and by the purchasing company under their respective common seals in England.

Upon this state of things, the first question raised is whether this instrument of agreement was made in England; for upon it, and it alone, if at all, can the stamp duty now sought to be imposed be charged.

If the question were, "In which country was the instrument executed?" the only possible truthful answer would be "Partly in Holland and partly in England." But when the question is, "Where was the contract made?" one is driven to say, "It was not in Holland; for while in that country, though it was then signed and sealed by the vendor and two of the intermediates, it lacked the execution of the syndicate and of the vendee, which was essential to its validity as a contract. It only became a perfect contract when the purchasing company and the syndicate affixed their respective common seals to it.

It was suggested, however, that there must have been an oral contract made in Germany before the written instrument was prepared. That, however, would not assist the respondent company, for it is only the written instrument which requires to be, or is capable of being, stamped.

I may add that by the Stamp Act the duty is to be paid by the purchaser, and the written instrument could not bind the purchasing company until it was executed by that company's common seal.

So far as the contract by the purchasers was concerned, it was entirely made in England. For these reasons I have no hesitation in answering the first question in the affirmative, in favour of the Crown.

As to the second question, I think it is very clear that no equitable estate or interest in the property was ever vested in either Newman, Wigley, or the syndicate. The whole interest, both legal and equitable, remained in the vendor until the rights of option to purchase were exercised by the intermediate parties in the manner hereinbefore described and carried out by the written contract. This question, therefore, must be answered in the negative against the Crown. The remaining question is, whether the goodwill of the business, sold as it undoubtedly was in one contract, and as part of one subject-matter of sale, with the buildings, houses, and land in and upon which the business was carried on by the vendor, was property locally situate out of the United Kingdom. I think it was. Whether the goodwill and the land and the factory are rightly to be treated as combined and inseparable, or as separated from each other, each is undoubtedly property within the meaning of the Stamp Act, and has been decided so to be by a long string of cases of which I will only mention that of Potter v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 2 W. R. 561, 10 Exch. 147.

Granting that a goodwill is property, the question still remains: Was the goodwill in this case, when it was purchased by the company, "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom"? The answer to this depends, in my judgment, upon whether at the time of the making of the written contract the goodwill was attached to and incorporated with the business premises, and formed in the hands of the then vendor an inseparable property, very valuable in its combination as giving to the premises a character and an increase of value which, stripped of the goodwill, they would not have possessed, and which represents the value of the profit-earning quality of those premises when and so long as they are used by the then occupier for carrying on in them the business he had created within them, by reason of the attraction of customers from any of those causes which tend to make a prosperous business—for that is what the vendor had to sell, and sold; and the question must be determined having regard to the time when the contract of sale was made, and not regarding anything the vendee might think fit to do with them in the future.

This word "goodwill," when used in connection with the sale and purchase of a trade, must, I think, be interpreted according to its popular acceptation. Taken in its strictest sense, "goodwill" would hardly be a saleable commodity at all. I do not say there may not be such a thing as a goodwill of a business utterly unconnected with the premises in which the business has been previously carried on; for it is quite possible that a man retiring from business might wish to retain the premises for his own private use, and sell merely the goodwill; but as was pointed out by Pollock, L.C.B., in Potter's case, there is a wide difference between the sale of a goodwill together with the premises in which the trade is then carried on, whereby the value of the premises is enhanced, and the sale of a goodwill without any interest in land or buildings connected with it, and which is merely the advantage of the recommendation of the vendor to his connections and customers, and his covenant to allow the vendee to use his trade name, and to abstain from competition with him.

In the first of these cases the trade and the premises are inseparable so long as the trade is therein carried on. The advantages and facilities constituting the goodwill are all more or less derived from them or the profitable results of such goodwill are therein realized. The goodwill of a trade carried on in a shop is as essential to the tradesman as the shop itself, which is benefited by it. What is the trade of a shop but the business done in it, and how is that custom brought to the shop but by the goodwill attached to it? The combination of a suitable shop with the trade done in it, and the goodwill inducing that trade, seem to me to be inseverable. In my judgment it matters not whether the business be a manufacturing one, or that of a shopkeeper or a publican or a brewer—in each case the seller of his business premises with his goodwill sells, and the purchaser buys, the outgoing man's premises, with, so far as in him lies, the whole business carried on therein as a going concern, with the same prospects the vendor himself would have had had he continued it; and I think it immaterial whether the business has been built up by reason of the personal good qualities of the outgoer, the goodness of his wares or merchandize, the good situation of the premises, or the absence of competition; in each case the business and custom, in fact, have been attracted to the house or premises, and when the incomer takes possession he takes all the chances offered and conveyed to him by his purchase, of standing, so far as the business is concerned, in the shoes of the outgoer, and he must rely upon his own good qualities and aptitude for his undertaking to continue the prosperity of the business and profit by his bargain.

Dealing with an argument touching an injury to the custom of a public-house, Lord Westbury in Ricket v. Metropolitan Railway, 15 W. R. 937, L. R. 2 H. L. 175, at p. 204, says: "It is a fallacy, almost a mockery, to answer, the custom is one thing and the house another; and the injury is to the custom, not to the house. You cannot sever the custom from the house itself, or from the interest of the occupier, for the custom is the thing appertaining to the house which gives it its special character, and constitutes its value to the occupier." In short, as was observed by the Court of Exchequer, "the goodwill is part of the value of the property."

The judgment of Lord Esher, M.R., in Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Angus, 38 W. R. 3, 23 Q. B. D. 579, is to the same effect. It must not for a moment be imagined that these observations are intended to affect in the least degree the present mode of assessing for sale or compensation purposes the value of premises to which a goodwill is attached.

In this case the business sold was commenced, and its reputation was made and established, on these premises and nowhere else. The margarine and butter substances have all been there manufactured, at this factory; all the orders of customers, for the most part resident in Germany, have been received at it, and from it the manufactured commodities have been delivered. I care not to inquire into the reasons for its success, for there is the business, consisting of goodwill and premises combined, for which in their combination as vendors, the vendees voluntary consented to pay the large sum of money mentioned in the contract.

The vendees may, of course, deal as they please with the future of that which they have bought. We have only to deal with it as it stood at the time of the sale. I cannot understand how that business goodwill so attached can be treated or spoken of as being otherwise than locally situate in Germany.

The cases referred to in the Divisional Court and in the Court of Appeal have been so completely disposed of by each of the Lords Justices that I do not feel it necessary to say more about them; both are distinguishable from the present, even if rightly decided.

I think the judgment of the Divisional Court was rightly reversed by the Court of Appeal, and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Lord ROBERTSON.—I am bound to say, on the main question argued, that my judgment, which is against the appellants, is dependent on a fact which does not appear in the stated case; but the learned Attorney-General argued upon the assumption that it is true as stated by the respondents' solicitor in their letter of the 14th of December, 1897 (in answer to a categorical question of the Board of Inland Revenue), that "the whole of the regular customers [of Muller] are resident within the country in which Gildehaus is situate—namely, Germany, and that there is no trade whatever transacted outside the latter country." Now when this is taken along with the fact that the manufactory and, so far as appears, the office were at Gildehaus, the case is, so far as facts are concerned, as compact and free from complication as any case could be which gives rise to the present question. So far as the seat of trade and so far as the trade itself are concerned, everything is out of the United Kingdom, and of nothing connected with the trade can it be predicated in any sense whatever that it was not out of the United Kingdom.

This consideration seems to me to lift the present case clean over such questions and phrases as whether the goodwill is attached or affixed to the manufactory. I do not accede to the view that the goodwill is affixed or attached to the manufactory. Supposing that the products of the manufactory were all exported to England and sold to English customers, I should find it difficult to hold that the goodwill was out of England merely because the manufactory was. The application of the words "locally situate" would then present a difficult question, requiring, I should think, a different answer. Again, if the facts as to the distribution of the products were more complicated, as, for example, if the trade were diffused over England and other countries, then the location of the goodwill would be a more complex, although I do not by any means think an insoluble problem.

I confess I find no repugnancy in affirming of the goodwill of a business that it is locally situate somewhere. It is, I should say, locally situate within the geographical limits which comprehend the seat of the trade and the trade. That sounds like a very cautious statement, and fortunately it is enough for the present question. It seems to me that in the statute the distinction drawn is between what, from a British point of view, we should call British property and foreign property; and the goodwill of a business which begins and ends abroad is, I think, property locally situate outside the United Kingdom. I think it right to add that the Smelting Co. of Australia (Limited) v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 45 W. R. 203, [1897] 1 Q. B. 175, although not a case of goodwill, would fall within the principle of my present judgment, and I respectfully consider it to have been decided on too narrow a view.

On the point as to the place of the execution of the agreement I have nothing to add.

Lord LINDLEY.—Before addressing myself to the main controversy in this case I will say a few words on one or two minor points arising on the construction of section 59 of the Stamp Act, 1891.

It was said that the agreement for sale in this case was not made in England, because the selling company signed it abroad and the purchasing company signed it in this country. Until the purchasing company signed it there was no written agreement, but only an offer to sell. The document was made complete as a contract for sale by what was done in this country, and I have no doubt therefore that section 59 applied to it.

Then comes the question whether the word "property" in the exception is confined to real property or extends also to personal property. In my opinion it includes personal property. Property is used in the widest possible sense in the earlier part of the section, and it appears to me to be used in the same sense when repeated in the exception. The words "lands, tenements, and hereditaments" themselves exhaust real property, and the introduction after them of the word "property" shows that something more is to be expected. Nothing more can be suggested which is ejusdem generis, and nothing but personal property remains. Upon this point my own opinion coincides with that of Rigby, L.J., in the case of the Smelting Co. of Australia.

But even if the word "property" in the exception extends to corporeal personal property which can have a local situation, it is contended that incorporeal property such as goodwill cannot be said to be locally situate anywhere, and cannot therefore fall within the exception. This is the main contention of the appellants. It is necessary to deal with it, as it has not been contended that goods, wares, and merchandise cover goodwill; and if goodwill is to be excepted it must be because it is property locally situate abroad.

Goodwill regarded as property has no meaning except in connection with some trade, business, or calling. In that connection I understand the word to include whatever adds value to a business by reason of situation, name and reputation, connection, introduction to old customers, and agreed absence from competition, or any of these things, and there may be others which do not occur to me. In this wide sense goodwill is inseparable from the business to which it adds value, and, in my opinion, exists when the business is carried on. Such business may be carried on in one place or country, or in several, and if in several there may be several businesses, each having a goodwill of its own.

That in some cases and to some extent goodwill can and must be considered as having a distinct locality is obvious, and was not in fact disputed. The goodwill of a public-house or of a retail shop is an instance. The goodwill of a business usually adds value to the land or house in which it is carried on if sold with the business; and so far as the goodwill adds value to land or buildings, the goodwill can only be regarded as situate where they are. In such a case the goodwill is said to be annexed to them.

This consideration alone would, in my opinion, suffice for the determination of this case, for the factory, business, and goodwill were all sold together for a lump sum, and I do not myself see why the goodwill should be dealt with as having value apart from the factory. But even if the goodwill in the case before us can be properly regarded as to some extent separable from the factory, I still think it must be treated as locally situate abroad.

The goodwill sought to be taxed is that of a manufacturer of margarine. His business was to manufacture and sell. His factory was in Germany, the owner was a German living in Germany, he had no agency or place of business abroad, his customers were all in Germany, and his business, so far as selling was concerned, was a wholesale and not a retail business. He covenanted not to carry on business within fifty miles of the old place. If, therefore, the goodwill of a wholesale manufacturer can be regarded as situate anywhere, the goodwill in this case can only be regarded as situate in Germany. Not one of its elements is or can possibly be regarded as situate anywhere else. The contention for the Crown was that some part of the goodwill—namely, such part of it as did not simply enhance the value of the land and buildings of the factory—could not be regarded as situate anywhere, and was therefore liable to stamp duty. This view, if sound, would be very embarrassing to buyers and sellers, who have to see that they stamp their agreements properly. But the view contended for is, in my opinion, quite untenable.

Goodwill is only taxable as property; and the legal conception of property appears to me to involve the legal conception of existence somewhere. Incorporeal property has no existence in nature, and has, physically speaking, no locality at all. We, however, are dealing, not with anything which in fact fills a portion of space, but with a legal conception, or, in other words, with rights regarded as property. But to talk of property as existing nowhere is to use language which to me is unintelligible.

The authorities which bear upon the locality of incorporeal personal property for purposes of probate appear to me to afford the best guides for the solution of the case before us. Those cases tend strongly to shew that, for purposes of probate, goodwill, except so far as it merely enhances the value of lands and hereditaments, must be regarded as personal property situate somewhere; and if this were a probate case I do not suppose that anyone would say that the goodwill with which we have to deal would be regarded as in any sense situate in this country. Commissioners of Stamps v. Hope, [1891] A. C. 476, 40 W. R. Dig. 162, in which the locality of debts for probate purposes is considered, contains some valuable general remarks on the subject, but there is nothing in that case which conflicts with the view I take of this goodwill.

It may perhaps be true that property which has no physical existence may, if necessary, be treated for some purposes in one locality and for other purposes in some other locality. But until the necessity for so treating it is apparent I see no justification for introducing confusion by judicially holding the same property to be legally situate in two different places at one and the same time. But this confusion would be introduced if your lordships were to decide that the analogy of probate cases was to be no guide in dealing with liability to stamp duty.

I am not aware of any case in which goodwill, as property, has been treated as having no locality for legal purposes. Smelting Co. of Australia v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, so much relied upon by counsel for the Crown, was not a case of goodwill at all. The property then in question was not the goodwill of a business, but a share in an Australian patent, and a licence to use the same in Australia. This share and licence belonged to an English registered company, which agreed to sell it to another English company, and the question was whether the instrument of agreement required a stamp. The court decided that the share and licence were property, and came within the first part of section 59, clause 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891. But they held that such property could not be regarded as locally situate abroad. Lord Esher and Lopes, L.J., considered that incorporeal personal property could not be said to be situate anywhere. This is, of course, true physically speaking, but not, I think, in contemplation of law. Rigby, L.J., did not adopt the reasoning of the other members of the court. He referred to the probate decisions; but he considered that as the property was saleable and sold in this country it could not be regarded as locally situate out of it. I am not myself able to adopt this conclusion arrived at by Rigby, L.J. Any property situate anywhere can be agreed to be sold or purport to be sold in any other country, and the test of locality relied upon by the Lord Justice was not, I think, the true one. The patent was not assignable without registration in Australia, and the view of the Lord Justice is, I think, opposed to Attorney-General v. Dimond, 1 Cr. & J. 356, the case of French Rentes. Be this as it may, in the Australian patent case the court was not dealing with the goodwill of a foreign manufacturing business, and it would be wrong, I think, to treat the decision as governing the case before us.

In my opinion the decision appealed from ought to be affirmed, and the appeal be dismissed with costs.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—I regret to say I am unable to concur in the view which has found favour with your lordships in this case.

The goodwill of the business is what the word itself expresses, although the concurrence of so many of your lordships leads me to doubt what I should otherwise have had no doubt upon. The advantages which may be conferred upon a business either by its local situation or by its attractive appearance have nothing to do with the goodwill, although they may have originally contributed to procure it, and may to some extent be connected with the nature of the business, which itself, however, is a different thing. "The goodwill thereof" is a thing which can be assumed to exist separately. Like every other thing which suggests one simple idea it is difficult, if not impossible, to define it. The right to trade under the name of a firm which has acquired a reputation is not confined to a particular locality or to any particular premises. The right would remain if the business were transferred to another site elsewhere, or if the premises were entirely altered. In the case of a public-house, owing to the convenience of its situation and its being known as a favourite place of resort, the advantages of its situation are so mixed up with the goodwill of the business that as a matter of fact it may well be that it is very difficult to sever them and to say how much is goodwill and how much is local situation. But these difficulties of fact will not necessarily make their separate existence possible. In compensation cases, for instance, where a man is being turned out of his holding and has to be put into the same position so far as compensation can do it, by money which is to be awarded to him, it is unnecessary to regard any such severance into the different elements which make up the advantages of his holding. He is to be compensated for the loss which he has sustained by the alteration of his premises or the removal of his trade from those premises and for the extent to which his business may be injured under the circumstances, and it would be quite unnecessary to consider how much he is to be allowed for each element, because he is, so far as the tribunal can do it, to be placed in the same position as he was in before. The illustrations which are given of businesses—for instance, the business of a local newspaper—seem to me not to touch the question. It may be very probable that in such a case there would be no goodwill of the business, or very little, but the mere fact that the business was practically or altogether local would not make the goodwill of the business simply local unless by the contract of sale it was confined to a particular spot. In the particular case now under review the vendors would not be entitled to come to this country and set up a business here under that name and claim the goodwill of customers who might have been brought together in Germany. The right to the goodwill was absolutely transferred to the vendees here. I think if, in order to ascertain what would be the rights of the parties, one looked at the contract apart from any question arising as to the limit of fifty miles, one would see that the thing transferred was the goodwill of that business, whatever it consists of; that would be in every part of the world. The question whether it would be worth the while of the parties to transfer it is a question quite beside that which in point of law constitutes goodwill. I am wholly unable to see that goodwill itself is susceptible of having any local situation.

In my opinion, therefore, the judgment of the Court of Appeal ought to be reversed; but as the majority of your lordships take a different view, of course the appeal will be dismissed, and the judgment of the Court of Appeal affirmed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for appellants, F. C. Gore, Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Solicitor for respondents, H. A. Graham.

From C. A. (England). April 25.

MERSEY DOCKS AND HARBOUR BOARD v. BIRKENHEAD UNION ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE. (a.)

Poor law—Rating—Lairages—Profit-earning capacity—Evidence of receipts and expenditure—Admissibility of evidence—Principle of assessment.

In the assessment of premises to the poor rate the duty which the Legislature has imposed upon the overseers is to ascertain, as a matter of fact, what sum a tenant will reasonably give for them by the year, making the usual deductions. In ascertaining this sum the circumstances of the particular occupation, also the receipts and expenditure, are legitimate objects for consideration.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (48 W. R. 259, [1900] 1 Q. B. 143) affirmed.

Appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (A. L. Smith, Collins, and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.), 48 W. R. 259, [1900] 1 Q. B. 143, affirming the decision of a Divisional Court (Lawrance and Channell, JJ.), on a case stated by the quarter sessions at Birkenhead.

The case is given at length in the report below, where the authorities are also collected.

The appellants were in occupation of certain lairages which were the only places in the neighbourhood at which foreign cattle could be landed except under penalties; these lairages were erected and worked by the appellants under statutory powers.

In ascertaining the rental value of these premises their profit-earning capacity and evidence of the receipts and expenditure of the appellants in carrying on the business were taken into consideration.

The Court of Appeal held that the assessment was properly made.

Asquith, K.C., and Marshall, K.C. (Horridge, K.C., with them), for the appellants.

Pickford, K.C., A. A. Tobin, and R. M. Montgomery, for the respondents, were not heard.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—In this case it appears to me, for reasons which have been given by the Court of Appeal and the subsequent explanation of the learned recorder, that this appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

I cannot help thinking that a great deal of the hesitation and confusion which has arisen upon the subject-matter which your lordships have heard debated now on the part of the appellants has arisen from the advisory character of the judgments which have been given from time to time by the various courts before whom this question has come.

The thing that the Legislature has called upon the overseers to do is to solve a simple question of fact; and although it may be by no means simple in the mode in which they are to arrive at it, the question of fact is simple enough as stated—that is to say, they are to look at the rent at which the annual value of the several hereditaments rated thereunto might reasonably be expected to let from year to year, free of all usual tenant's rates and taxes, and tithe commutation rent-charge, if any, and deducting therefrom the probable average cost of the repairs, insurance, and other expenses, if any, necessary to maintain them in a state to command such rent.

That is the proposition which is put for the parish officers, which they have to answer, and they are to arrive at the value, so far as I know, unfettered by any statute as to the way in which they can do it.

Now I am not aware of any rule of law or of any statute which has limited them as to the mode in which they shall arrive at it, and it is not a question of law at all—it is a question of fact.

These questions have from time to time come before the courts, and have been argued as questions of law, where, instead of doing what the section has directed them to do, the overseers, or those who were acting on the part of the parish, have thought proper either to include something which by law ought not to be included, or to exclude something which ought to have been included; and, of course, in that sense, where you are dealing with a question of fact which has to be answered by any tribunal, it may be that the question has come up in the argument as a matter of law; but still one must bear in mind that the thing to be done is to answer a plain question of fact: What is the rent which a tenant, subject to the deductions mentioned in the statute, can reasonably be expected to give for the premises as a tenant from year to year?

The first part of the proposition is that you are to rate—what?—Not the tenant's trade. Some questions arise, which I will deal with presently to see how they arise, as to whether you are to go into the question of profit and loss. They are excluded by the language from the statute. You are to rate the premises according to their value. Therefore it would be very wrong indeed to rate the trade as if you were dealing with it as a question for income tax. You are not rating the income; you are rating the premises. So that where you have premises of a similar character with equal facilities for carrying on the trade, you have a very facile mode of coming to the conclusion what sum would reasonably be given by a tenant from year to year for such premises. But if, instead of doing that, you choose to go into elaborate calculations of how much the thing cost to erect, and when erected what would be the value of it, you are only elaborating and making more complex and difficult the simple proposition which the Legislature has put before the overseers to answer. From time to time observations have been made by some learned judges saying this should have been done, and the other should not have been done, but that was not as pronouncing judgments upon the law of evidence as to whether or not such and such a topic was legitimate or not to arrive at the conclusion which the Legislature have directed them to arrive at, but what was the ordinary and natural means of arriving at the conclusion which they were bound to arrive at.

I am more anxious to point this out because I think in these later days we got rid of a good many of these sources of confusion. The advisory character, as I have said, of the judgments given by the courts to quarter sessions have no doubt led to words being used not in the strict sense, but as matters of advice to the justices in determining such questions, and sometimes they have been printed in the law reports as if they were decisions upon the law of evidence in this country.

I protest against any such view, and in this very case, although, as I say, during the last half-century we have arrived at conclusions which get rid of a great deal of the confusion which at one time existed, I find that the learned judge, Channell, J., uses a phrase which I am afraid I cannot assent to—namely, that wherever you can arrive at it by comparing it with similar tenements you are bound to arrive at it in that way. If that means that is the facile and proper way of doing it, I should agree; but if it is laid down as a proposition of law that that is the means by which it can be arrived at, I venture to say I do not assent to that view.

Again, I find that Collins, L.J., in the same way

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

says: "Hence the rule that in ordinary cases, when the standard of rent is applicable, evidence of actual profits made cannot be received. But it is equally true that when no such standard of comparison exists, it is legitimate to inquire into the profits actually earned."

Again, I am compelled to say that I cannot concur with the form in which that proposition is put. It is not a question of deciding what, according to the law of evidence, is receivable, but what is the more natural and ordinary and usual mode by which you can answer the proposition put by the Legislature to the overseers.

The proposition appears to me a very intelligible one if unclouded by all these questions which from time to time have been raised by ingenious persons; and at the expense of the parishes a good many academic questions have been discussed. You are to find out what a tenant will reasonably give, looking at all the circumstances of the particular occupation, including therein the business that might be done on the premises; and I think I had occasion to say in a former case that it would be a very extraordinary thing if, although you can give evidence by expert testimony as to what kind of business might be done, you are not at liberty in point of law to ascertain what business has been done. It seems to me that no such proposition could reasonably be maintained. If, on the other hand, to go into the account of profits and losses, if you are finding out what a man's income is, would not be irrelevant, so for the purpose of ascertaining what a tenant would be likely to give, to suggest that that is something which in point of law you have no right to inquire into is absurd.

If all the circumstances of the particular occupation, the mode in which the trade was carried on, and if the circumstances either of restriction or of amplitude of the trade are all legitimate subjects of inquiry, the only question of law is whether the particular tribunal has followed the line I have indicated.

Surely those who are complaining of what has been done by the tribunal must establish either that something has been excluded from the calculation which by law ought to be included, or that something has been included which by law ought not to have been included, because the proposition is a proposition of fact, and the only mode in which you get in a question of law at all is as to the mode in which that proposition of fact has been dealt with.

Let me see, in that view, what it is that the learned recorder has done. I must take the recorder's own statement of what he has done, and how he has applied his mind to the topics which I have stated are legitimate topics—the topics to which he has been directed to apply his mind by the Legislature: "I did not assess the rate upon the profits of the tenant, but I used them together with other evidence to test the values given by the appellants and respondents respectively. Having taken into consideration all the evidence before me as to the actual receipts and expenditure of the occupiers who carried on the business, the nature of the business and the chances of its permanence, the structural value of the buildings, the value of the land, and all the surrounding circumstances, I came to the conclusion that the gross values given by the respondents were too low, but I felt that I had no power in this appeal to put them up." Upon that no question arises before your lordships. "I therefore accepted these values as the nearest to the true gross values I could arrive at, and proceeded to determine the amount of the deductions to be made therefrom, in order to arrive at the net annual values by a consideration of the evidence before me, most of which was given by the appellants."

Now, when we are dealing with it as a question of law, the limits to which I have pointed being whether in arriving at this conclusion of fact anything wrong has been done either by way of inclusion or exclusion —when I read that, how is it possible to say that what the recorder here has done is wrong? What abstract proposition of law can be laid down to say that the learned recorder was wrong?

I have nothing to do with the question of amount. He may be or may not be wrong in the particular amount he has arrived at, but that is not a question of law. The question of law is whether upon any of these statements of fact you can say he has included anything which he ought not to have included, or has excluded something which he should have included. Upon that statement of fact it is hopeless to contend that either of those propositions can be made out, and I therefore move your lordships that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I am of the same opinion.

Lord SHAND.—I also concur, and adopt all that has been said by the Lord Chancellor in giving judgment.

Lord DAVEY.—I am of the same opinion. I only desire to say a very few words upon what I understood to be Mr. Asquith's argument upon this case, or at all events the chief argument he put forward. If I understood Mr. Asquith rightly, his argument was this—that he did not say as an abstract proposition that profits made from the use of the hereditament ought not to be taken into account generally, but he argued that they ought not to be taken into account in this particular case, because by statute the occupier of the hereditament was precluded from putting those profits, or the produce of carrying on this business on this hereditament, into his own pocket for his own advantage and the enhancement of his own wealth, but was bound to apply those profits in the particular mode pointed out by the statute in reducing the debt, and so forth.

Now I think that argument is answered by the case which was decided in this House in the year 1865 of Jones v. Mersey Docks, 13 W. R. 1069, 11 H. L. Cas. 443, because in that case, although it is quite true that the question which was put to the learned judges by the House, and the question which was decided, was whether the hereditament was rateable at all, yet in answering that question ex necessitate the consideration of the question was involved, upon what basis the rating should be, because the argument used was that there was no beneficial occupation, and it was held to be rateable because there was a beneficial occupation.

I conceive that in principle and impliedly, as I think has been held in subsequent cases which have come before the courts, what was really decided was that, notwithstanding the restriction upon the application of the profits resulting from carrying on that business on that hereditament, the profits so derived were a legitimate element in arriving at the value of the beneficial occupation which was to be the subject of rating. I think that that is put beyond controversy in a passage in the judgment of Blackburn, J., as he then was, in advising the House on behalf of himself and the other judges. He said this: "Whichever may be the true mode of enunciating the position, it is clear that there can be no valid rate unless the occupation be such as to be of value; and if the words beneficial occupation are to be understood as merely signifying that the occupation is of value (which is obviously the sense in which the phrase is used in many of the cases cited at the bar), it is clear that a beneficial occupation is essential as the foundation of the rate; but it is equally clear that, if the phrase is to be understood in this limited sense, the trustees have a beneficial occupation, for they actually occupy lands as docks, and in virtue of that occupation receive payments from the shipping using the docks; at present greatly in excess of what is necessary to maintain the docks." Every word of that is applicable. "Hereafter the charges on shipping may be reduced so as greatly to diminish the revenue derived from this occupation; possibly at some future time to render it no greater than the sum requisite to maintain the docks; but whilst the dues on shipping are maintained at their present rate, it is clear that the hypothetical tenant would give for the occupancy of the docks as at present enjoyed by the trustees a rent greatly in excess of what would be necessary to maintain the docks in a state to command that rent." And Lord Westbury in moving the judgment of the House, after referring to the Parochial Assessment Act, which he quoted as saying "that 'occupation' must be of property yielding or capable of yielding a net annual value," and so forth, continued: "It is in this sense that I understand the words 'beneficial occupation,' wherever it is said that to support a rate the occupation must be a beneficial one. For on principle it is by no means necessary that the occupation should be beneficial to the occupiers"; or, in other words, it is perfectly immaterial what becomes of the amount which is the result of carrying on the business on the hereditament, after paying the expenses and other outgoings; whether it is applied for the purpose of public uses, whether it is applied for the payment of debt and other charges, as in the present case, or whether it goes into the pocket of the occupiers.

What you have to look at is, whether the occupation is beneficial in the sense in which the term is used in that passage; and I conceive, if the principles there laid down are adopted (although I admit that the question was not then before the House upon what principle the rate should be made), they are applicable to the case which is now before us, and, as it appears to me, that is a complete answer to the argument which Mr. Asquith addressed to us.

Lord ROBERTSON and Lord LINDLEY concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for appellants, Rowcliffes, Rawle, Johnston, & Gregory, for W. C. Thorne, Liverpool.

Solicitors for respondents, J. B. & H. Scott, for Thompson, Hughes, & Mathison, Birkenhead.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ.) — June 11.

HUMPHRYS v. POLLAK. (a.)

Contract—Infant—Illegitimate child—Contract to relieve mother for ever of all liability—Validity.

By a contract made between the plaintiff and the defendants, in consideration that the plaintiff, who was the mother of an illegitimate child, would place and allow the child to remain in the defendants' possession, the defendants promised to maintain and bring up the child as though she were the defendants' child, and for ever to relieve the plaintiff from all liability and responsibility in connection with the bringing up of the child. The child was placed in the defendants' possession and maintained by them for some months, when they refused to maintain her any longer. In an action by the plaintiff to recover damages for breach of contract,

Held, that the contract was one which the law would not enforce.

Appeal from an order of Day, J., at chambers striking out the statement of claim and dismissing the action as frivolous and vexatious.

The statement of claim was as follows:

"1. The plaintiff is a single woman and the mother of an illegitimate female child called Ivy.

"2. On or about Saturday, the 14th day of July, 1900, in consideration that the plaintiff would place in and leave in their possession the said child for the period of one month on trial, and in the event after the expiration of the said month of the defendants' approving the said child and determining to keep her the plaintiff would still allow her to remain in the defendants' possession after the expiration of the said month the defendants promised and agreed with the plaintiff to maintain and bring up the said child as though she were the defendants' child and for ever to relieve the plaintiff from all liability and responsibility in connection with the bringing up of the said child.

"3. The plaintiff, on the faith of the said agreement, placed and left the said child in the possession of the defendants for the period of one month on trial, and after the expiration of the said month the defendants approved the said child and determined to keep her, and the plaintiff continued on the faith of the said agreement to allow the said child to remain in the possession of the defendants and was always ready and willing in pursuance of the said agreement to allow the said child to remain in their possession, yet the defendants by letter dated the 28th of November, 1900, refused any longer to maintain the said child.

"4. The plaintiff, by reason of the defendants' said breach of agreement, has been and will be put to expense in maintaining her said child."

Then followed particulars of the expenses up to date.

Day, J., affirming the order of the master, struck out the statement of claim, under ord. 25, r. 4, as disclosing no reasonable cause of action, and dismissed the action as frivolous and vexatious.

The plaintiff appealed.

H. J. Turrell, for the plaintiff.—The statement of claim discloses a good cause of action. It may be assumed for the purposes of the argument that the rights of a mother over her illegitimate child are the same as over her legitimate child. The mother has imposed on her obligations which bring with them corresponding rights: Barnardo v. McHugh, 40 W. R. 97, [1891] A. C. 388; Reg. v. Gyngall, [1893] 2 Q. B. 232. But the mother, by this contract, does not seek to get rid of any of those obligations. The mother has a perfect right to make an agreement with another person that the latter shall maintain the child. There is nothing against public policy or illegal in such a contract. The mother does not by it get rid of or seek to shift upon another person her obligation to maintain the child. That is the contract which the plaintiff has made in the present case, and the mother can claim damages for breach of it. At any rate, the court will not stop the action at this stage in this summary way.

He also cited In re Lloyd, 3 Man. & G. 547; Reg. v. Nash, 31 W. R. 420, 10 Q. B. D. 454.

Montague Lush, for the defendant.—This action is not maintainable. It is against public policy to allow a mother by contract to relieve herself "for ever" from the obligations which the law imposes on her with respect to her illegitimate child. The contract is against public policy. Moreover, there is no consideration for the contract. The defendants have got nothing by it. They have a right to the child only as long as the mother chooses to leave it with them.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Turrell replied.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—In my opinion the order of Day, J., is right. I do not at all say that there might not be an arrangement by which the parent, when going, say, abroad, could entrust the care of the child to some person who would undertake it, and I have no doubt that if that were done for a consideration, and there was a breach of that undertaking, an action would lie. We have not to decide any abstract question here, but merely whether this statement of claim discloses a reasonable cause of action or not. To my mind it is clear that it does not. The statement of claim in its earlier part alleges that in consideration that the plaintiff would place the child in the defendants' possession for one month on trial, and, in the event of the defendants determining to keep the child, to allow her to remain in the defendants' possession after the expiration of the month, the defendants promised, &c. Pausing there, that seems to me a little vague. Does it mean that the plaintiff is to allow the child to remain in the defendants' possession for ever, or until the child attains the age of sixteen years, or for how long? I should have thought that that was an illegal consideration for the mother to give, because it might be contrary to the interests of the child to remain with the defendants. I need not, however, inquire as to the exact meaning of those words, because the statement of claim goes on to state the promise on the part of the defendants the breach of which is complained of. The words are: "The defendants promised and agreed with the plaintiff to maintain and bring up the said child as though she were the defendants' child, and for ever to relieve the plaintiff from all liability and responsibility in connection with the bringing up of the said child." That seems to me to be clearly a promise which cannot be enforced. The moment one arrives at the conclusion that the mother owes a duty to the child, in other words, has a responsibility towards it, a promise by anyone to relieve her from that duty and responsibility cannot be enforced in a court of law. Has, then, the mother a duty towards towards the child. In spite of the observation of Maule, J., in In re Lloyd, in my opinion at common law the mother owes a duty to her illegitimate child, for the legislation upon the subject has not created the duty, but merely recognizes and defines it. However that may be the series of statutes beginning with the Poor Law Act, 1834 (4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76), s. 71, do impose a duty on the mother of an illegitimate child. The statement of claim in the present case is based upon the assumption that the mother can divest herself of that duty. In my opinion she cannot do so, and the statement of claim discloses no cause of action.

STIRLING, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The statement of claim alleges that in consideration that the plaintiff, the mother of an illegitimate child, would allow the child to remain in the defendants' possession, the defendants promised and agreed with the plaintiff to maintain and bring up the child as though she were the defendants' child, "and for ever to relieve the plaintiff from all liability and responsibility in connection with the bringing up of the said child." Now it is clear from the opinion of House of Lords in Barnardo v. McHugh that the mother of an illegitimate child is subject to certain obligations in regard to it, and by reason of those obligations she is invested with certain rights, one of which is the right to the custody and maintenance of the child. That right is given to the mother to enable her to discharge the duties imposed in respect of the child, and for the benefit of the child. That being so, it seems to me to be impossible for a mother to divest herself of those rights in favour of another person. The contract in the present case is that the child is to remain in the possession of the defendants, for the purpose of enabling the defendants to treat the child as if it were their own child, and for ever to relieve the mother from all liability and responsibility in conection with its bringing up. By the contract therefore the defendants undertake the duties of the mother, and take the benefits arising from those duties. That is a contract which the law will not enforce.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Seeley & Son.

Solicitors for the defendants, Bower & Parkes.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Cozens-Hardy, J. — March 2, 16; April 27.

HARRISON v. HARRISON. (a.)

Will—Construction—Life interests—Gift over—"Survivors"—Intestacy.

A testator settled shares in his business upon his three sons A., B., and C. respectively for life with remainder to their children who should attain twenty-one or marry, and in case either of the said sons should die and "no child or other issue of such of them so dying shall acquire a vested interest in the shares hereby settled upon them respectively under the trusts or powers aforesaid," then the share of such son or sons "shall be held for the benefit of the survivor or survivors of them, my said sons."

A. and B. died before C. They left issue. C. died leaving no issue.

Held, that there was an intestacy as to C.'s share.

The third rule in In re Bowman, 37 W. R. 583, dissented from.

Hodge v. Foot, 34 Beav. 349; In re Arnold's Trusts, 18 W. R. 912; and In re Walker, 28 W. R. 91, considered.

This was a petition by the sole trustee of the will of Benson Harrison, sen., to determine who, upon the proper construction of the said will, became entitled upon the death of Benson Harrison, jun., to personal estate, in which under the said will the said B. Harrison, jun., was entitled to a life interest.

Benson Harrison, sen., died on the 25th of November, 1863. By his will dated the 5th of March, 1859, and subsequent codicils, he bequeathed his eight and a-half shares in the business of Harrison, Ainslie, & Co., to trustees upon trust to carry on and manage and conduct the said business in conjunction with the other partners, and as to three and one-half shares to hold "for all or such one or more exclusively of the others or other of the children or remoter issue of my said son Matthew Benson Harrison (such issue to be born in his lifetime) at such age or time or respective ages or times, if more than one, in such shares and with such future executory or other trusts for the benefit of the said children or issue, or some or one of them, with such restrictions and in such manner as my said son M. B. Harrison shall by any deed or deeds, sealed and delivered, with or without power of revocation and new appointment, or by will or codicil and extending past the hamlet of Monkswood and other parishes to a red post at the lower end of a place called Redlands Pool.

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister at-Law.

He had let the fishery to the Usk Fishery Association, who granted tickets or licences to their members and others to use the fishery, and to walk along the banks of the river for the purpose.

The defendant had lately become the owner and occupier of land called Pont Sand Pit situate upon the left bank of the river, and extending from a mile below Usk Bridge for about 700 yards down towards Redlands Pool, and his land thus adjoined part of the river over which the several fishery was claimed.

He disputed the right of the plaintiff to the several fishery, and to the right of way in question, and claimed to fish, and did fish, in the half of the stream adjoining his land. He also took some steps to prevent the licensees of the association from coming upon his land to fish.

The plaintiff thereupon brought this action claiming (1) a declaration that he was entitled to the bed of the river from Maen-y-Wrath to Redlands Pool, and to the several fishery therein, and to a right of way along the banks of the river within the limits aforesaid for the purpose of fishing; and (2) an injunction to restrain the defendant from fishing, or from hindering the enjoyment by the plaintiff, his lessees and licensees, of the several fishery.

The plaintiff's title to the fishery commenced with a lease of the 1st of September, 1516, granted by King Henry VIII. to the Earl of Worcester (the original being in Latin) of "our fishery in our waters or rivers of Uske and Seyn, in our lordship of Uske and Caerleon, and the members of the same lordships, parcel of our Earl of March, and all our weirs (gurgites) in and upon the waters or rivers aforesaid, and in every of them, and all and singular profits of and in the waters or rivers aforesaid, and of and in the weirs aforesaid, in anywise arising, accruing, and to us in anywise belonging," followed by a grant of the manor of Wondy (which was situate upon the left bank of the river), and of certain other lands, the whole to be held for twenty years, at a certain rent. Subsequent documents, and especially a survey made in A.D. 1652 of the Crown possessions, showed that the fishery so leased extended between the limits claimed by the plaintiff. Successive leases of the property were subsequently granted to the Earls of Worcester, or the Dukes of Beaufort (as they subsequently became), and later to the Hanburys and the Leighs, till in March, 1839, the Crown granted it in fee to Mr. Capel Hanbury Leigh, the then lessee, through whom the plaintiff claimed.

As showing that the plaintiff could not have the several fishery which he claimed, the defendant gave evidence to show that there were other fisheries existing in that part of the river, though these other fisheries did not exist in any part of the river opposite the defendant's lands, being, at least as regards two of them, above the bridge of Usk. One was called the Monkswood fishery, and belonged to the Duke of Beaufort, as was alleged under a grant of confirmation from the Earl of Pembroke in March, 1223, to the abbey of Tintern; and Mr. Page, a record expert, was called and gave evidence obtained in his searches as to the early history of this fishery. Another of these fisheries was the Trostrey fishery, which was found mentioned in a minister's account of the year 1546-7. A third fishery was the Edlogan fishery, which was said to be held with the manor of Edlogan, which belonged to the plaintiff.

The defendant also brought evidence to show that the owners or occupiers along the river had exercised acts of ownership over it in various ways, as by driving stakes into the bed for the purpose of preventing erosion of the banks (a process known as "goretting"), by taking from the bed of the river gravel brought down in flood time, and by erecting fences a short distance within the water, forming a pen, to prevent cattle who went down to drink from straying along the river.

The learned judge found that the right of way had been in fact exercised along the fisherman's path over the Pont Sand Pit land for at least fifty-seven years previously.

Neville, K.C., Ingpen, K.C., and P. S. Stokes, for the plaintiff.—The plaintiff has a several fishery in the river, and must consequently be presumed to own the bed of the river: Hindson v. Ashby, 45 W. R. 252, [1896] 2 Ch. 1, at p. 11; Ecroyd v. Coulthard, 46 W. R. 119, [1897] 2 Ch. 554, 570; Attorney-General v. Emerson, [1891] A. C. 649, 40 W. R. Dig. 90. He also owns the bed by virtue of the grant of the weirs (gurgites), as that carries the soil of the river not only where they are erected, but also of that part of the river for the fishing of which they are used: see Hale in De Jure Maris, ch. 5; Willes, J., in Malcomson v. O'Dea, 12 W. R. 178, 10 H. L. Cas. 593, p. 619; and Lord Selborne in Neill v. Duke of Devonshire, 31 W. R. 622, 8 App. Cas. 143. The plaintiff claims the right of way along the banks as appendant or appurtenant to the bed of the river. If the court should be of opinion that he does not own the bed, then he claims the right of way as appurtenant to the several fishery. Coke's dictum, Co. Litt. 121*b*, that an incorporeal hereditament cannot be appurtenant to an incorporeal hereditament is not good law, and the passage is unintelligible. The only question is whether the two are or are not incongruous, as stated in the note of Messrs. Hargrave and Butler to the passage. Nothing can be more congruous than the right of way here claimed and the several fishery. The acts of the adjoining owners in taking gravel, driving in stakes &c., were done either upon sufferance or for the purpose of preventing the banks being washed away.

Warmington, K.C., H. Terrell, K.C. and A. J. Allen, for the defendant.—The plaintiff's claim is to have a several fishery up to Maen-y-Wrath. This is disproved by the existence of the other fisheries in that part of the river. A several fishery is the exclusive right of fishing, and therefore cannot co-exist with another several fishery: Holford v. Bailey, 13 Q. B. D. 426. It is proper to consider the existence of these other fisheries, although above Pont Sand Pit, with reference to the rights of plaintiff: Jones v. Williams, 2 M. & W. 326. Moreover, the grants of the plaintiff do not give him a several fishery, but only a fishery. He has at most only a free fishery. A grant of a fishing water cannot pass the soil: Co. Litt. L. 1, c. 1, s. 1, 4*b*. The acts of the adjoining owners (among other things) show that the plaintiff does not own the bed of the river. He does not, then, claim a right of way as appurtenant to any land, and it cannot be claimed as appurtenant to a several fishery, as an easement must be claimed as appurtenant to land. Coke's dictum already cited is good law, and there is no case to the contrary. A several fishery, for instance, cannot be claimed as appurtenant to a right of pasturage: see judgments of Willes, J., and Brett, J., in Edgar v. Commissioners of Fisheries, 23 L. T. Rep. 732, 19 W. R. C. L. Dig. 33.

They also referred to Smith v. Andrews, [1891] 2 Ch. 678, 40 W. R. Dig. 90.

Neville in reply.—The word "several" is not necessary to the grant of a several fishery. It occurred in neither of the grants in the cases of Malcomson v. O'Dea and Neill v. Duke of Devonshire. The words here "Our fishery in our waters of Uske" are apt and proper words for the grant. As to the other fisheries above Pont Sand Pit, they may coexist with the plaintiff's fishery: Seymour v. Lord Courtenay, 5 Burr. 2814. But, if not, and if the Crown could not grant the plaintiff's predecessors a several fishery above the town of Usk, the grant would be good as regards the river adjoining Pont Sand Pit, as the grant would operate to pass what the Crown was able to grant: see the judgment of Lord Selborne in Neill v. Duke of Devonshire, 31 W. R. 622, at p. 624, 8 App. Cas., p. 153.

BUCKLEY, J.—I think the plaintiff is entitled to whatever was originally granted by the Crown in 1516, and the first question is, What was the subject of the grant? The plaintiff claims a several fishery. A several fishery means the exclusive right to fish in a given place: Malcomson v. O'Dea; Holford v. Bailey. It may exist either apart from, or as incident to, the ownership of the soil over which the river flows. But since Attorney-General v. Emerson it must be taken as settled that where a several fishery is proved to exist the owner of the fishery is presumed to be the owner of the soil unless there is evidence to the contrary, whether the river is a navigable one (Hindson v. Ashby), or neither public nor navigable: Foster v. Wright, 4 C. P. D. 438, and Ecroyd v. Coulthard. Now did the grant pass a several fishery, and as a result the bed of the river? And again, did the bed of the river pass under the grant of "the weirs," with the result of giving the grantee the several fishery over the river as owner of the bed? As regards the second question the word used in the grant of 1516 and the subsequent deeds is "gurgites." As to this Hale says, in his De Jure Maris, ch. 5, speaking of a fishery arising from the propriety of the soil: "Such are gurgites, weares, fishing places, borachiae, stachiae, &c., which are the very soil itself," and Coke, Co. Litt., L. 1, c. 1, s. 1, 5*b*, says: "In the same manner gurges . . . consisteth of water and land, and therefore by the grant thereof by that name the soile doth pass." Again, Willes, J., in advising the House of Lords in Malcomson v. O'Dea, referring to the passage in Co. Litt., says that "gurges" may stand for "pool," and is of wider significance than "wear"; and Lord Herschell, in Attorney-General v. Emerson, speaking of the words used by Lord Hale in the above passage, says they "all have this in common, that they are constructions or erections by which the soil is more or less permanently occupied," and in Neill v. Duke of Devonshire Lord Selborne says, "Weirs ('kidelli' or 'gurgites') were the usual words in ancient documents for appropriating and enjoying several fisheries in tidal waters." I think that from the use of the word "gurgites" in the documents there was a grant of the corporeal hereditament in the soil upon which the weirs were constructed; but beyond this I think that it must be inferred, if nothing appears to the contrary, that it was a grant of the soil over which the river ran, and upon which there was the right to construct weirs for the purpose of taking fish.

As to whether the grant passed a several fishery apart from the use of the word "weirs," the question is whether you must have the word "several." I think not. In neither of the grants of fisheries in the cases of Malcomson v. O'Dea and Neill v. Duke of Devonshire do you find the word "several" used. You find a grant of the right of fishing, or the grant of the weir, or something of that sort, and from that the inference follows that what is granted is a several right.

Now as regards the difficulties raised by the defendant as to the possibility of this fishery, because of the existence of other fisheries on the river. He is entitled to say as against the plaintiff that the fisheries of Monkswood, Trostrey, and Edlogan, or some of them at any rate, exist. Now, is the existence of these fisheries, Monkswood and Trostrey, being as they are over a portion of the river, which does not join the defendant's land, admissible on the question I have to decide. If any authority is necessary, I should refer to Jones v. Williams. I have to regard all the rights shown to exist in respect of the property over which the plaintiff claims his several fishery for the purpose of ascertaining whether he is entitled to several fishery anywhere. I would also say this, that the rights claimed with regard to the Monkswood and the Trostrey fisheries do not appear to be either partial or limited, so as to be capable of existing concurrently with a several fishery of the plaintiff in the same parts of the river, as would otherwise be the case: see Seymour v. Lord Courtenay and Ecroyd v. Coulthard. But I have only to do with the river opposite Pont Sand Pit, where there is no other fishery. And if the Monkswood and Trostrey fisheries are inconsistent with any other several fishery in those (other) parts of the river (about which I say nothing), I do not think this fact would oblige me to say that there cannot be a several fishery in the river opposite Pont Sand Pit. Suppose that in A.D. 1232 the Crown gave the Abbey of Tintern a several fishery, or some right of fishery in the upper part of the river, and therefore had not a several fishery to give the Earl of Worcester in 1516 in that part of the river, am I to infer that the grantee under the grant of 1516 did not get a several fishery at Pont Sand Pit because the grant included the upper part of the river where the previous fishery was given? I think not. I think that there would have been a valid grant of the Pont Sand Pit fishery, even although the grant did not operate to give any several fishery higher up: see the judgment of Lord Selborne in Neill v. Duke of Devonshire.

Now as regards the acts of ownership said to have been exercised upon the soil of the river such as goretting, taking gravel, and erecting fences, I refer them to the absence of any objection on the part of the owner of the bed of the river to acts which did him no harm, and were reasonably convenient, or necessary, if you will, for the protection and enjoyment of the property of the riparian owner: see observations of Lord Selborne and Lord O'Hagan on Neill v. Duke of Devonshire, 31 W. R., pp. 628, 633, 8 App. Cas., pp. 156, 170.

As regards the right of way claimed, if the plaintiff has the soil in the river opposite Pont Sand Pit, there is no difficulty; but, supposing I am wrong in so holding, the question would arise whether the plaintiff could claim his right of way as appurtenant to his fishery. The passage in Co. Litt. says that prescription does not make anything appendant or appurtenant to another unless it "agree in quality and nature to the thing whereunto it is appendant or appurtenant." Pausing there I should understand that to mean that the corporeal thing must be appendant to the corporeal thing, and the incorporeal to the incorporeal thing, but he adds "as a thing corporeall cannot properly be appendant to a thing corporeall, nor a thing incorporeall to a thing incorporeall." I cannot help thinking that the language somehow must have gone wrong there. But there is a note to the above dictum to this effect: "This position is not universally true. It sometimes fails as to things appurtenant. Return of writs, or a leet, may be appurtenant to an hundred; so may waif and stray to a leet; and yet in those instances both subjects are incorporeal. The true test seems to be the propriety of relation between the principal and the adjunct, which may be found out whether they so agree in nature and quality as to be capable of union without any incongruity": Co. Litt., edited by Charles Butler (A.D. 1832), 121*b*, note 7. I adopt that note as giving the true and real test for a case of this kind, and if I were wrong in holding the fishery right corporeal I should hold that, if the plaintiff had not the bed of the river, he had this right of way as appendant or appurtenant to his several fishery. One is clearly congruous to the other. You can scarcely enjoy the one without the other. But, as I have said, the question does not arise. Under these circumstances I grant an injunction, not as regards the whole distance asked for the statement of claim, but to restrain the defendant from trespassing upon the river and fishery within a moiety of the bed of the river where it adjoins his lands, and from interfering with the enjoyment by the plaintiff, his lessees, licensees, and assigns, of that portion of the bed of the river, and from interfering with his right of way over the Pont Sand Pit lands for the purpose of angling and fishing.

Injunction granted.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Foyer & Hordern.

Solicitors for the defendant, Thos. White & Sons.

K. B. Div.
(Ridley and Bigham, JJ.) June 14.

REX v. DYMOCK AND ANOTHER.
REX v. MOGER AND ANOTHER. (a.)

Animal—Dog—Dangerous and not under proper control—Order for destruction—Form of order—Conviction for disobedience—Dogs Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 56), s. 2.

The appellants obtained rules nisi for certiorari to quash two orders that had been made by justices for the destruction of two valuable dogs, on the ground (1) that the justices could under section 2 of the Dogs Act, 1871, only make an alternative order either to destroy or to keep under proper control the dog in question; (2) that the first order was bad in form, since there was no adjudication that the dogs were not under proper control; (3) that the second order was bad, as it wrongly cited the first order.

Held, discharging both rules, that an order for the destruction of a dangerous dog need not contain an adjudication by the justices that the dog was not under proper control, nor by section 2 of the Dogs Act, 1871, need the justices give the owner of the dog the option of keeping the animal under proper control before ordering its destruction.

Pickering v. Marsh, 22 W. R. 798, 43 L. J. M. C. 143, followed.

Rule nisi for a certiorari to quash a conviction of the appellant under section 2 of the Dogs Act, 1871, made under the following circumstances:

Major Davis, residing in Bath, was the owner of several dogs, including two Scotch deerhounds of great value.

On the 21st of April these deerhounds attacked a Mr. Seers, knocked him down and bit him. Mr. Seers thereupon laid a complaint against Mr. Davis under section 2 of the Dogs Act, 1871, and at the hearing of the information evidence was given that the same dogs had bitten other persons, and the justices made an order directing them to be destroyed.

The order, after reciting the complaint that the dogs were dangerous and not under proper control, set out an adjudication merely that they were not under proper control.

Three days later the same dogs bit another person.

On another information the appellant was convicted of not obeying the order for destruction, and was fined £2.

The new order recited the old one, as it had contained an adjudication that the dogs were dangerous and not under proper control.

The appellant then obtained rules nisi to quash these orders on the grounds (1) that the justices could under section 2 only make an alternative order either for the owner to destroy or to keep the animal under proper control; (2) that the first order was bad in form, since there was no adjudication that the dogs were not under proper control; and (3) that the second order was bad, as it wrongly recited the first order.

Section 2 of the Dogs Act, 1871, provides that "any court of summary jurisdiction may take cognizance of a complaint that a dog is dangerous and not kept under proper control, and if it appears to the court having cognizance of such complaint that such dog is dangerous the court may make an order in a summary way directing the dog to be kept by the owner under proper control or destroyed, and any person failing to comply with such order shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty shillings for every day which he fails to comply with such order."

R. M. Bray, K.C., and Bodkin showed cause against the rules.

Foote, K.C., and Colam appeared to support them.

THE COURT discharged both rules.

RIDLEY, J.—The respondents obtained these two rules to bring up two orders made by the justices on the ground that the first order was bad because the justices should have given the owner of the dogs the option of keeping them under proper control instead of ordering them to be destroyed in the first instance. It was said that there was an obvious omission in the second part of section 2 of the Act of 1871. The section speaks of a complaint "that a dog is dangerous and not kept under proper control" and then goes on to say that "the court may make an order directing the dog to be kept by the owner under proper control or destroyed." Here the justices made an order that the dogs should be destroyed, and it is said that the order is bad because it is not alternative. That is a point of substance; but whatever may have been the intention of the Legislature, the point has already been decided adversely to the objection in Pickering v. Marsh, 22 W. R. 798, 43 L. J. M. C. 143, the head-note being that under the Dogs Act, 1871, s. 2, a court of summary jurisdiction may order a dangerous dog to be destroyed without giving the owner the option of keeping it under control. It is not contended that the facts in that case are distinguishable from those before us now, and therefore we must hold that that objection to the order is one that should be overruled. Then it was said that the order was bad in form, because it did not state that the dogs were not kept under proper control, and again, the words of the section—"that a dog is dangerous and not kept under proper control"—were cited to us. What the order did contain was a recital that a complaint had been laid against Major Davis alleging that the dogs were dangerous and not kept under control, and then an adjudication that the dogs were dangerous, and that Major Davis was the owner. It was objected that the order ought to have averred that the justices had found the dogs were not under proper control. No doubt the justices must find that as a fact before they can make an order for the dogs to be destroyed, but it is not necessary for them to state it in the order, because it would be sufficient to follow the words of the statute in drawing up the order, under which statute the justices had jurisdiction. The third point—namely, that the conviction does not correctly recite the order—is one wholly without merit and can at once be dismissed.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Both rules therefore will be discharged.

BIGHAM, J.—I entirely agree.

Solicitors, Gribble & Co., for Newton Fuller, Clerk to the Justices, Bath; Belfrage & Co., for Ricketts, Son, & Vezey, Bath.

K. B. Div.
(Ridley and Bigham, JJ.) June 11.

NEW RIVER CO. (Appellants) v. HERTFORD UNION ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE AND OTHERS (Respondents). (a.)

Local government—Rating — Rateable value — Waterworks — Intake — Payments made under statutory obligation for user of intake—Cost of land and works —Assessment.

Held, that the proper principle of assessment on the authority of Liverpool Corporation v. Llanfyllin Union, [1899] 2 Q. B. 14, 47 W. R. Dig. 148, was for the valuer to see what the site and construction of the works cost, and then to take a percentage on the capital amount so expended as representing the rent a hypothetical tenant would give; and to exclude the amount paid and payable by the company under their Acts for the user of the intake as being no part of the cost of construction, nor a condition precedent to their construction.

Rating appeal.

Special case stated by the Court of Quarter Sessions of Hertford in respect of the rating of the property of the New River Co. at a point where the water was taken from the River Lea.

The question for decision was whether the company ought to be rated as it always had been hitherto on the value of the land occupied by the intake and its structural value, or whether there should be added a sum in respect of the value of what was described as the user of the intake by the flow of water over it.

The case stated the following facts:

The company appealed against a rate whereby they were rated in the sums of £787 plus £3,280 gross, and £650 plus £3,180 rateable value. The history of the appellant company and of their right to take water from the River Lea is contained in their charter, with rights conferred upon it by numerous private statutes dating from 3 Jac. 1, c. xviii. to take water from (among other sources) the River Lea. By 18 & 19 Vict. c. cxcvi. (the last of these statutes) all the water in that river except what was needed for navigation was vested in the New River Co. and another water company, and the New River Co. was, in consideration of receiving this water, to pay to the River Lea Conservators the capital sum of £42,000 to be spent in specified improvements in the navigation of the River Lea, and an annual sum of £1,500.

The parish of St. John urban, in respect of which the rate in question was made, was formed under the Local Government Act, 1894, and comprised a portion of the previously existing parish of St. John, Hertford (the part within the borough of Hertford), and in addition thereto a part of the liberty of Little Amwell (such part as was within the borough aforesaid).

From 1876 to 1894 the appellant company's property in the said parish of St. John was rated at £350, and in the said liberty of Little Amwell at £500, and those figures had not been materially altered since 1859.

Upon the new parish of St. John urban being formed, the property of the appellant company therein was rated at £350 in respect of that portion which was in the parish of St. John and at £300 in respect of that portion which was taken from the old liberty of Little Amwell.

The portion left in the old liberty of Little Amwell, which had then been constituted the new parish of Little Amwell, was rated at £200.

The rating of the property of the appellant company in the new parish of St. John urban therefore stood at the same valuation as in 1876.

Until January, 1900, the said property of the appellant company in the parish of St. John urban had never been assessed at more than £650 rateable value.

In January, 1900, by a supplemental valuation list subsequently confirmed by the assessment committee a further sum of £3,180 was added to the rateable value in the assessment of the said property in the occupation of the appellant company under an entry in which the company were rated for property described as "intake from the River Lea."

On the 24th of May, 1900, the rate in question was made in accordance with the said supplemental valuation list.

The following is a copy of the said rate:—

No.	Name of Occupier.	Name of Owner.	Description of Property rated.	Name or Situation of Property.	Estimated Extent.	Gross Estimated Rental.	Rateable Value of Buildings, &c.	Amount of Rate at 1s. 2¼d. in the £ on Agricultural Land and 2s. 6d. in the £ on other hereditaments.
				a. r. p.	£	£	£ s. d.
132	New River Company	New River Company	Chadwell Spring — portion of the New River guage-house, sluice, and appurtenances	Kings Meads	5 2 38	787	650	78 10 10
653	New River Company	New River Company	Intake from River Lea	Kings Meads	—	3,280	3,180	384 5 0

The appellant company, while admitting that these sums of £42,000 and £1,500 might be primâ facie evidence as to the measure of the value of the works, contended (1) that the company was overrated, (2) that the company did not occupy any rateable hereditament in the parish coming within the description of intake from the River Lea, and (3) that no rateable hereditament coming within that description had any existence in the said parish.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

For the respondents it was contended—(1) That beyond the rating of the intake at its structural value and value as land it ought to be rated in an additional sum as having an enhanced value in respect of the user made of it by taking water from the River Lea into the channel of the appellant company; (2) that the sums of money which the appellant company had paid under the said statutes were evidence that the land and the structure erected thereon had some additional value beyond the structural value thereof in respect of the user made of them as aforesaid, and that such additional value was sufficiently great to support the rate appealed against; (3) that the additional payments directed by section 25 of the Lea Conservancy Act, 1900, were evidence to show what (in the opinion of Parliament at the date of the passing of that Act) the user of the intake was worth to the appellant company.

The question for the court was whether the said hereditament was rateable upon the principle contended for by the respondents. If it was so rateable the judgment was to stand; if not, then either the gross and rateable values were to be reduced respectively to the sums of £787 and £650, or the court was to make such other order herein as it should think just.

Marshall, K.C., and R. D. Muir, for the appellants.

Ryde, for the respondents.

RIDLEY, J.—This is a case raising a question of considerable importance, but in my opinion it is covered and concluded by authority. The law seems well settled and the principle last recognized in Liverpool Corporation v. Llanfyllin Union, [1899] 2 Q. B. 14, 47 W. R. Dig. 148, we think applies. The principle laid down there was that in cases such as this the valuer was to see what the site and construction of the works cost, and then to take a percentage on the capital amount so expended as representing the rent a hopothetical tenant would give. The same principle is to be traced in the judgments given in Reg. v. Mile End Old Town, 10 Q. B. 208—namely, that in rating cases like the present it is not the amount of rent the hypothetical tenant would in fact give that has to be considered; but the rough way is to see what the site and the construction of the works cost, and to take a percentage on the capital amount so expended as representing the rent which a tenant would give. It is impossible to argue that that principle does not apply to the present case. In my opinion it is not right to say that the sum which had been added by reason of the user of the water is a part of the cost of construction and ought to be taken into account. The amount paid and payable by the company under their Acts is no part of the cost of construction, nor a condition precedent to their construction, and is therefore not an element to be taken into consideration. The rateable value must be reduced to £787 gross, and this appeal allowed with costs.

BIGHAM, J., gave judgment to a like effect.

Appeal allowed; leave to appeal granted.

Solicitors, Thompson & Debenhams; J. N. Mason & Co., for Sworder, Hertford.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance, J.) May 8.

COLLINS (Appellant) v. THE HORNSEY URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL (Respondents). (a.)

Local government—Street—Naming of new street by local authority—Right of owner of the estate—Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 34), s. 64.

The appellant, the owner of a building estate situate within the respondents' district, laid out a new street and submitted plans thereof and of the houses he proposed to erect in such street to the respondents, who approved of the same. The appellant on the plans named the street "Midhurst-avenue," and also put up a board with such name affixed thereon at one end of the street. After several of the houses had been erected the respondents proposed calling the street "Collingwood-avenue," and put up a board on one of the houses with that name upon it. The appellant objected to the latter name and removed the board put up by the respondents. On an information preferred against the appellant under section 64 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, the justices convicted him.

Held, that section 64 gave the local authority the right to decide and fix up the name of a new street, and that the appellant had committed an offence under that section in removing such name.

Case stated.

This was an appeal from the decision of the justices sitting in petty sessions at Highgate, who convicted the appellant upon an information preferred against him by the respondents for defacing the name of a street contrary to the provisions of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847.

The appellant was the owner of the Fortismere estate, a building estate at Fortis Green. Early in 1899 he submitted to the respondents plans showing the positions and names of certain proposed new streets on the estate, together with notice of his intention to lay out and construct the same. One of the proposed street was named "Midhurst-avenue" on the plans.

On the 10th of July, 1899, the appellant received from the respondents notice of approval.

In the following August the appellant submitted to the respondents plans and descriptions of sixty-two dwelling-houses to be erected in the said street, which was named "Midhurst-avenue" on those plans also, and on the 14th of the same month he received from the respondents notice of approval.

On the 25th of September the appellant began to erect dwelling-houses in the said street, which had not then been formed, but only marked out with sticks. The street was formed subsequently. At the date of the information ten of the houses had been completed and twenty-six were in the course of erection. The name "Midhurst-avenue" was put up by the appellant in the street at one end thereof by means of a notice board affixed to a post. The street had not been known by any other name than that of Midhurst-avenue when the respondents proposed to call it "Collingwood-avenue," but had, subsequently to the 13th of September been referred to as "Midhurst-avenue in leases and agreements of tenancy relating to houses therein and also in an agreement between the appellant and the respondents as to sewerage and other works on the estate.

Adjoining the estate were the grounds of a house belonging to a Mr. Arnold, which had been known for many years as "Midhurst," and Mr. Arnold objected to the proposed street being called "Midhurst-avenue." No other street in the district was so named and no confusion or inconvenience would have arisen from it being so named. On the 24th of September the respondents wrote to the appellant suggesting the street should be called "Collingwood-avenue." The appellant gave notice in writing that he objected to the street being so called. On the 5th of November the respondents resolved that the street should be called "Collingwood-avenue," and they informed the appellant that they intended to put up that name in the street. The appellant disputed the right of the respondents to do so, and said he would remove the name if affixed to his property in the said street. On the 27th of November the respondents affixed a board with the name "Collingwood-avenue" thereon to a house at the end of the said street, of which house the appellant was the owner. The appellant on the same day caused this board to be removed.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

At the hearing before the justices the respondents contended: (1) That they were entitled to determine the name by which a new street in their district was to be known; (2) that they determined the said street was to be known by the name of "Collingwood-avenue," and were entitled accordingly to cause such name to be put up on the appellant's said house; (3) that they were entitled to alter the name if they thought proper, and to cause another name to be put up; (4) that the appellant was not entitled to pull down or efface the name put up by them.

The appellant contended that the respondents had no power to alter the name of the street contrary to the wishes of the owner, and that what they had done was ultra vires and illegal.

The justices were of opinion that the respondents had power under section 64 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, to determine the name of the street, and to put up a board bearing such name on the said house, and that the appellant was guilty of an offence under that Act in causing such name to be defaced.

Section 64 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, provides as follows: "The commissioners shall, from time to time, cause the houses and buildings in all or any of the streets to be marked with numbers, as they think fit, and shall cause to be put up or painted on a conspicuous part of some house, building, or place at or near each end, corner, or entrance of every such street the name by which such street is to be known; and every person who destroys, pulls down, or defaces any such number or name, or puts up any number or name different from the number or name put up by the commissioners shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings for every such offence."

Naldrett, for the appellant.—The local authority are not entitled to alter the name of a street contrary to the wishes of the owner, and therefore the respondents in acting as they have done here have acted in an illegal manner, and what they did was ultra vires. The conviction was therefore wrong and should be quashed.

Alexander Glen, for the respondents.—The local authority is the proper authority to determine the name of a new street. The respondents never accepted the name given to the street by the owner, and even if they had done so they would still have a right to change it. Section 64 expressly imposes the duty upon the local authority of putting up the name of a street and imposes a penalty upon any person who shall pull down or deface such name; similar provisions are to be found in section 145 of the City of London Sewers Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. cclxiii.), and in sections 32 & 33 of the London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. cxxiii.). The present case is quite distinct from Anderson v. Lord Mayor and Corporation of Dublin. 15 L. R. Ir. 410, 34 W. R. Dig. 112, for Chatterton, V.C., therein says at p. 422, "I express no opinion as to the naming of new streets, which plainly involves a different consideration." That case was one relating to an existing street, the present case relates to a new street. The appellant had no right to take the law into his own hands and pull down the board on which the name was put up by the local authority, but should have taken proper legal proceedings.

Counsel also cited Day v. Brownrigg, 27 W. R. 217, 10 Ch. D. 294.

Naldrett replied.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—In my opinion the Dublin case is in no way an authority upon the point that is now before us. As was pointed out by Mr. Glen, the Vice-Chancellor expressly said he was not dealing with the case of new streets, as to which very different considerations might apply. In my opinion one can see at once that where you are dealing with altering the name of an old street it may cause very great inconvenience, and very great difficulty may arise if a new name is forced upon people, and therefore, as I have indicated in the course of the argument, if this case had rested on a right claimed by the local authority to challenge the existence of a well-known name of an existing street, speaking for myself—although I do not suppose it is absolutely necessary to decide it—I do not think they would have the right to do so.

I think the language of section 64 is very different to that employed in the sections in those other Acts to which Mr. Glen called our attention. I do not see under section 64 any right to change the name of an existing street. In this case, as I understand, in the latter part of 1899 the owner was minded to lay out his estate for building, and on his plans he called this proposed new street "Midhurst-avenue" and that was brought to the knowledge of the local authority, but they exercised no judgment upon it.

Some questions have been raised as to objections by someone, but we must take it that the board in fact determined, and that they bonâ fide determined, that the street ought to be called "Collingwood-avenue." They then put up a board with that name upon it. Now, having regard to the duty put upon the commissioners under the latter words of section 64, I think it was not open to the appellant to do what he has done here—namely, deface the name of the street, and then say he did it because he wished another name to be given to the street. I think if he has a right as owner or proprietor to call this place "Midhurst-avenue," that he should have enforced his right by taking proper proceedings to restrain the local authority from putting up the board. I think the statute does put upon the local authority in the first instance the duty to put up the name, and it imposes a penalty upon persons who pull down or deface that name. I do not think it was intended that the question whether the name was a rightful name or wrongful name should be decided in proceedings for defacing the name put up, primâ facie lawfully, by the local authority. In this case I gather that it was really a new street. One can well imagine cases arising—some of them were put by Mr. Glen—where if there were several owners in a street or several occupiers of land or owners of houses, serious difficulty might arise as to which would be the proper name, although I think it would be better if the matter were made clear with regard to this particular class of district by words which would be analogous to words in the later Acts, such as the London Building Act. I do not think we can say as a matter of law that the local authority were wrong in putting up the name, and that the appellant was justified in painting it out when they had put it up. I think, therefore, that this appeal must be dismissed.

LAWRANCE, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for appellant, A. M. M. Forbes.

Solicitors for respondents, Tatham & Hardy.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance, J.) } May 3.

LAW v. GRAHAM & BRADLEY. (a.)

Factory—Definition—Beer bottling works—Factory and Workshop Act, 1878 (41 Vict. c. 16), s. 93 (3).

Premises were used by the respondents for the purpose of washing bottles and bottling beer. Before the bottles were filled, which was done by manual labour alone, they were washed by manual labour with the aid of mechanical power.

Held, that the premises were not a factory within the definition of the term in section 93 (3) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878.

Case stated by justices of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

At a petty sessions held at Newcastle-upon-Tyne on the 23rd and 30th of November, 1900, an information was preferred by John Law, one of her late Majesty's inspector of factories, the appellant, against Messrs. Graham & Bradley, of the Bigg Market, Newcastle, who were spirit merchants and beer dealers, the respondents, for that they on the 25th of October, 1900, being the occupiers of certain bottling works in Newcastle-upon-Tyne, the same being a factory within the true intent and meaning of the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 to 1895, did fail to have affixed at the entrance of the factory in the prescribed form the prescribed abstract of the Acts.

At the hearing of the information the following facts were proved or admitted:

The respondents were the occupiers of the premises referred to in the information, which they used solely for the purpose of washing bottles and bottling beer in their trade of wholesale and retail beer dealers. Before the bottles were filled with beer, which was done by manual labour alone, they were washed by manual labour with the aid of mechanical power. The bottles were washed inside by a rotary brush driven by a small gas-engine and were held in position by hand. The washing of the outside of the bottles was effected by manual labour only. Nothing was done to the beer itself to in any way alter its nature or character for the purpose of adapting it for sale. No process of any kind, in manufacturing or otherwise, was carried on on the premises beyond that of washing bottles and bottling beer as already described.

The respondents had not the prescribed abstract of the Factory Acts fixed at the entrance of their premises in the prescribed form, and if the premises came within the definition of a factory under the Factory Act, 1878, s. 93, sub-section 3 (c), then the respondents had infringed the provisions of section 78 of the Act.

The justices were of opinion that according to the true intent and meaning of sub-section 3 something must be done to the article itself for the purpose of adapting it for sale, and that even assuming filling the bottles with beer was adapting the beer for sale the premises were not a factory, inasmuch as the bottling was effected by manual labour alone without the aid of mechanical power.

They were also of opinion that no manufacturing process was carried on in the premises, as in the absence of any definition in the Act the phrase "manufacturing process" must be construed in its ordinary sense.

They accordingly dismissed the information.

Section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, says that the expression "factory" means "textile factory and non-textile factory, or either of such descriptions of factories," and non-textile factory means "(1) any works, warehouses, furnaces, mills, foundries, or places named in Part I. of the 4th schedule to this Act. (2) Also any premises or places named in Part II. of the said schedule wherein or within the close or curtilage or precincts of which steam, water, or other mechanical power is used in aid of the manufacturing process carried on there. (3) Also any premises wherein or within the close or curtilage or precincts of which any manual labour is exercised by way of trade, or for the purposes of gain, in or incidental to the following purposes or any of them—that is to say (a) In or incidental to the making of any article or part of any article; or (b) in or incidental to the altering, repairing, ornamenting, or finishing of any article; or (c) in or incidental to the adapting for sale of any article, and wherein or within the close or curtilage or precincts of which steam, water, or other mechanical power is used in aid of the manufacturing process carried on there."

H. Sutton, for the appellant.—The respondents' works are a factory within the meaning of the definition of that word in section 93 (3). They are premises wherein manual labour is exercised for the purposes of gain in or incidental to the making of an article—namely, bottled beer, and also in or incidental to the adapting for sale of an article—namely, beer. Those operations are both manufacturing processes in aid of which mechanical power is used. Petrie v. Weir, 2 Ct. of Sess. Cas., 5th series, p. 1041, is in point. There in premises where stone-dressing was carried on by hand a gas-engine was used to work a machine used by the workmen to sharpen their tools, and it was held that the premises were a factory within the Factory and Workshop Acts.

Travers Humphreys, for the respondents.—The respondents' premises are not a factory in the sense intended in section 93. The whole of the definition shows that no premises are intended to be included other than factories in the ordinary sense of a place where raw material is turned into a finished article. A perusal of the articles named in Schedule IV. confirms this view. The governing words of sub-section 3 are "wherein . . . mechanical power is used in aid of the manufacturing process carried on there." The pouring of beer, which is itself a finished article, into bottles cannot be said to be a manufacturing process in the ordinary sense. [The learned counsel was stopped.]

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—In order that premises may be said to be a factory within the definition in sub-section 3 of section 93 two conditions must concur. The premises must belong to either of the categories (a), (b), or (c), and they must also come within the last words of the section. In my opinion the respondents' premises were not used for making any article within (a), nor for repairing, ornamenting, nor finishing any article within (b), nor am I sure that they are used for adapting an article for sale within (c). But that is the only possible way of bringing the premises within the section, and it can only be done by taking a somewhat strained meaning of the words. But then you come to the words "wherein . . . steam, water, or other mechanical power is used in aid of the manufacturing process carried on there." Having regard to the former part of the section I do not think that the mechanical power used in washing the bottles was used in aid of the manufacturing process carried on in the premises. Therefore I think that the magistrates were right.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

With regard to Petrie v. Weir, I do not wish to be understood as dissenting from it. The mechanical power used in the premises there under consideration might have had something to do with the stone dressing.

LAWRANCE, J., concurred.

Solicitors for the appellant, Treasury Solicitor.

Solicitors for the respondents, Pyke & Parrott.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance, J.) April 17.

ANDERSON v. COLLINSON. (a.)

Bastardy—Order of quarter sessions quashing affiliation order—Subsequent action for seduction by mother—Estoppel.

The fact that an affiliation order made (on the application of a girl who was the mother of an illegitimate child) by justices against the putative father has been quashed on appeal to quarter sessions, does not raise an estoppel as against such girl's mother in an action claiming damages for the seduction of the girl.

Reg. v. Glynne, 20 W. R. 94, L. R. 7 Q. B. 16, considered and distinguished.

Application for judgment or new trial by the defendant in an action for seduction remitted from the High Court and tried in the Darlington County Court, resulting in a verdict for the plaintiff with £250 damages.

The action was brought by the mother of the girl alleged to have been seduced, and the evidence given on behalf of the plaintiff was that the girl was seventeen years of age, and that from the age of thirteen the defendant, who was said to be a man of seventy, had repeatedly misconducted himself with the child.

The trial took place on the 7th of April, 1900, in the county court at Darwen before his Honour Judge Templar, with a jury, and the learned judge on the verdict entered judgment for the plaintiff.

Before the action was brought, the girl in October, 1899, had instituted bastardy proceedings in the petty sessional court against the defendant, and an order had been made by the justices adjudging him to be the father of the child. On the 8th of January the quarter sessions, upon appeal, allowed such appeal and quashed the order of petty sessions, holding that it was not proved that the defendant was the father of the child.

As a defence to the action the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was estopped by the order of quarter sessions from claiming damages for seduction as the order of quarter sessions was a judgment in rem affecting the status of the parties, and therefore the present action could not be maintained; and that the result of the bastardy proceedings on appeal estopped the plaintiff from now alleging that the defendant was the father of the child.

The learned judge, however, held that the case must go to the jury, and entered judgment for the plaintiff in accordance with their findings.

The defendant appealed.

H. F. Manisty, K.C., for the defendant.—The decision of quarter sessions must be regarded as a decision in rem. The plaintiff is bound by it and is estopped from claiming damages for seduction: Rex v. Inhabitants of Rislip, 1 Lord Raym. 394, and Reg. v. Glynne, 20 W. R. 94, L. R. 7 Q. B. 16. Moreover, the learned judge excluded evidence which the defendant adduced consisting chiefly of medical testimony bearing upon the probabilities of the allegation. In the latter proceedings for damages for seduction evidence was given varying from that offered at the hearing of the summons for the affiliation order. The quashing of the order by the quarter sessions debarred all further proceedings.

J. A. Compston, for the plaintiff.—The judgment in the bastardy proceedings is a judgment inter partes, and therefore not an estoppel as against this action by the mother claiming damages for the seduction of her daughter, for she was no party to those proceedings.

He cited Evans v. Evans, 1 Rob. Ecc. 165; Jenkyn v. Jenkyn, 5 W. R. 43; and Fraser v. Fraser, 5 Notes of Cases 11, at p. 20.

H. F. Manisty replied.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—In this case we are pressed to allow the appeal on the authority cited to us of Reg. v. Glynne. In that case it was held that where on an appeal to quarter sessions an order of affiliation was quashed on the ground of the insufficiency of corroborative evidence the order of quarter sessions was a decision on the merits and was final, and fresh proceedings could not be taken before the justices. If, therefore, the present action had been brought by the girl the decision in that case might have been binding on us. But the girl being under age, the action is brought by the girl's mother, who was no party to the previous proceedings between the girl and the defendant. It is impossible for us, therefore, to say that the ordinary rule with regard to estoppel applying inter partes only does not apply here. All that Reg. v. Glynne decided was that where on appeal to quarter sessions an order of affiliation was quashed subsequent proceedings could not be taken by the girl against the putative father, the former proceedings acting as an estoppel as between the girl and the man. But that decision does not debar the mother from maintaining an action for seduction of her daughter. The county court judge has therefore come to a right conclusion, and this appeal fails.

LAWRANCE, J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Iliffe, Henley, & Sweet, for T. M. Barron & Smith, Darlington.

Solicitor for the respondent, A. Toovey, for Edmundson & Gowland, Masham.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Q. B. Div. (Wright, J.) March 18; April 1.

In re RIGGS.
Ex parte THE TRUSTEE. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Landlord and tenant—Lease—Covenant not to assign—Proviso for re-entry on bankruptcy or breach of covenant—Receiving order and adjudication on lessee's own application—Forfeiture—Peaceable re-entry by lessor—Notice—Relief—Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 14, sub-sections 1, 2, 6—Conveyancing Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 13)—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, r. 190.

The filing by a debtor of his own petition and his application to be adjudged bankrupt, followed by receiving order and adjudication, does not constitute a breach of a covenant in a lease not to assign the demised premises.

Motion by the trustee in the bankruptcy of Riggs for an order declaring that the trustee was entitled to possession of certain leasehold premises known as "Riggs' Retreat," situate at Buckhurst Hill, in the county of Essex.

By an indenture of lease dated the 12th of November, 1896, J. W. Hobbs let to John Riggs the premises above-mentioned for the term of nine years from the 25th of March, 1897, at the rent of £168 5s. a year, payable quarterly. The lease contained a covenant by the lessee not to assign or underlet the premises without the written consent of the lessor, and a proviso for re-entry if the rent should be in arrear for twenty-one days, "or if the said John Riggs shall become bankrupt, or file any petition under the bankruptcy laws, or make any composition with his creditors, or upon any breach of the covenants herein contained the said J. W. Hobbs may re-enter upon the said premises, and immediately thereupon the said term shall absolutely determine." The lessor further agreed in the said lease that, on payment of the rent and performance of the covenants and conditions therein contained, he would at the expiration of the lease convey without any further payment or consideration whatever to the lessee the fee simple of the said premises free from incumbrances.

On the 18th of January, 1901, a receiving order was made against Riggs on his own petition, and on the same day he was adjudicated bankrupt on his own application under rule 190.

On the 22nd of January, 1901, Hobbs gave the following notice of his intention to re-enter, which he caused to be affixed to the door of the premises:

"To John Riggs, of 'Riggs Retreat,' Buckhurst Hill, in the county of Essex, refreshment contractor, and to all other parties whom it may concern.

"I, Joseph William Hobbs, of Oakhurst, Chingford, in the county of Essex, gentleman, hereby give you notice in pursuance of the proviso contained in an indenture of lease dated the 12th day of November, 1896, made between me of the one part, and you, the said John Riggs, of the other part, that I hereby re-enter upon the premises comprised in the said indenture of lease and determine the same in pursuance of the proviso in the said lease, you having become bankrupt and filed your petition under the bankruptcy laws, and I hereby take possession of the said premises with the appurtenances comprised in the said lease from you as from the date thereof.

"As witness my hand this 22nd day of January, 1901. "J. W. HOBBS."

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the same day Hobbs's agent entered and took possession of the premises without giving any notice under section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881.

On the 15th of February the trustee demanded possession of the premises, which was refused. He thereupon launched the present motion asking for possession, or in the alternative for relief against any right of re-entry upon or forfeiture of the premises.

Muir Mackenzie, for the trustee.—The lessor had no right to re-enter without previously giving notice under section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881: see Horsey's Estate v. Steiger 47 W. R. 644, [1899] 2 Q. B. 79; North London Land Co. v. Jacques, 32 W. R. 283; Rogers v. Rice, 40 W. R. 489, [1892] 2 Ch. 170; Doe v. Bevan, 3 M. & S. 353. [He was stopped by the court.]

Rowden, K.C., and E. Ball, for the respondent.—Firstly we say that the lessee is not entitled to relief after peaceable re-entry has been accomplished by the lessor: Quilter v. Mapleson, 31 W. R. 75, 7 Q. B. D. 672; Locke v. Pearce, 41 W. R. 369, [1893] 2 Ch. 271. Secondly, we contend that the filing by the debtor of his own petition and his application for adjudication operated as a breach of his covenant not to assign, and consequently no notice was required under the Conveyancing Act, 1881: Croft v. Lumley, 6 W. R. 523, 6 H. L. Cas. 672; Avison v. Holmes, 9 W. R. 550, 1 J. & H 530; In re Amherst's Trusts, 20 W. R. 290, L. R. 13 Eq. 464.

Muir Mackenzie, in reply, referred to Ex parte Dawe, In re Moon, 34 W. R. 752, 17 Q. B. D. 275.

Cur. adv. vult.

April 1.—WRIGHT, J.—This is an application by the trustee in bankruptcy of John Riggs for a declaration of his title to a lease of certain premises made to the debtor. The lease contains a covenant by the lessee and a proviso, which are in the following terms: [His lordship read the covenant not to assign and the proviso for re-entry, and continued: In January, 1901, the debtor filed his own petition expressly asking for adjudication, and on the 18th of January a receiving order was made; and on the same day, under the power given by rule 190, he was adjudicated bankrupt on that petition. By virtue of the adjudication the bankrupt's interest in the lease vested in the official receiver until some time early in February, when the trustee was appointed. On the 22nd of January the lessor entered upon the premises alleging that under the proviso for re-entry the lease was determined by the bankruptcy or petition. He did not before entry give the statutory notice which is required by section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, in cases to which that section applies.

The first question is whether under the Conveyancing Act, 1881—assuming the case to be one in which by sub-section 1 of section 14 of that Act the statutory notice is required to be given as a preliminary to the exercise of a right of re-entry by action under a proviso for breach of covenant or condition in a lease—the notice is necessary as a preliminary to re-entry without action. On this question I cannot entertain any doubt. Sub-section 1 of section 14 says that the right of re-entry or forfeiture "shall not be enforceable by action or otherwise unless or until the lessor serves on the lessee a notice specifying, &c." No mode of enforcing such a right otherwise than by action has been suggested except that of peaceable entry. And the language of sub-section 2, "the lessee may in the lessor's action, if any, &c.," indicates that entry without action is within the purview of sub-section 1. Nor has any reason been suggested why the notice is less necessary in the one case than in the other.

The only argument advanced in favour of the lessor's contention on this point is that in one or two cases, in particular in Horsey's Estate v. Steiger, 47 W. R. 644, [1899] 2 Q. B. 79, some expressions are found which in terms refer only to cases in which actions are brought; but in those cases actions had been brought, and these expressions seem plainly to refer only to the circumstances of the particular cases. If this view is right, then, according to the decision just cited, the trustee is entitled to succeed so far as this case depends on forfeiture for bankruptcy, because it was there held that section 14, sub-section 1, of the Act of 1881 is applied to re-entry under a condition for forfeiture for bankruptcy by section 2, sub-section 2, of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, with exceptions which do not cover this case.

The second and the real question is whether an adjudication of bankruptcy on the debtor's own petition asking for adjudication, although it does not directly justify the entry without notice, yet does so indirectly, as being or involving a breach of his covenant not to assign without the consent of the lessor. If it is, then sub-section 1 of section 14 of the Act of 1881 is excluded by sub-section 6 of the same section, which is not, as regards assignments, affected by the Act of 1892; and in that view the re-entry may have been effectual on the ground of the assignment, although not on the ground of the bankruptcy. On the construction of this lease and apart from authority, I should be of opinion that in this covenant the words "assign or underlet" are used in their ordinary or popular sense, and refer only to such assignments as are directly made by the lessee as distinguished from such assignments by law as result by the statute from a petition in bankruptcy followed by adjudication. This conclusion seems much strengthened by the fact that the proviso which immediately follows the covenant, expressly provides for the case of bankruptcy or of the filing of a petition by the debtor. And it would be strange if, notwithstanding the express mention of bankruptcy as a ground for re-entry, and the express obligation to give notice before re-entry on that ground, the obligation can be evaded on the ground that the bankruptcy operates in law as an assignment. It has, indeed, in several cases been held upon the construction of wills containing provisions for the defeasance of interests in case of assignment or incumbrance, that although bankruptcy upon the initiative of a creditor is not to be regarded as an assignment or incumbrance by the act of the debtor (see Doe v. Bevan, 3 M. & S. 353; Lear v. Leggett, 1 Russ. & My. 690; Holland v. Cole, 10 W. R. 563, 1 H. & C. 67; and Doe v. Powell, 5 B. & C. 308), yet the assignment which necessarily and inevitably resulted under the Insolvents' Relief Acts from a debtor's petition under those Acts did amount to a voluntary assignment or incumbrance or disposition: Shee v. Hale, 13 Ves. 404; Rochford v. Hackman, 9 Hare, 475. But in all the cases of that kind which I have found, the words used in the will were much larger than the mere word "assign." They have usually been the most comprehensive which the draftsman could find. For instance, in In re Amherst's Trusts they were "assign over, assure, mortgage, or in any manner incumber, or by any instrument in writing, parol agreement, or otherwise howsoever part from" the income. Moreover, all those cases except In re Amherst's Trusts were determined upon statutes under which the petition ipso facto effected an assignment of the debtor's property for the benefit of creditors; but under the Act of 1883, even upon a debtor's petition asking for adjudication, the adjudication does not follow automatically. The court has a discretion in the matter, and unless the court in its discretion adjudicates, the creditors may prefer to accept a composition. Therefore Cave, J., in Ex parte Dawes, In re Moon, held that the debtor's petition under the Act of 1883 did not of itself amount to an assignment. In that case the creditors had accepted a composition, so that there was no adjudication and no vesting of the debtor's property in a trustee; but the case seems to be an authority that the mere filing of a petition by the debtor is not of itself an assignment. And if so, then there is in any view no assignment until adjudication, and at that stage the matter has become actual bankruptcy, and therefore section 2 of the Act of 1892 applies, and requires the statutory notice. Lastly, if the filing of a petition by the debtor is not of itself an assignment until adjudication, then it is not of itself a ground of re-entry without the statutory notice. For either it is bankruptcy, in which case section 2 of the Act of 1892 applies, or, if it is neither assignment nor bankruptcy sub-section 6 of section 14 of the Act of 1881 does not apply, and therefore sub-section 1 of section 14 does apply, and the notice is necessary. I am of opinion, therefore, that the trustee is entitled to the declaration which he asks.

Application allowed.

Solicitors for the trustee, Bramall, White, & Co.

Solicitors for the respondent, Lucas & Mitchell.

Court of Appeal.

From K. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, M.R., and Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ.) — July 8.

In re BALAGHAT GOLD MINING CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Register of members—Inspection—Copies—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 32.

A person paying a shilling for inspection of the register of members of a company, under section 32 of the Companies Act, 1862, is not entitled, without any further payment, to take copies on his own account. His only right with regard to copies is to be furnished by the company with copies on payment of sixpence for every hundred words required to be copied.

Boord v. African Consolidated Land and Trading Co., 46 W. R 150, 14 Times L. R. 116, overruled.

Appeal from an order of Day, J., allowing an application for leave to inspect and take a copy of the register of the shareholders of a limited company.

The applicant, who was the representative of an establishment organized for the purpose of obtaining information as to unclaimed dividends and of enabling members of the public to recover overpaid income tax, desired to inspect the register of the shareholders of the Balaghat Gold Mining Co. (Limited) and to make a copy of parts thereof.

He tendered a shilling to the registrar of the company as an inspection fee, and claimed to be entitled without any further payment to make the copies which he required on his own account.

The registrar refused to allow this, but expressed his willingness to supply the applicant with a copy of any part of the register on payment of 6d. for every hundred words.

Section 32 of the Companies Act, 1862, enacts as follows: "The register of members, commencing from the date of the registration of the company, shall be kept at the registered office of the company hereinafter mentioned; except when closed, as hereinafter mentioned, it shall during business hours, but subject to such reasonable restrictions as the company in general meeting may impose, so that not less than two hours in each day be appointed for inspection, be open to the inspection of any member gratis, and to the inspection of any other person on the payment of 1s., or such less sum as the company may prescribe, for each inspection; and every such member or other person may require a copy of such register, or of any part thereof, or of such list or summary of members as is hereinbefore mentioned, on payment of 6d. for every 100 words required to be copied."

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On an application at chambers, an order was made by a master that the company should allow the applicant to inspect and take notes or extracts from or a copy of the company's register of shareholders on payment of the fee of one shilling.

Day, J., affirmed the order of the master.

The company appealed.

Swinfen Eady, K.C., and Martelli, for the company.

Pollard, for the applicant, cited Mutter v. Eastern and Midlands Railway Co., 36 W. R. 401, 38 Ch. D. 92; Nelson v. Anglo-American Land Mortgage Agency Co., 45 W. R. 171, [1897] 1 Ch. 130; and Boord v. African Consolidated Land and Trading Co., 46 W. R. 150, 14 Times L. R. 116.

A. L. SMITH, M.R.—In this case we must take the statute with which we have to deal and see what is its plain meaning. Decisions on other statutes which are somewhat like it, but not identical, are no help. No question is raised here with regard to the common law right to inspect public documents. The only matter to be considered is the meaning of a particular section—viz., section 32 of the Companies Act, 1862. Does that section, when it enacts that any member of the public may require a copy of the register of shareholders of a company, or of any part thereof, on payment of 6d. for every 100 words required to be copied, mean that any person may go to the office of the company and himself make a copy of the register on payment of nothing? I think the meaning is that he may require of the company a copy of what he wants, and that he shall pay 6d. for every hundred words which he so requires to be copied. The cases of Mutter v. Eastern and Midlands Railway Co. and Nelson v. Anglo-American Land Co. were not decisions on this section, and therefore do not govern this case. But I agree with what was said by Lindley, L.J., in the former case, that, when the right to inspect and take a copy is expressly conferred by statute, the limit of the right depends on the true construction of the statute. The only judgment on which the applicant is entitled to rely is the judgment of North, J., in Boord v. African Consolidated Land and Trading Co. But I cannot agree with that judgment. I think that North, J., followed too closely the previous cases without having due regard to the particular statute with which he was dealing. In my opinion the applicant is not entitled to make copies from the register without payment of 6d. per folio.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I entirely agree. Counsel for the applicant desires to read section 32 of of the Companies Act as if it contained words such as are to be found in ord. 31, r. 15, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, with regard to the person having inspection being permitted to take copies. The section gives an express right to be furnished with copies on paying for them. I think the right to take copies without paying for them is excluded.

STIRLING, L.J., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the company, Francis & Johnson.

Solicitor for the applicant, A. R. O. Gery.

From K. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, M.R., and Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ.) — July 3.

MIRAMS v. OUR DOGS PUBLISHING CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Penal action—Advertising reward for return of stolen property—No questions to be asked—"Any property whatsoever"—Dog—Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 102.

Section 102 of the Larceny Act, 1861, which makes it an offence to publish an advertisement offering a reward for the return of stolen property and stating that no questions will be asked, applies to the case of a stolen dog.

Application by the defendants for judgment or a new trial in an action tried before Darling, J., and a jury at Manchester Assizes.

The action was brought by a common informer to recover a penalty under section 102 of the Larceny Act, 1861. The section enacts as follows: "Whosoever shall publicly advertise a reward for the return of any property whatsoever, which shall have been stolen or lost, and shall in such advertisement use any words purporting that no questions will be asked, or shall make use of any words in any public advertisement purporting that a reward will be given or paid for any property which shall have been stolen or lost, without seizing or making any inquiry after the person producing such property, or shall promise or offer in any such public advertisement to return to any pawnbroker or other person who may have bought or advanced money by way of loan upon any property stolen or lost the money so paid or advanced, or any other sum of money or reward for the return of such property, or shall print or publish any such advertisement, shall forfeit the sum of £50 for every such offence to any person who will sue for the same by action of debt to be recovered with full costs of suit."

It was proved, in support of the plaintiff's case, that the defendants printed and published in a journal, of which they were the proprietors, called Our Dogs, an advertisement as follows: "£4 Reward. Stolen or strayed on Sunday, the 16th of August, a white fox-terrier dog, with black head, very short tail, no spots on body, answers to the name of Tony. Anyone returning the same to 'Lyncroft,' Fog-lane, Didsbury, Manchester, will receive the above reward. £2 reward will be given for any information in case the dog is dead. No questions will be asked."

At the trial the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for a penalty of £50, and the learned judge gave judgment accordingly.

The defendants applied for judgment or a new trial.

Rowlatt, for the defendants.—This case does not come within section 102 of the Larceny Act. The section deals with an advertisement offering a reward for the return of any stolen or lost property, and it says that such advertisement must not contain a statement that no questions will be asked. According to the natural meaning of this advertisement the words "No questions will be asked" refer only to the latter part offering a reward of £2 for information in case the dog is dead, and do not refer to the first part offering a reward of £4 for the return of the dog. Secondly, section 102 does not apply to the case of a stolen or lost dog. It belongs to a group of sections, consisting of sections 100, 101, and 102, which are headed "As to restitution and recovery of stolen property," but which do not apply to such property as dogs. Dogs are dealt with by an earlier group of sections—viz., sections 18-22.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Holloway, for the plaintiff, was not called upon to argue.

A. L. SMITH, M.R.—This is an action by a common informer claiming a penalty from the defendants under section 102 of the Larceny Act, 1861, for having published in a newspaper an advertisement offering a reward for the return of a lost or stolen dog, which stated that no questions would be asked. Two points were taken on the part of the defendants. The first point was that, according to the true meaning of the advertisement, it did not contain a statement that no questions would be asked in case the dog should be returned, but only a statement that no questions would be asked if the dog should happen to be dead. In my opinion the true meaning of the advertisement is that, if the dog should be returned, a reward of £4 would be paid, and that, if the dog was dead and could not be returned, and information was given to that effect, a reward of £2 would be paid, and that in either case no questions would be asked.

The other point taken was that section 102 of the Larceny Act does not apply to an advertisement offering a reward for the return of a stolen dog. In my opinion nothing could be clearer than this section. It begins with these words: "Whosoever shall publicly advertise a reward for the return of any property whatsoever which shall have been stolen or lost." How can it be said that a dog does not come within the words "any property whatsoever"? I cannot see any reason for whittling down the section, or saying that the words "any property" do not include dogs. Speaking for myself, I should be inclined to say that there is no class of stolen property to which this section is more applicable than stolen dogs. It is said that dogs are dealt with by other sections. That may be so, but in my opinion the learned judge at the trial was right in refusing on that ground to cut down the effect of this section.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS and STIRLING, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, Richard Hewlett, for Arthur Mirams, Brighton.

Solicitors for the defendants, Woodcock, Ryland, & Parker, for Markland & Whitehead, Manchester.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.
Kekewich, J. } June 4.

In re SARAH DALRYMPLE.
BIRCHAM v. SPRINGFIELD. (a.)

Will—Devise of freeholds upon trust to one for life subject to condition of residence—Trust upon breach of condition to sell and pay one-third only of income to devisee for life—Settled Land Act (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 51—Gifts of legacies to males and females—Direction to pay legacies, devises, and bequests in favour of females free of legacy duty—Gift of residue to males and females as tenants in common.

S. D. by her will devised certain freeholds to trustees upon trust for T. S. for life, subject to a condition of residence, and in case T. S. should cease to reside there, then on trust to sell and invest the proceeds and pay one-third of the income thereof to T. S. for life, and the remaining two-thirds to other persons therein mentioned.

Held, that the provision was such as to induce the tenant for life to abstain from exercising his powers under the Settled Land Act, 1882, within the meaning of section 51, and was void.

After giving certain legacies to males and females the testatrix declared that all legacies, devises, and bequests thereinbefore or thereinafter given or made in favour of females should be free of legacy duty, the residue being given to three males and three females as tenants in common.

Held, that the legacy duty in respect of the shares of the females in the residue were to be paid out of their respective shares.

Originating summons.

Sarah Dalrymple by her will dated the 19th of December, 1897, after giving certain pecuniary legacies to males end females, devised her freehold house called Thorpe Lodge to trustees "upon trust . . . to allow my nephew Thomas Osborn Springfield the full use and benefit thereof during his life or so long as he shall actually and continuously reside there, and I express my strong desire that he will so reside there, and I have given him the use and benefit thereof as aforesaid in the confident expectation that he will so reside there unless considerations of health or of means, and possibly other circumstances which I cannot now estimate may prevent his complying with my desire in this respect, and upon trust from and after the death of the said Thomas Osborn Springfield or in his lifetime in case in the judgment of my same trustees or the survivor of them or other the trustees or trustee for the time being of this my will of the same class whose decision on the subject shall be final, and no purchaser from whom shall be concerned or at liberty to make any inquiry on the subject, he shall cease actually or continuously to reside in the said house to an extent sufficient to comply with my desire in that behalf as hereinbefore expressed, to sell the said house and premises and estate . . . and to invest the moneys arising from such sale in such manner as is hereinafter mentioned with regard to investments, and in case such sale shall be made in the lifetime of the said Thomas Osborn Springfield by reason of his so ceasing to reside as aforesaid, or of my said trustees or trustee so deciding as aforesaid, then upon trust during his life to pay one equal third part of the income of such investment to him the said Thomas Osborn Springfield for his own use and benefit," and to pay the remaining two third parts to certain other persons therein named.

The will also contained the following declaration: "I declare that all legacies, devises, and bequests of this my will hereinafter or hereinbefore given or made to or in favour of females shall be for their respective sole and separate use and free of legacy duty." The residuary gift was to six persons, nominatim, three males and three females "as tenants in common."

The testatrix died on the 24th of March, 1900.

Shortly after her death T. O. Springfield intimated to the trustees that he was unable to live at Thorpe Lodge, and requested them to sell the property.

(a.) Reported by H. CLAUGHTON SCOTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The questions that arose for determination were (inter alia) whether T. O. Springfield was entitled for life to the whole or to one third part only of the income derived from the purchase-moneys of Thorpe Lodge, and whether the legacy duty on the shares in the testatrix's residuary estate given to the female legatees was payable out of shares of the male legatees in the same fund.

George Cave, for the trustees.

Warrington, K.C., and R. J. Parker, for T. O. Springfield.

W. F. Hamilton, K.C., and H. B. Howard, for the female residuary legatees.

Renshaw, K.C., and Lyttelton Chubb, and P. O. Lawrence, K.C., and Galbraith, for the male residuary legatees.

KEKEWICH, J., said: If the argument of Mr. Warrington is correct it leads to a very curious result. The limitation of Thorpe Lodge to T. O. Springfield for life or so long as he should actually and continuously reside there is the exact equivalent of the old example in the text-books of an estate given to one for life or until he should return from Rome. It can hardly have been the intention of the eminent lawyers who framed and introduced the Settled Land Act to turn all such conditional limitations into estates for life. But the point has been settled by Pearson, J., and I cannot distinguish this case from In re Paget, 33 W. R. 898, 30 Ch. D. 161. The report of that case is, perhaps, not strictly accurate, as one would imagine there must have been some words giving F. H. Paget a life estate. The question there tried was whether the condition of residence was good, and the possibility of a breach of the condition was eliminated from the summons. So the learned judge had before him the precise point raised by this case, and he applied section 51 of the Settled Land Act, making no distinction between a tenant for life and one who is given the powers of a tenant for life under section 58 of the Act. He therefore held the condition void. On the other hand, in In re Haynes, 36 W. R. 321, 37 Ch. D. 306, North, J., held that a condition of residence till sale, there having been no sale, was not within section 51. With great respect to the decision of that learned judge, I do not understand the position he took up. Still, it is evident that he did not intend to differ from In re Paget, and I shall follow that case, though the result is extraordinary. The defendant therefore is entitled for life to the whole of the income of the proceeds of sale.

As to the second point his lordship said: No question can arise whether or not the gift of residue is a "legacy," for the direction is that "all legacies, devises, or bequests" given in favour of females are to be "free of legacy duty." A gift of a legacy free of legacy duty means, I take it, that the duty is to be paid before the residue is calculated. Hence there is great difficulty in saying that the legacy duty should be paid upon a share of the residue. It might be given in an entirely different manner, but in order to do so here you would have to construe these words in two different ways. In one instance they would mean that the duty was to be payable out of the residue, in the other that it was to be paid by the males in exoneration of the females. I arrive at this conclusion with great hesitation, because the testatrix distinctly says that all are to be free of legacy duty, and I am so construing it that some of the "legacies, devises, and bequests" are not to be free. But I am helped in this, that the residuary gift is to the males and females as tenants in common, and though it is not given to them "in equal shares," yet I think that must be implied. Each female must bear her own share in respect of her residuary gift.

Solicitors, Satchell & Chapple; Bloxam, Ellison, & Co.

Chan. Div. } Byrne, J. } May 7.

In re CLARKE.
CLARKE v. CLARKE. (a.)

Will—Charity—Gift to the Corps of Commissionaires—Gift to an institution not charitable—Gift to members of voluntary institution as such—Perpetuity.

The Corps of Commissionaires is a society existing to find employment for discharged or disabled soldiers and sailors. The institution is self-supporting. A gift to the committee for the time being of the Corps of Commissionaires to aid in the purchase of their barracks, or in any other way beneficial to that corps, held to be valid on the grounds that (1) if the institution was a charity the gift was good; (2) in so far as the institution was not a charity the gift was good, as the governing body could deal with it in any way they pleased, and the gift did not tend to a perpetuity.

Summons.

This was an originating summons in which the administrator de bonis non with the will annexed of the testator William H. S. Clarke sought (inter alia) the determination of the following question, "Whether a gift in the will of the remainder of the testator's share of his father's property to the committee for the time being of the Corps of Commissionaires was a valid bequest and passed to the committee for the time being of the said corps?"

The defendants to the summons were the residuary legatee under the will of the testator, a specific legatee under the said will, one of the testator's next-of-kin, and the commanding officers and trustees of a fund known as the officers' endowment fund, and as such representing the Corps of Commissionaires.

The facts of the case were as follow: The testator, who was formerly a lieutenant in the 7th Madras Light Infantry, duly made and executed his last will bearing date the 9th day of August, 1873, which, omitting the formal parts, commenced as follows: "The share of my father's property which comes to me at my mother's death I give, devise, and bequeath to the undermentioned persons severally." Then followed a list of persons to whom pecuniary legacies were given, and the will continued: "The remainder of my share of my father's property I give, devise, and bequeath to the committee for the time being of the Corps of Commissionaires in London to aid in the purchase of their barracks or in any other way beneficial to that corps. Should my mother be living at my death I leave all my personal property to her." And testator appointed J. Cleghorn his executor.

The testator died on the 23rd of April, 1876.

Cleghorn disclaimed the trusts of the will and administration was granted to the defendant's mother, Mrs. Charlotte Clarke.

The testator's interest under his father's will did not vest in possession until the death of the said Charlotte Clarke, which occurred on the 10th of February, 1899.

On the 11th of December, 1899, letters of administration de bonis non of testator were granted to the plaintiff.

The testator's interest in his father's estate amounted to about £5,000.

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The constitution and composition of the Corps of Commissionaires was as follows: Shortly after the Crimean War the institution was founded by Major (afterwards Sir Edward) Walter. His original intention was to furnish wounded and discharged soldiers and sailors with suitable occupation without any outside assistance. Subsequently the institution was developed into a means of providing work for able-bodied soldiers and sailors also. Hence an endowment fund was opened in 1863 to which legacies, subscriptions, and donations had since been made. The corps was said to be self-supporting so far as the men were concerned, and all the employees were bound to contribute to the general funds and to the sick fund, and also to open an account at the savings bank and to pay an amount into the same monthly or quarterly. Nothing was charged against the men for officers' salaries or general expenses.

Premises were first established for the corps by Sir E. Walter in Exchange-court, Strand, and paid for from a private benefaction. Subsequently a large block of premises were acquired for it between the Strand and Maiden-lane, and it was intended eventually to utilize the whole amount for barracks and other buildings for the men. These premises were paid for out of the funds of the body.

The endowment fund was formed because Sir E. Walter considered that it would be too heavy a burden on the men to charge them with the maintenance of the staff. The design or object of the endowment fund was declared to be as follows: "The endowment fund of the Corps of Commissionaires is designed for the payment of the officers of staff and such other objects connected with the institution as may, in the opinion of the board, require assistance, provided such object is not contrary to any fundamental principle of the corps." The scheme, which was adopted in June, 1863, provided that the income of the endowment fund should be devoted by the board to the following purposes: (1) Payment of officers of staff; (2) offices for adjutant and staff; (3) allowance for out-quarter divisions consisting of thirteen men and upwards, not exceeding 10s. per man. Any surplus to be invested to form the nucleus of a fund for building permanent barracks. It appeared that a considerable sum had been accumulated by this means though more was needed before the complete building scheme which was intended could be carried out.

The property and administration of the corps was vested in a board of governors consisting of two permanent trustees, a board of management of eighteen officers, and an executive committee of seven. The executive committee superintended the investment and application of the funds and appointed officers and fixed their salaries. A certain proportionate sum calculated according to the number of members of the corps was carried from the endowment fund of the corps to its general fund.

The above statements as to the objects and character of the corps were verified in an affidavit by its adjutant.

Norton K.C., and Marcy, for the administrator.

Rowden, K.C., and Maughan, for the residuary legatee.—The corps is not entitled to take the legacy. It cannot be said that there exists such a legal entity known to the law as a Corps of Commissionaires: Carne v. Long, 8 W. R. 570, 2 De G. F. & J. 75; In re Amos, Carrier v. Price, 39 W. R. 550, [1891] 3 Ch. 159; In re Dutton, 27 W. R. 398, 4 Ex. D. 54. The corps, further, is not a charity. It is not an institution to relieve poverty, for poverty is not one of the essentials of membership in it. It is not either necessary that the members should be sick, wounded, or maimed soldiers. The gift being a gift to an institution which is not charitable is void as tending to a perpetuity: Thompson v. Shakespear, 8 W. R. 265, 1 De G. F. & J. 399.

Stamp, for one of testator's next-of-kin.

Levett, K.C., and Stewart Smith, for Corps of Commissionaires.—The gift is good on two grounds. First of all, it may be urged that the corps is a charity. There is certainly in its conception the idea of relieving soldiers. This idea is certainly charitable. In the alternative, suppose the institution not to be a charity. It is a good gift to an association which can deal with it as it thinks fit and is not prevented from disposing of the corpus: Cocks v. Manners, 19 W. R. 1055, L. R. 12 Eq. 574.

G. Cave, for another beneficiary.

Rowden, K.C., in reply.—The gift cannot be treated as one to the individuals who compose the corps. It cannot be said that an institution is a charity because it has some features in common with a charity.

Cunnack v. Edwards, 45 W. R. 99, [1896] 2 Ch. 679; Hunter v. Attorney-General, 47 W. R. 673, [1899] A. C. 309; In re Clark's Trusts, 24 W. R. 233, 1 Ch. D. 497, were also referred to.

Cur. adv. vult.

BYRNE, J.—The question is whether a gift in the will of the testator is good or bad as tending to create a perpetuity. [His lordship read the words of the bequest, and continued:] It is common ground that if the legacy is one to or in favour of a charity it is good. Although the original intention of the founder of the Corps of Commissionaires, Sir Edward Walter, as stated by him in a letter printed in the rules and regulations of the corps, appear to have been to found a charity, I do not think that as subsequently and at present constituted the corps can be so considered. It is a voluntary association with a somewhat special constitution for the benefit of able-bodied and disabled soldiers and sailors alike, mainly supported by the subscriptions of the members, and intended for their benefit. [His lordship stated the character of the corps as appearing in the evidence, and continued:] It is, I think, established by the authorities that a gift to a perpetual institution not charitable is not necessarily bad. The test, or one test, appears to be, Will the legacy when paid be subject to any trust which will prevent the existing members of the association from spending it as they please? If not, the gift is good, and this is so also if the gift be construed as a gift to or for the members of the association. On the other hand, if it appears that the legacy is one which by the terms of the gift, or which by reason of the constitution of the association in whose favour it is made tends to a perpetuity, the gift is bad. Two cases were especially relied upon against the validity of the bequest. The first was In re Dutton. In that case the testator gave and bequeathed the capital as well as the income of the proceeds and investments of his trust estate unto the trustees for the time being of the Tunstall Athenæum Mechanics' Institution to be applied by them towards the building fund in connection therewith. This bequest was held invalid on the ground that the money could not be appropriated among the members of the society. The second case was In re Amos. There the gift was "I give, devise, and bequeath unto Thomas Price the property known as 27, Bath-terrace, the condition to be as follows: that the property be left to him for his life and the life of his heir, after which it becomes the property of the Boilermakers and Iron Ship Builders Society." The testator also gave £5 a year to the Boilermakers' Benevolent Fund. North, J., said that the gift here was a gift beyond all question tending to a perpetuity. It was not intended for the benefit of the particular individuals constituting the society at the time. Such a construction would be entirely contrary to the testator's intention. These two decisions are therefore distinguishable from the present case on the ground that the gifts there created or tended to create perpetuities, as they could not be divided among the members of the institution thereby intended to be benefited. In some other cases, like Thompson v. Shakespear and Carne v. Long, the plain intention of the testator as expressed in the will was not merely to maintain an institution, but to maintain it throughout all time. It was, says the Lord Chancellor in Thompson v. Shakespear, the intention of the testator that the institution "should exist in secula sæculorum." No such intention appears in the present case. In support of the validity of the gift the leading case relied on was Cocks v. Manners. In that case there was a gift to the Dominican Convent at Carisbrooke payable to the superior for the time being, and Wickens, V.C., in giving judgment, says, L. R. 12 Eq., at p. 585: "The question remains whether the gift to the Dominican Convent, which seemed to me not charitable, is void for perpetuity. It is argued that it is a gift in trust for the purposes of a perpetual institution, and therefore on a perpetual trust, and Carne v. Long is relied upon. That case does not, I conceive, decide that a gift to a perpetual institution not charitable is bad—for instance, a gift to a club, or to a limited company; but merely that the gift in question was bad; it was a gift to which the trustees could only give effect by holding the property, which seems to have been all real estate, for ever, and applying the income according to the rules. Nothing of that sort is directed here; the gift is ordered to be paid to the superior for the time being, and the superior, when she receives it, will be bound to account for it to the convent—to put it, so to speak, in the common chest; but when there it will be subject to no trust which will prevent the existing members of the convent from spending it as they please. It would, I hold, be an extreme stretch of the rule against perpetuity to hold that it applied to a case of this sort." These observations seem to me to be particularly applicable to the present case. The question has also been considered in several Irish cases in In re Delany's Estate, 9 L. R. Ir. 226, 31 W. R. Dig. 217; and in In re Wilkinson's Trusts, 19 L. R. Ir. 531. In the last-mentioned case the following gift was held valid, "I will, leave, and bequeath the sum of £1,000 to Miss Sarah Anne Spain, superioress of the Convent of Mercy at Kilkee, County Clare, to and for the purposes solely of the said convent, or to such other person as may be superioress of the said convent at the time of my decease." In the judgment Delany's case and the case of Cocks v. Manners are referred to, and it was decided that the gift was valid as there was nothing to prevent the superioress from disposing of the money. In Bradshaw v. Jackman, 21 L. R. Ir. 12, 36 W. R. Dig. 227, there was a bequest to Mary, superioress of St. Anne's Convent of Mercy, Mohill, in trust for the community of the said convent. The Master of the Rolls says: "I think the community of the convent of Mohill means the persons for the time being who are members of that convent, and that if the money were once paid over to or in trust for them there is nothing in the wording of the gift to impose on the legatees any obligation to retain it in specie, or to retain or invest it for the future members of the community. They could spend it or invest it consistently with the terms of the bequest, and that is enough." Looking at the constitution of the Corps of Commissionaires, I see no intention that, apart from some particular funds, it is intended to be a perpetual or permanent institution in the sense indicated in some of the authorities. Of course its founder hoped that it would last for many years, just as when a club is founded it is hoped and intended that it shall be more or less permanent; but that is not the kind of permanency which is sufficient to make a gift to an institution of this kind void for perpetuity. Looking at the form of the gift, it is a gift "for the purchase of barracks," and, having regard to the constitution of the corps, it seems to me that the governing body could deal with the barracks just as they pleased; but the gift does not stop there, it goes on "or in any other way beneficial to that corps," so there is a complete discretion to the governing body to apply the gift in any way they may think best for the benefit of the institution. The solution of the question may be shortly stated thus: "If and so far as the objects of the institution are charitable the gift is good, and if and so far as they are not charitable, still it is a good gift according to the authorities, as it does not create or tend to create a perpetuity, because it is in the power of the governing body to deal with the bequest as they like. I am not concerned in the way in which they may deal with it." His lordship made a declaration that the gift under the will to the Corps of Commissionaires constituted a valid bequest.

Solicitors, H. J. North; Tyrrell Lewis, Lewis, & Broadbent; Soames, Edwards, & Jones; Spencer, Chapman, & Co., for Kinneir & Co, Swindon.

K. B. Div.
(Kennedy and Phillimore, JJ.) June 20.

DAVIDSSON v. HILL. (a.)

Negligence—Injury causing death—Alien—Negligence of British subject—Cause of action outside jurisdiction—Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 and 1864 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93; 27 & 28 Vict. c. 95).

An action will lie in England, under the provisions of the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 and 1864, by the widow of an alien whose death has been caused on the high seas when navigating a ship of his own country, against an English owner of a British ship whose servants have negligently caused the collision and consequent death.

Adam v. The British and Foreign Steamship Co., [1898] 2 Q. B. 430, 47 W. R. Dig. 139 disapproved.

Point of law.

An action was brought by the plaintiff, a widow, to recover damages from the defendants for the death of her husband, who had been killed owing to the negligence of the defendants or their servants.

The case was set down to be heard upon a point of law arising upon the following agreed statement of facts:

Between 2 and 3 a.m. on the 11th of August, 1900, a collision occurred on the high seas between the defendants' steamship Exeter City and the Norwegian barque Ratata. Shortly after the collision, and in consequence thereof, The Ratata sunk, and Johan Davidsson, a Norwegian subject, employed as sailmaker on board The Ratata, and another man, also a Norwegian subject, were drowned.

The collision and the consequent drowning of Johan Davidsson were solely caused by the negligent navigation of The Exeter City by the defendants' servants.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The plaintiff, Josefina Davidsson, is the lawful widow of Johan Davidsson, deceased, and brings this action under the provisions of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93 and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 95, on behalf of herself and the six children lawfully begotten of herself and Johan Davidsson, deceased, to recover compensation for his death. There is no executor or administrator of Johan Davidsson, deceased.

The question for the court was whether upon the facts stated above the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages in this action.

Section 1 of the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (Lord Campbell's Act), enacts "That whensoever the death of a person shall be caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default, and the act, neglect, or default is such as would (if death had not ensued) have entitled the party injured to maintain an action and recover damages in respect thereof, then and in every such case the person who would have been liable if death had not ensued shall be liable to an action for damages, notwithstanding the death of the person injured, and although the death shall have been caused under such circumstances as amount in law to felony."

Hamilton, K.C. (Stokes with him), for the plaintiff.—If the deceased had not been killed, but only injured, he would have had a right of action. The decision of Darling, J., in Adam v. British and Foreign Steamship Co., [1898] 2 Q. B. 430, 47 W. R. Dig. 139, is against the plaintiff's claim, but the current of decisions before that case was opposed to that decision: see The Guldfaxe, 17 W. R. 578, L. R. 2 A. & E. 325; The Explorer, 19 W. R. 166, L. R. 3 A. & E. 289; The Franconia, 25 W. R. 796, 2 P. D. 163; Harris v. Owners of The Franconia, 2 C. P. D. 173, 25 W. R. Dig. 209; The Vera Cruz, 32 W. R. 783, 33 Ib. 477, 9 P. D. 88, at p 96, 10 App. Cas. 59; Colquhoun v. Heddon, 38 W. R. 366, 24 Q. B. D. 149; Jefferys v. Boosey, 4 H. L. Cas. 815, 3 W. R. Dig. 155; Routledge v. Low, 16 W. R. 1081, L. R. 3 H. L. 100; Le Mesurier v. Le Mesurier, [1895] A. C. 517.

Balloch (Laing, K.C., with him), for the defendants.—It must not be assumed that the Legislature legislates for foreigners unless express words are used showing that such is its intention: see Cope v. Doherty, 6 W. R. 537, 695, 4 K. & J. 367, 2 De Gex. 614; The Wild Ranger, 11 W. R. 255, Lush. 553; The Amalia, 13 W. R. 111, Br. & Lush. 151; The Zollverein, 4 W. R. 555, Swab. 96; General Iron Screw Collier Co. v. Schurmans, 8 W. R. 732, 1 J. & H. 180. Before the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, the plaintiff would have had no right of action by English law or by the law maritime as administered in England. No express words including foreigners having been used in the Act it cannot be held to apply to foreigners.

KENNEDY, J.—In this case I am of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to our judgment. If the deceased seaman, who came to his death through the negligence of the defendants' servants, had been a British subject, no doubt, in my view, could have arisen as to the right of the widow to maintain such an action as the present. The action is an action in tort. The defendants, whose servants occasioned the death, are British subjects, and were at the time navigating the British ship, the property of the defendants. Their negligence, and the consequent death of the seaman by drowning, which give rise to the claims, both took place on the high seas, "which," to quote the language of Brett, L.J., in the Chartered Mercantile Bank of India v. Netherlands India Steam Navigation Co., 31 W. R. 445, 10 Q. B. D. 521, at p. 537, "is the common ground of all countries," and therefore, as he proceeds to state, the well-known rule in the case of actions of tort with regard to the exclusive jurisdiction of a foreign country does not apply. Does it make any difference that the deceased was not a British subject, but a Norwegian subject? The contention put forward on behalf of the defendants is that the foreign nationality makes all the difference. Now, in considering how this stands, it is, I think, not irrelevant to point out that, if the deceased had only been damaged by the negligence of the defendants' servants and not drowned, he could have presented an action for negligence in the High Court of Justice if it be assumed, as it properly must be in order to test the right, that the presence of the defendants in this country, and therefore within the jurisdiction, had prevented any technical difficulty arising as to the service of the proceedings against them. He could equally have maintained his action if, circumstances being otherwise the same, the defendants, instead of being British subjects, had been foreigners: see the judgment of Brett, L.J., in the Chartered Mercantile Bank of India v. Netherlands India Steam Navigation Co., at p. 537, and the judgment of Sir Robert Phillimore in The Leon, 29 W. R. 916, 6 P. D. 148, citing the earlier decisions of Dr. Lushington in The Wild Ranger and The Zollverein. If this be so, it would seem to be rather a strange thing that the foreign nationality of the sufferer by another's negligence in no way prejudices his right of action here if he is only hurt and not killed, yet that, if he is killed, it should form, the circumstances being otherwise identical, an absolute bar to any relief of the sufferer's family under these Acts. The Acts are Acts the express object of which is to create a liability to an action for damages whenever the act, neglect, or default which causes the death is such as would, if death had not ensued, have entitled the party injured to maintain an action and recover damages in respect thereof. It is contended, however, by the defendants that such is the law, and the ground upon which it is based is that the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 and 1864 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93; 27 & 28 Vict. c. 95), must be understood as applicable only to British subjects and those persons, whatever their nationality, who are actually within the territorial jurisdiction of the British Crown. The deceased man, Johan Davidsson, was a Norwegian subject, and, as I understand the statement of counsel, had his home with his family in Norway. The defendants properly rely on a recent decision of my brother Darling in Adam v. British and Foreign Steamship Co. and there is no doubt we cannot decide in favour of the plaintiff in the present case without disagreeing with Darling, J., in regard to that judgment. It becomes, therefore, my duty respectfully to consider the grounds upon which it is based and to state why I feel myself compelled to differ from his decision. The circumstances were substantially identical with those of this case. The learned judge in his judgment agreed that "there can be no doubt that had the deceased man been an English subject the action would have lain, notwithstanding that the negligence and death both occurred upon the high seas." He decided against the plaintiff, on the ground, as he stated at p. 433, that "it is a principle of our law that Acts of Parliament do not apply to aliens, at least if they be not even temporarily resident in this country, unless the language of the statute expressly refers to them." In a later passage in his judgment, at p. 434, the proposition is stated in a somewhat modified form, "The intention of the Legislature is to be collected from the statute, and I see no implied, and certainly no express, intention to give to foreigners out of the jurisdiction a right of action which even British subjects had not until the passing of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93." In support of the proposition thus laid down my brother Darling cites passages from the judgments of Dr. Lushington in The Zollverein, of Jervis, C.J., in Jefferys v. Boosey, and of Lord Esher in Colquhoun v. Heddon. I venture to think that it is very important, in order to judge rightly of the applicability of these expressions of judicial opinion to other cases, to pay careful attention to the kind of case which in each instance gave occasion for the utterance of them. Before proceeding in this direction I will only remark in passing that in Routledge v. Low Lord Westbury expressed his dissent from the reasoning in Jefferys v. Boosey, the sum of which he states to be "the conclusion that a British statute must be considered as legislation for British subjects only unless there are special grounds for inferring that the statute was intended to have a wider operation"; and that Lord Brougham in his judgment in Jefferys v. Boosey, 4 H. L. Cas., at p. 970, states the law in more guarded terms than those quoted from the judgment of the Chief Justice. "Generally," he says, "we must assume that the Legislature confines its enactments to its own subjects over whom it has authority, and to whom it owes a duty in return for their obedience. Nothing is more clear than that it may also extend its provisions to foreigners in certain cases, and may, without express words, make it appear that such is the intendment of its provisions. But the presumption is rather against the extension, and the proof of it is rather upon those who would maintain such to be the meaning of the enactments." If, now, we look at the cases in which the judicial dicta in question have been uttered, we find, in my opinion, that the statutory enactment under consideration was one which related to matter of a special and exceptional kind. In Jefferys v. Boosey the Act under consideration was 8 Anne, c. 19, creating special and peculiar property in literary productions called copyright; in Colquhoun v. Heddon the statute was an income tax Act; in The Zollverein the principal statutory provision in view was section 296 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, which imposed a duty in regard to navigation, which, as not being imposed by the maritime law, could not be held in the Court of Admiralty to bind a foreign vessel. So, again, in the case of Cope v. Doherty the statutory provisions under consideration, the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, Part IX., were provisions of a peculiar character in so far as they placed a restriction, limiting liability, upon the general law of nations. Under that general law the owners of a ship injured by the negligent navigation of another are entitled to full damages; but to hold the provisions of the Act which created this peculiar restriction as intended to apply to foreigners would be, as Wood, V.C., puts it in his judgment, "an attempt on the part of the British Parliament to legislate for foreigners by taking away those rights and privileges which they enjoy by the general law, which gives full compensation for damages." The basis of the claim to which the Fatal Accidents Acts give statutory authority is negligence causing an injury, and that is a wrong which I believe the law of every civilized country treats as an actionable wrong. They create, no doubt, a new cause of action (see per Lord Selborne and Lord Blackburn in The Vera Cruz), for previously the relatives of the deceased would not in England sue the wrongdoer, the measure of damages is not the same as in an action by the injured man, and his death is an essential constituent of the right of action. None the less, as I venture to think, is it true to say that in substance the purpose and effect of the legislation is to extend the area of reparation for a wrong which civilized nations treat as an actionable wrong; indeed, the right of redress given is, in a sense, according to the decisions of the Queen's Bench (Blackburn and Lush, JJ.) in Read v. The Great Eastern Railway Co., 16 W. R. 1040, L. R. 3 Q. B. 555, and the Queen's Bench Division in Griffiths v. Earl of Dudley, 30 W. R. 797, 9 Q. B. D. 357, so far identified with the right of the injured man that, if death ensues after he has sued and recovered damages, the relations have no cause of action under this legislation. It seems to me, under all the circumstances and looking at the subject-matter, more reasonable to hold that Parliament did intend to confer the benefit of this legislation upon foreigners as well as upon subjects, and certainly that as against an English wrongdoer foreigners might maintain an action under the statutes in question. It is not necessary to decide whether the action could be maintained in the English courts in the case of death occurring through negligence in a collision on the high seas when both parties were foreigners, or when the wrongdoers were foreign and the sufferer English. Here the plaintiff seeks to enforce her claim against an English subject, and I cannot see why she should not do so. If she cannot enforce her claim, we should have this anomaly, as it seems to me—if a foreigner and an Englishman serving on the same ship were both drowned on the high seas by the same collision negligently caused by an English vessel, the widow of the one could, and the other could not, obtain from the owners of the ship in fault that reparation which our legislation in these statutes has declared to be just. Let me add that the view which I take has the weighty authority of Sir Robert Phillimore in The Explorer after argument. The decision in The Explorer was no doubt overruled by the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords in The Vera Cruz, but, as I understand the judgment of the House of Lords, on a different point altogether—viz., that the Court of Admiralty had no jurisdiction to entertain an action in rem for loss of life under Lord Campbell's Act. And it is not, I think, wholly undeserving of notice that in the case of The Bernina, 35 W. R. 214, 12 P. D. 58, 36 W. R. 870, 13 App. Cas. 1, which was litigated in 1886-87—i.e., two years after the decision in The Vera Cruz, and was carried up to the House of Lords, one of the two successful claimants of damages under Lord Campbell's Act in an action in personam against the owners of the wrongdoing ship was one Habiba Harone Toeg, of Baghdad, the mother of Moses Aaron Toeg, a passenger on a ship from London to Bushire, who lost his life in the collision caused by the negligence of the defendants' servants in the course of the voyage, and who, as I presume from his name and his mother's nationality, was himself a foreigner. No question of her right to recover on the ground of nationality either of herself or of the deceased was raised by the defendants, and, therefore, the case is not in any sense a decision in favour of the right.

PHILLIMORE, J.—I agree with the judgment of my learned brother. We have had to determine whether a foreigner the widow of a foreign seaman, killed on the high seas when navigating on board one of the ships of his own country by a collision between his ship and a British ship, can maintain an action in England against the English owners of the British ship for the negligence of their servants in causing the collision and death.

I start with the proposition that if the man had not been killed, but only injured, he during his life could have maintained an action for damages, such an action being maintainable by the lex fori and by the lex loci delicti commissi, whether the locus be regarded as English or British territory or as the

the high seas over which maritime law or maritime law as administered in this country prevails. As regards English or British territory this is common knowledge. That such a tort would also be actionable by the law maritime as administered in this country is shown by The Ruckers, 4 Ch. Rob. 73, and by other cases which I am about to cite. I have no doubt that other countries administer the law maritime in the same way. For some proof of it I cite the observations in the American cases of The Belfast, 7 Wallace 624; Ex parte Gordon, 14 Otto 515. This not being an action in rem, it is not necessary to show that the High Court of Admiralty would, while there was such a separate court, have had jurisdiction. But I have no doubt that it would. The principle of the decision in The Zeta, [1893] App. Cas. 468, and the reasoning of Lord Herschell, in whose judgment all previous cases are cited, the language of my brother Bruce in The Theta, [1893] P. 468, and the settled practice of the Admiralty Division to allow in proper cases such actions in rem have concluded the question, the true key to which might have been found long ago in the language of Dr. Lushington in The Sarah, Lush. 549.

I have hitherto not considered one possible lex loci, the law of the foreign ship, in this instance that of Norway. If such a tort were not actionable by the law of Norway, it would be necessary to consider which was the law applicable, whether that of the British ship on which the act of negligence was committed or that of the Norwegian ship on which the act was felt, or whether, as his death was in the sea by drowning, general maritime law as administered in the English courts should apply. This matter underwent great discussion in Reg. v. Keyn, 2 Ex. D. 63, 25 W. R. Dig. 87. It will be found treated of in the separate judgments of Lindley, J., at p. 98, of Denman, J., at pp. 101 to 107, Brett, J., at p. 148, Bramwell, J., at p. 150, Lord Coleridge, C.J., at p. 158, and of Cockburn, L.C.J., at pp. 232 to 238. It would be necessary also to consider the case of The Leon, 29 W. R. 916, 6 P. D. 148, but till it is otherwise pleaded and proved I take the law of Norway to be the same as our own.

Having thus established my first proposition, that an injured man could have maintained during his life an action for damages in such a case as the present, I come to apply the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846. [After citing section 1 of the statute, his lordship proceeded:] These words are wide enough; and no one doubts that they apply to foreigners in England or to British seamen, as against British shipowners on the high seas. There is the lex fori, and if the tort be held to be done on the British ship the lex loci. It has not been pleaded that the law of Norway differs in this respect from ours; and I leave, as before, the possible consequences of such a state of things out of consideration. If the lex loci be the law maritime, I am not sure that it must not now be held that the injury done to the relatives of the dead man by killing the bread winner is to be deemed an actionable tort by the law maritime. The reasoning of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Ex parte Gordon, and the fact that by the law of Scotland, and, I believe, now the law of many civilized countries—e.g., the United States, France (see Zachariæ (ed. 1878), vol. 4, p. 17), and Germany, as I am informed, this action lies, lead me to think that if at one time this tort was not actionable by the law maritime it may yet well be actionable now.

I have still to consider the decision and reasoning of my brother Darling in Adam v. British and Foreign Steamship Co. That decision is in point, and if we decide now in favour of the plaintiff we must disagree with it. It rests mainly, I think, upon the principle that Acts of Parliament are to be deemed not to apply to non-resident aliens unless the court is compelled so to apply them. There are a number of decisions upon the construction of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, which set forth this principle as applicable to the construction of statutes imposing a burden upon a foreigner. Perhaps the strongest of these is Cope v. Doherty; but even in this case the reservation of Knight Bruce, L.J., at p. 621, would make me pause. On the other hand, where it is a case of giving a remedy to a foreigner, the decision of Dr. Lushington in The Milford, Swab. 362, and the constant practice which has followed up that decision is the other way. The latter position is, I think, sound. Our courts are not only open, but open equally to foreigners as to British subjects; and foreigners who have the benefit of the English common law have also the benefit of English statutes. At any rate where a statute brings the English law into harmony with the law of the foreigner as in the case of The Milford, I think this must be so. If an Englishman on board a foreign ship or a foreigner on board a British ship is run down by a British ship upon the high seas it seems almost certain that an action would lie. Are the representatives of a foreigner on board a ship of his own nationality whose national law would probably give them at least as good a remedy as that given by the Fatal Accidents Act to be deprived of their right to recover because they must have recourse to statute law instead of to unwritten common law? I think not. Is the law to be different for a Scotch owner of a British ship, and can it be that as against the owner in this case, if he were a Scotchman, the foreigner could maintain an action because the law of solatium is part of the common law of Scotland, but as against an English owner he cannot, because the Fatal Accidents Act is a statutory addition to the common law of England? I think not. There must be judgment for the plaintiff.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Stokes & Stokes.

Solicitors for the defendants, Ince, Colt, & Ince.

C. C. R.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Mathew, Wills, Grantham, and Bigham, JJ.) — May 18.

REX v. COSNETT. (a.)

Criminal law—Obtaining goods by false pretences—Parting with possession—Goods loaded on prisoner's van before false pretence—Cheque for balance dishonoured.

The prisoner agreed to purchase a quantity of old iron from the prosecutor, and paid a deposit of ten shillings. The next day he came with a cart and man to fetch the iron away, and said, "I will pay you the remainder of the money when I have loaded the iron." The iron having been placed in the cart, the prisoner returned to prosecutor's house and gave him a cheque for the balance, which was subsequently dishonoured.

Held, that there was evidence upon which the jury might find that the goods were obtained by false pretence, as the prosecutor did not intend to part with the goods until after he had received the cheque.

Case stated by the deputy-chairman of the Worcestershire Quarter Sessions on the trial of an indictment against Thomas Cosnett, the defendant, at the April quarter sessions.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The indictment charged the defendant with obtaining 1 ton 5 cwt. of iron from the prosecutor by false pretences.

The prosecutor was a farmer and had about his premises a quantity of old iron which the defendant, on the 1st of January last, agreed to buy for £1 17s.

The sum of ten shillings was paid on account, and the balance was agreed to be paid when the iron was fetched away.

No part of the iron was taken away, but on the following day the defendant called at the prosecutor's house with a pony and cart accompanied by another man. The defendant said, "I have come for the iron. Shall you be about presently? I will pay you the remainder of the money when I have loaded the iron." After a short interval, during which the prisoner left for the purpose of loading the iron, he returned to the house and said he wished to write a cheque. The prosecutor said, "Surely you don't want to write a cheque for that small amount?" The prisoner replied, "I am well known in Pershore," and mentioned the names of two gentlemen, one of whom was known to the prosecutor. On the prosecutor's stating that the defendant was a stranger to him, he replied, "I have a banking account and it will be all right," and he then wrote out a cheque for £1 7s. drawn on Messrs. Lechmere & Co.'s bank at Tewkesbury, which he handed to the prosecutor.

The prosecutor stated in evidence that he only parted with the iron on the representation that the cheque was all right. When the defendant went into the house to write the cheque the iron was not completely loaded. There were a few pieces on the ground which his assistant put on to the cart, but by the time the prosecutor and the defendant came out of the house, after the cheque had been delivered to him, the cart and its load had just reached the public road, and were subsequently taken away by the defendant.

The cheque was dishonoured; and it was proved that though the defendant had at one time had a small account at the Tewkesbury Bank, which was opened on the 3rd of August, 1899, such account was closed on the 31st of October, 1899, by order of the managers, and that notice of the closing of the account was communicated to the defendant.

The jury found, in answer to questions put to them, (1) that the intention of the parties was that the iron should remain the prosecutor's property till the whole of the purchase-money had been paid; (2) that the prosecutor had not parted with possession or control of the goods at the time when the cheque was tendered; (3) that the defendant was aware that his banking account had been closed in October, 1899, and that the cheque which he drew would not be honoured; (4) that the prosecutor parted with the iron by means of the false statements made to him with reference to the banking account and cheque; and (5) that the defendant intended throughout to defraud the prosecutor. They accordingly returned a verdict of guilty.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether, upon the facts and the finding of the jury, the defendant was rightly convicted.

Sherwood, for the defendant.—There is no evidence to support a conviction, because the property in the iron had already passed when the cheque was tendered. If the defendant committed any offence it was that of obtaining credit by means of fraud within the mischief of section 13, sub-section 1, of the Debtors Act, 1869: see Reg. v. Jones, 46 W. R. 191, [1898] 1 Q. B. 119.

J. B. Matthews, for the prosecution, was not heard.

THE COURT gave judgment for the Crown.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—It was argued by Mr. Sherwood on behalf of the defendant that there was no evidence that the defendant had obtained the iron by means of a false pretence, because he said it was a fair inference to draw that before the cheque was passed all the iron was in the cart, and was in the possession of the defendant's man. He submitted that on that hypothesis the first, second, and fourth findings of the jury could not be supported. I cannot agree with him. The facts were that there was a contract for the sale of the iron. Ten shillings was paid on account at the time, and the balance was to be paid when the iron was fetched away. It was not suggested that the payment of the 10s. was sufficient to entitle the defendant to the goods, but it was argued that the property had passed before the payment of the balance. The facts were that when the defendant came to fetch the goods he said he would pay when he had finished the loading. While the loading was in progress he wrote the cheque for the balance, and delivered it to the prosecutor. It is clear that the prosecutor would not have allowed the iron to go out of his possession unless something had been said about payment. In my opinion there is evidence on which the jury could find as they did.

MATHEW, J.—I agree. I only desire to add that in my judgment there is abundant evidence that the loading of the cart was never intended to be a parting by the prosecutor with the possession of the goods.

WILLS, GRANTHAM, and BIGHAM, JJ., concurred.

Solicitors, Robbins, Billing, & Co., for Curtler, Davis, & Curtler, Worcester, for the prosecution; A. A. Maund, Worcester, for the defendant.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Admiralty. } May 18; June 14.

"THE SWINDON." (a.)

Admiralty—Jurisdiction of county court and Trimming Board Committee—Coal Trimmers' Union.

Where a committee of a Coal Trimmers' Union held that a certain vessel was, according to their bye-laws, a "self-trimmer," the effect of which was to bind her to a certain tariff rate of the board's,

Held, by the county court (and affirmed by the Divisional Court), that the question was one of law, and was within the jurisdiction of the county court and not of the Trimmers' Union.

This was an appeal from the county court of Glamorganshire, holden at Cardiff on the 11th of January, 1901.

The plaintiffs, Messrs. Millers & Corys, of Cape Verde Islands, claimed a sum of £75 11s. 4d. for trimming 2,948 tons of coal at 3½d., amounting to £42 19s. 10d., and for 2,843 tons at 2¾d. amounting to £32 11s. 6d.

The defendants were the owners of the steamship Swindon, and paid into court £30 3s. 3d. in settlement of the plaintiffs' claim.

The direct issue between the plaintiffs and the defendants was the tariff rate to which the steamship Swindon was liable, and this gave rise to a question of the respective jurisdictions of the county court and a committee of the Coal Trimmers' Union.

The facts were as follows: The Swindon is a steel screw steamship of 5,750 tons, and is known as a

(a.) Reported by GWYNNE HALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

"self-trimmer"—that is, she is so constructed as to her hatches and the height of her deck, above the level of her coal when ladened down to her load-line, as to save labour in trimming her coal.

On the 24th of April, 1900, the Trimming Board decided that the vessel was a "self-trimmer."

On the 17th of March, 1900, The Swindon was chartered by the defendants to the plaintiffs, and by paragraph 4 of the charter-party the cargo of the vessel was to be trimmed by men appointed by the charterers at the tariff rate of the port.

The defendants before the learned county court judge contended that the question as to whether the vessel was a self-trimmer or not was wholly within the province of the Trimming Committee, and that the county court had no jurisdiction in the matter.

The learned judge held that the question was one entirely of law, and one in which the county court was seised of jurisdiction, and gave judgment for the plaintiffs for £66 7s. 1d. with costs, but stayed execution pending an appeal being lodged within a fortnight.

The defendants appealed.

Abel Thomas, K.C., and Montague Lush, for the appellants, contended that there was no such thing as a "self-trimmer"; absolutely it was a matter of degree. Furthermore, inasmuch as the respondents had agreed to accept the tariff rate of the port, they had ipso facto agreed to allow the authority of the port to determine what the rate should be; if, therefore, the county court judge was to take a ship out of the board's classification the tariff itself would be thereby upset.

Eldon Bankes, K.C., and Bailhache, for the respondents, contended that the tariff rate of the Trimming Board had no legislative or contractual effect whatever, and was no more than an arrangement made to avoid disputes, and it was stated at the end of the tariff book, which was before the court, that "the charges for any self-trimmers not in this list must be fixed by the Disputes Committee."

BARNES, J., in delivering the judgment of the court, said: This is an appeal from the decision of the county court judge at Cardiff holding the plaintiffs entitled to recover from the defendants the sum of £66 7s. 1d. for the expense of trimming a cargo of coal in the steamship Swindon at Cardiff in April, 1900. The Swindon was chartered by her owners, the defendants, to the plaintiffs by charter-party of the 17th of March, 1900, to load at Cardiff, Penarth, or Barry a cargo of coal for St. Vincent, Cape Verde Islands, at 10s. 3d. per ton freight, which was to be in free of trimming and certain other charges, and the charter-party provided that the cargo was to be trimmed by men appointed by the charterers at the tariff rate of the port. The vessel was loaded with a cargo of coal at Cardiff under the charter-party in April, 1900, and almost 1,250 tons were trimmed by the trimmers. The trimming was paid for by the plaintiffs, and their case was that they were entitled to be paid by the defendants the above-mentioned sum of £66 7s. 1d., being the tariff rate of the port at 2¾d. per ton for trimming the cargo of the said vessel, treating her as a one-decked vessel. The defendants' counterclaim was that the vessel had been held by the Trimming Committee, a board at Cardiff, to be what is termed a "self-trimmer," and that all that they were bound to pay was the sum of £30 3s. 3d., which is at the rate of 1¼d. per ton fixed by the board; and they paid this sum into court. It was admitted that, if the vessel was to be treated as a self-trimmer, the defendants had paid enough into court, but that if the vessel was not to be treated as a self-trimmer the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed. The learned county court judge held upon the evidence given before him that the vessel was not a self-trimmer, and that the Trimming Board had not jurisdiction to hold that she was. The first point is whether the parties are bound by the decision of the committee of the Trimming Board. The only stipulations between the parties are those referred to in the charter-party, the effect of which is that the defendants have to pay for the trimming at the tariff rate of the port. The question, then, is what was the tariff rate of the port for this vessel. The trimming tariff has been arranged between the coal shippers and the Cardiff, Penarth, and Barry Coal Trimmers' Union, as in the little book which was before the court. This provides in the first instance that on and after the 15th of December, 1890, the charges for trimming coal and coke on board sailing and steam vessels within the port of Cardiff would be in accordance with certain scales set out therein, and the charge in these scales for The Swindon, treating her as a one-deck vessel, is 2¾d. per ton. It appears that after the tariff had been in existence for some years vessels denominated self-trimmers came into use, and then a further agreement was made. That agreement is to be found on p. 7 of the tariff book, and is as follows: "It is hereby agreed by and between the undersigned representatives of the coal shippers and of the Cardiff, Penarth, and Barry Coal Trimmers' Union that supplemental to the terms of the tariff arranged and bearing date the 15th of December, 1890, in respect of steamers denominated self-trimmers that rates shown on attached schedule, being those now paid, shall apply to steamers already known as frequenting the port, and that such steamers shall be classified, according to the rates paid, into groups, and any new steamers or boats not included in this list, but which may be of the same type as regards the work involved in trimming, shall be included in the corresponding group." The book then gives a list of self-trimming steamers with the charges opposite each, and has at p. 27 the following clause: "The charges for any self-trimmers not included in this list must be fixed by the Disputes Committee." It is under these provisions that the defendants contended that, the Trimming Board having held that the vessel is a self-trimmer, and that the rate to be paid was 1¼d., they, the defendants, are liable for no more. How the matter came before the Trimming Board is not very clear. It would seem that the trimmers demanded of the plaintiffs the higher rate as if the vessel were not a self-trimmer, and according to some of the witnesses the master of the vessel told the trimmers to go on at the usual rate. All that is to be found from the evidence with regard to the matters coming before the board is that the owners appear to have applied to the committee called the Trimming Board to have The Swindon held to be a self-trimmer, and it seems to have been assumed in argument that, if the board had jurisdiction under the provisions aforesaid to decide this matter, the tariff rate has been properly paid by them at 1¼d. per ton for The Swindon, and the case was argued before us really upon the construction of the clauses of the tariff book above mentioned. The county court judge's opinion is contained in the following passage: "After considering it before, and considering it again to-day, I can see it is clear (I have not the slightest doubt about it) that, in the event of any question arising as to the proper classification of such steamer, or any other question which affects the application of the tariff generally, on the best consideration I can give to it, that only means what rate is to be paid, and, before the Trimming Committee can determine what rate is to be paid, somebody, and not the Trimming Committee, must determine in the case whether a vessel is denominated a self-trimmer or not." We are of opinion that he is right. The tariff book gives rates for vessels generally, and these contain the above-mentioned clause about self-trimmers, which may be considered as exceptions from the general rates. Certain vessels are specified as "self-trimmers," and such steamers are to be classified according to the rules into groups, and then any new steamers or boats not included in the list, but which may be of the same type as regards the work involved in trimming, shall be included in the corresponding group, but all that the committee have power to decide is any question as to the proper classification of such steamer. There is no clear and definite wording which gives the committee power to say whether the vessel is a "self-trimmer" or not, but their powers appear to be confined to fixing the rate for a vessel which is a "self-trimmer." This may be inconvenient, and it certainly seems desirable that such questions relating to contentions as are necessary to be determined in such a case should be decided by a committee of experts, but, according to our reading of the rules, the decision of what is a self-trimmer has not been left to the committee. The wording of the clause on p. 27 also justifies these views. Grounds were urged before us for holding on the one hand that it was, and on the other hand that it was not, intended that the committee should have the power contended for by the defendants. Whatever the intention may have been, we cannot go beyond the tariff rules themselves. We do not consider that the words "any other question which affects the application of the tariff generally" gave the power contended for by the defendants. Having regard to the collocation and the fact that the powers connected with new steamers had been already dealt with, and that this general clause may have effect given to it in relation to other points in the tariff, we cannot consider that it was intended to confer a power which had not been expressly conferred when any new self-trimmers were being dealt with. The judge of the court below had then to determine whether in fact the vessel was a "self-trimmer." We see no ground for differing from him, having regard to the evidence given. The plaintiffs gave evidence to the effect that the vessel required as much trimming as any ordinary vessel, and the defendants attempted to meet this by certain evidence as to the loading of a sister ship on a special occasion, which the county court judge has dealt with fully in his judgment. Whether or not a vessel is a "self-trimmer" appears to be a question of degree, and the defendants do not appear to have given any adequate evidence as to what constituted a "self-trimmer" or made any attempt to give evidence of sizes of hatches, details of constructions, or to properly compare The Swindon with other vessels which are treated as "self-trimmers." Whether might have been the result if such evidence had been given, we are of opinion that, upon the evidence which was before the court in the present case, the vessel has not been brought within the part of the tariff which relates to "self-trimmers," and the ordinary tariff rate contended for by the plaintiffs must be paid. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Abel Thomas asked for leave to appeal, inasmuch as the court's decision affected hundreds of vessels.

JEUNE P., gave leave to appeal on the question of law.

Solicitors, Botterell & Roche, for Vaughan & Roche, Cardiff; Downing, Bolam, & Co., for Downing & Handcock, Cardiff.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). Dec. 14.

LYSONS v. ANDREW KNOWLES & SONS (LIMITED).
STUART v. NIXON & BRUCE. (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Average weekly earnings—Employed less than two weeks—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1; Schedule—Loading and unloading a vessel.

It is not necessary for a workman to be two weeks in the service of his employer in order to be entitled to the benefit of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The 1*st section of the Act gives the compensation; the schedule the method of computing it.*

Where a stevedore was killed on a vessel whilst engaged in placing the beams which support the hatchway, and this took place after the cargo had been stowed from the wharf or quay.

Held (Lord Lindley dissenting), that the process of loading was not then completed within the meaning of the Act.

Decisions of the Court of Appeal (48 W. R. 408, [1900] 1 Q. B. 780, and 48 W. R. 598, [1900] 2 Q. B. 95) reversed.

Appeal from Court of Appeal (A. L. Smith and Collins, L.JJ., Romer, L.J., doubting) (48 W. R. 408, [1900] 1 Q. B. 780).

The appellant was a pitman in the employ of the respondents, who were owners of a colliery, and was engaged as a pieceworker at six shillings a day.

He began work on a Tuesday and did a day's work. The next day was a holiday.

On Thursday he again went into the pit to do a day's work, and while working was injured by the fall of a piece of coal.

On Friday he was paid six shillings for the first day's work and on the Friday following six shillings for the second day.

The appellant claimed compensation for the injury sustained.

The county court judge considered that as appellant had earned twelve shillings within a period of seven days, that sum must be taken as his average weekly earnings; the Court of Appeal, however, held that it was necessary for a workman to have been at least two weeks in the service of his employer in order to be entitled to compensation

The first schedule to the Act, sub-section 1 (b), is as follows: "The amount of compensation under this Act shall be, when total or partial incapacity for work results from the injury, a weekly payment during the incapacity, after the second week, not exceeding 50 per cent. of his average weekly earnings during the previous twelve months, if he has been so long employed, but, if not, then for any less period during which he has been in the employment of the same employer, such weekly payment not to exceed one pound."

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and Atherley Jones, Q.C. (Richard Smith with them), for the appellant.—Schedule I., section 1, dealing with the amount of compensation, refers to the amount only, and not to the liability. Section 1 of the Act gives compensation in all cases, as provided by schedule. [Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—The schedule often contains a good deal of enactment.] Unless contained in words average weekly earnings, there are no conditions save those set out in section 2. If so, it is obscure and covertly. However workmen may contract, the industry is to bear this burden. The word average is not strictly employed. The amount is not to depend on a mere chance. In case of death he is not deprived of the £150 even assuming you cannot get an average weekly earnings. The narrow construction excludes all classes of day labourers, &c., which is an immense qualification of the Act.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

C. A. Cripps, Q.C., and F. H. Mellor, for the respondents.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., replied.

THE HOUSE deferred giving judgment until after argument in the next case—Stuart v. Nixon & Bruce.

In this appeal the workman, a stevedore's labourer, was killed on the fifth day by an accident after continuous employment at daily wages.

His widow, the appellant, claimed compensation.

The Court of Appeal (Collins, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) (48 W. R. 598, [1900] 2 Q. B. 95), considered the case governed by Lysons v. Andrew Knowles & Sons.

There was a further question as to whether the deceased was engaged in loading the vessel which is dealt with in the judgments.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and Leslie Scott, for the appellant.

Ruegg, Q.C., and A. G. Steel, for the respondent.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—In these cases I think it is impossible not to recognize the fact that the Act of Parliament which your lordships are called upon to construe is one which from time to time presents difficulties of construction. I am not surprised that the Legislature, having a somewhat difficult problem to solve, has used language which does require consideration to give it its true signification. From time to time it was met in the course of manufacturing this Act of Parliament with difficulties that were sought to be solved by the use of words which were, perhaps, not the best chosen, and which have raised some difficulties in the construction of the Act.

The broad proposition, of course, was that the Legislature intended that there should be compensation given to every workman in certain trades when an injury happened to him in the course of his employment, subject to certain exceptions which are not relevant to the question now under debate. The language in which the right was given must be looked at, I think, with care to see whether the language was (as it appears in the first instance) intended in its universality, or was intended to be cut down, as is contended, to a very limited right by sections or phrases in the schedule. Certainly, whatever other difficulty there may be in construing the language as it stands, it would be, I think, more difficult still if we were to introduce these qualifications upon the right.

Now, in the view which I suggest to your lordships, I think the language is simple enough, and if one looks at what I might call the framework of the legislation which is intended to be applied, I think there is not so much difficulty as has been contended with regard to this particular provision. The language is this: "If in any employment to which this Act applies personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment is caused to a workman, his employer shall, subject as hereinafter mentioned, be liable to pay compensation." That I regard as the affirmative or leading enactment. What follows appears to me to be equivalent to a statement that the mode in which that compensation is to ascertained and determined is to be according to the method and manner provided for in the schedule. The language itself (I do not want to undervalue the argument) is "liable to pay compensation in accordance with the first schedule to this Act." The first thing, I think, one has to do is to apply one's mind to what is the substantive intention and meaning of this statute. Does it mean that every workman, who is employed in one of the prescribed trades, shall be (subject to certain conditions not relevant to the matter now under debate) entitled to compensation? Or does it mean that only workmen shall be entitled to compensation in respect of whom it is possible to say that the periods of their employment and the mode in which they are paid will render it possible to establish an average weekly payment, so that anybody who comes outside that category is not entitled to any compensation at all? My lords, for my own part I cannot entertain a doubt that the Legislature did mean that every workman in the prescribed trades should be entitled to compensation, and I think that is the language which one would naturally expect to have been used by the Legislature if that was the meaning of the enactment. But now it is said that the language of the enactment is that he is to "be liable to pay compensation in accordance with the first schedule to this Act." It is to be observed that even upon that language it is not such compensation as is enacted in the schedule, but "in accordance with the first schedule to this Act"; and when we look at the first schedule of the Act, we find that there are a variety of provisions which are very intelligible indeed, if we take what I say is the leading enactment, that every workman is entitled to compensation.

But it is said: if a workman is not employed for at least two weeks, how can you average his earnings or his agreed earnings by an "average" which, when you have only got one term, is an impossible phrase. Well, my lords, for my own part, if I came to the conclusion that there had been no mode by which the quantum should be fixed in the schedule, I should still be of opinion that there was no repealing of the right which had first been granted, but that, by arbitration or by some other means which I think would be quite within the powers of the Act, the compensation should be ascertained; because I do not look upon the provision made in respect of the compensation as one which, either in language or in the intention of the Legislature, was meant to cut down and override the primary right given to every workman to compensation, but I regard it as a mode of ascertaining what the quantum was to be. And I think if one looks at the whole framework of the schedule it is intelligible enough why those modes of calculation were adopted. In the first place it will be remembered that no compensation is due to anyone unless he is disabled for a period of two weeks, the intention thereby being to exclude all trifling injuries. In the next place, assuming that the person is entitled to compensation during the period in which he is unable to work and support himself, the Legislature obviously had in its mind this, that the man was not to be left without provision during such period as he was laid up by reason of the accident, and they enacted that payment—it is described as a "weekly payment"—should be given to him. Then I suppose it occurred to everybody who was dealing with the mode in which the Act was to be administered, and considering how the relief was to be given, that you must in some way or another find out what was to be the weekly payment if it had relation to his earnings or wages. It was obvious, I should think, to anyone, that everybody is not paid by the week, that you cannot have the exact thing made ready to your hand to enable you to find out how much the weekly payment is to be. You must split up that which is what I call the aggregate payment, whether it is by the year, or the month, or what not, into such proportions in relation to his weekly earnings that the week's payment, or rather, as it was described, the payment in respect of the week, should be arrived at. How was that to be done? It seems to me that the Legislature, in using the phrase that you must take the average of the earnings for the week, did not in the least mean to limit and cut down the right of the disabled labourer to have his compensation, so that if you had a difficulty in the arithmetic he was not to get it at all; but it provided an artificial means of finding out what that quantum was to be, and that was no doubt by the use of the word "average."

I do not myself feel very much impressed by the discussion that we have had as to what the word "average" strictly means. I think in ordinary popular parlance when you talk of a man, if he has earned irregular wages, whether unequal wages or equal wages, you would say, speaking of a yearly servant, that on the average he got so much a week or so much a month, as the case might be. I think it was in that popular sense, taking one day with another, or one week with another, that the Legislature used those words, and I think it is what everybody would understand by "average" that his earnings were so much—not his agreed earnings by contract, there it would be definite—that if a man was only employed at irregular intervals or at irregular amounts you were to get at what the average was by putting them together and striking an average so as to afford a test of the weekly sum to be paid. That, my lords, seems to me to account for the language in which the Legislature has couched its enactment.

The alternative is this, that you are to suppose that the statute, giving a right in the language which I have read, intended to exclude the enormous class of day labourers and persons not in regular employment but only irregularly employed from time to time, unless you could strike the average of a fortnight's employment. Now, my lords, looking at the language of the statute and the mode in which what may be described as the initial right is given, I should shrink very much from such a construction, and I am unable to concur with the Court of Appeal. The Court of Appeal undoubtedly does say in words that they can give no account or reason why the statute should be so contrived, and that seems to me to be rather an admitted weakness in a construction when you are construing a statute, that you are compelled to say: I so construe it, but why I am wholly unable to conjecture. It appears to me that there is a very reasonable ground upon which you should adopt the construction which I have suggested to your lordships, and if that is so, the first case with which your lordships are dealing would be decided in favour of the plaintiff, reversing the order of the Court of Appeal.

The next case, Stuart v. Nixon & Bruce, raises a point which is peculiarly its own. In so far as it touches the question with which I have now dealt it is disposed of by what I have already said, but it raises also a point which is peculiarly its own. If I understand the facts (and it is not at all immaterial to consider what the exact facts found, or intended to be found, by the county court judge are), the fact is that the stevedore was engaged in loading this vessel—I will not say the loading was incomplete, because that would be assuming the question which I propose to deal with, but all the cargo was stowed in. The beams which form an essential part of the vessel and the hatchways, which are to preserve both the safety of the vessel and the safety of the cargo, had not been put in, and in the course of the operation of putting those beams in which form part of the necessary support of the hatchways, the person who was engaged in that operation, whose widow is suing here, was killed. He was engaged in the operation which I have described. Now, first of all, was he engaged in the action of "loading"? I should think very few people would describe the work he was then doing as anything else. It is true that at that particular moment he was engaged in putting in their place the beams which formed part of the covering of the vessel and not actual parts of the cargo which was being carried. When you find the word "loading"—I will deal presently with the other words upon which one of your lordships, I am afraid, entertains some doubt—I say, so far as the word "loading" is concerned, can anyone doubt that the whole operation was intended to be included within the words of the enactment? I should have thought it was impossible to doubt it. Nor do I entertain any difficulty about the stevedore being the person who was doing it. I could quite understand that if the crew was engaged in doing it it could be said that, although the joint action of the stevedore and the crew was "loading," yet the stevedore was not loading but the crew were in respect of this particular matter. First of all as regards the thing done, can it be reasonably contended that the putting in of the hatchway and completing the safety of the vessel and the safety of the cargo by this means was not a loading of the vessel? Would anybody say that if the stevedore had undertaken to completely load such and such a vessel, if he had left the hatches off and not put the beams in for the purpose of receiving the hatchways, he had completed his contract? It may be the same question, perhaps, but only a different form of putting it. I should myself entertain no doubt that it was part of the duty of the person loading the vessel to put on the hatchways just as much as to put in the bags in any particular part of the hold.

But then, my lords, comes this question. By a very similar application of the fashion of legislation by reference, the Legislature has made the use of certain machinery for loading or unloading to or from a wharf, &c., not machinery of a factory, but it has made it by statute a "factory" itself, and the person using the machinery is to be the person in control of the factory so as to establish the legal liability. I admit that the statement of that legislation is somewhat grotesque, but that is what the Legislature has done. The county court judge not unnaturally shrank from adopting what the Legislature has done, but I am afraid neither a county court judge nor your lordships' house have any right to criticize what the Legislature has done. We must administer the law as it is, and if the Legislature has thought proper to make machinery so used a "factory" your lordships must assume it to be a factory for the purpose of any decision at which your lordships can arrive.

Then there arises another and a more subtle point upon which one of your lordships, I think, entertains some doubt. The language of the statute is that the person so engaged must be either loading or unloading to or from a wharf. Now, the criticism as I understand it is this, that at the particular moment when this accident happened there was no operation that could properly be described as loading or unloading to or from a wharf. All the bags were in, and the only thing that remained to be done was that which I have described, and therefore the particular machinery which, only while used in loading or unloading to or from a wharf becomes a "factory" with all the consequences incident thereto, was not at that moment a factory. That was the argument. But, my lords, to my mind that is putting far too narrow a construction upon the words of a statute which was passed before the Workmen's Compensation Act and which was intended to be a protection to the workmen in peculiarly dangerous operations. Amongst other things, one operation which the Legislature thought it right to protect was the operation of loading or unloading to or from a wharf. With respect to the other parts of this transaction no question is raised as to the Act applying; but the words "to or from a wharf" are suggested to exclude the particular moment when this transaction took place.

Taking a broad view of that question, I should have thought it was impossible to suppose that the Legislature intended to confine the protection of workmen to the exact moment when a bag was being either lowered from or to a wharf. Surely what they intended to protect the workmen from was the danger of an operation, in the ordinary course of such transactions when something is being done, not limited to the exact moment, but, speaking of the whole transaction—when the transaction is being effected of loading or unloading from a vessel to a wharf. Various points have been put in the course of the argument, and it has been, I think, with great force argued, Does anybody suppose that it is only while the machinery has actually a bag in its clutches that the Act applies? When it is swinging back again itself empty, or when it is descending into the hold to get a bag, although there is not a bag attached to it, is not that loading or unloading? Literally it is not, and if the same criticism is to be applied each of these transactions must be held to be outside the Act of Parliament, because at that moment no bag was either being loaded or unloaded. I cannot think that is the proper way to construe a statute passed with that object in such language. The loading or unloading must be treated as a whole transaction, as men in business in ordinary life would regard it. How was the man employed? He was employed in loading or unloading the vessel, although at the particular moment he may have been standing still and doing nothing. I think the words "loading to or from a wharf" are satisfied by the fact that the men were engaged in this transaction—I was going to say it was ancillary to the main transaction of loading or unloading, but I think that would be an inadequate statement of it, because I think it is part of the loading and unloading. It is part of the operations which the human labour is engaged in, in doing the very thing the Legislature contemplated as requiring this protection, and, therefore, I think this point also fails and that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment.

For these reasons I move that in both these cases your lordships should reverse the decision of the court below.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I am of the same opinion in both cases.

In the second case (Stuart v. Nixon & Bruce), as regards the question whether the workman who was killed was engaged in an employment to which the Act applies, I have only to say that I have no doubt that he was. He was employed in the process of loading from a wharf, and employed about machinery used for or in relation to that process. In my opinion the operation in which he was engaged at the time was part of the process, and the process was not complete until that operation was finished.

As regards the more substantial question at issue I must say that I do not feel pressed by the difficulty which presented itself to the Court of Appeal. In the first place it is important to bear in mind that the right to compensation is given by the Act, not by the schedule. The conditions which must have been fulfilled in order to support a claim to compensation are to be found in the Act itself. The Court of Appeal has added another condition which is not contained in the Act, which is not expressed in the schedule, but which it is said may be discovered there.

The right to compensation, as I said, is given by the Act, but the compensation is to be "in accordance with" the schedule. The words are not "as defined by the schedule," or "in the terms prescribed by the schedule," but "in accordance with the schedule." Those words, as it seems to me, import a certain latitude. The degree of latitude—if I may borrow the language of my noble and learned friend on the woolsack when discussing the same words in the Bills of Sale Act in Thomas v. Kelly, 37 W. R. 354, 13 App. Cas., at p. 511—it would be difficult if not impossible to define. But there is no such great difficulty in dealing with them in a concrete case. At least, they seem to convey a warning or an intimation that you are not to cling so closely to the letter as to defeat the declared purpose and object of the Act.

I have no doubt that if Parliament had intended to impose the condition which has been discovered in the schedule, the condition would have been inserted in the Act. But it would have been a most extraordinary thing if such a condition had been imposed. In the case of a workman working at a dangerous trade, I suppose the periods of the greatest danger are, first, the period at the commencement of his employment, before he is familiar with his work, and secondly, the period when he becomes so familiar with it as to be careless of danger. But of the two I suppose the commencement is the more dangerous. Now I cannot imagine that Parliament, when it was giving this boon to workmen, would have thought of saying no compensation shall be paid if the accident happens during the most dangerous period of the workman's employment. Still less can I suppose that Parliament would have left such a condition to be inferred from a single word in the schedule, and that word (to say the least) not used with perfect accuracy.

Turning now to the schedule, there are, I think, three things to be noticed. In the first place, I agree with Mr. Joseph Walton that where death results from the injury, and the workman has left dependants, the compensation must be at least £150. It is to be £150, or a sum equal to either the actual amount or the hypothetical amount of his earnings for the three years immediately preceding the accident, not exceeding in any case £300. But if the workman has not served the full period of three years, and you cannot find a basis on which to calculate the hypothetical amount, the workman would, I think, still be entitled to the £150.

In the next place it is quite clear that the word "average," which has given rise to all this difficulty, is not used accurately. If the rule which the Court of Appeal has laid down were applied strictly, it seems to me that a workman who had served for a year at an unvarying rate of wages, and had earned his wages week by week, would not be entitled to compensation at all. You may add up his wages for a year and divide by fifty-two, but you would not get an average, because there would be no variations between which you would take the mean.

Lastly, the word "average," as was pointed out by Mr. Walton, and more fully by Mr. Scott, occurs in the 2nd sub-section, and it is, I think, plainly not used there in the sense attributed to it in the Court of Appeal. If this case happened—if a claim to compensation was made by a person partially incapacitated, and if at the time of the claim he had returned to work and was earning just half what he was earning before, but had only been at work for one week, you could not take those earnings into consideration and make a set-off against the compensation claim, and that would plainly be unfair and unreasonable.

All this seems to show that the word "average" is used very loosely in the schedule. The obvious meaning, I think, is that you are to take a week's earnings as the unit of calculation; but if there has been a series of weekly earnings of different amounts, you are to take an average, and the unit will then be not an actual week's earnings, but a hypothetical week's earnings. You are to take one week with another, as my noble and learned friend Lord Robertson observed.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the judgment of the Court of Appeal must be reversed in both cases, and the claims of the appellants allowed with costs.

Lord SHAND.—I have no difficulty in concurring in both cases in the decision at which your lordships have arrived. I confess that in the earlier part of the argument I felt there was considerable force in the view which had been taken by the Court of Appeal, that one day's wages only does not, strictly speaking, give the means of striking an average, and that in a case where there was one day's work only it was very difficult to get at the average weekly earnings in the ordinary sense, because you require several occasions at a different or, it may be, at the same rate of wages, in order to enable you to strike an average. But I am satisfied that, for the reasons which have been stated by my noble and learned friends the Lord Chancellor and Lord Macnaghten, the term "average" is used not with strict accuracy, but loosely, in this statute. It appears to me that, as the Lord Chancellor said, if it had been intended to strike out of the Act men who were in the same employment under the same employer, and it may be who were present at the same accident, but who had only worked for one day, so that there should be no compensation for them, looking at the broad terms to which the Lord Chancellor has referred of the statute itself, it would have required a direct provision to that effect. It would not be lurking in the schedule, which merely fixes the rate of compensation to be given, that you would find an absolute exclusion of the right altogether. I go with the argument upon that point, that it would not be a matter to be taken as a mere inference, but would be found in the language of direct enactment.

In the next place, my lords, it appears to me that you read the provision quite fairly when you propose to get at "the average weekly earnings" by taking that which the man has made in the week in that particular employment, which is only the wages for a particular day.

On these grounds, and adopting the reasons given by the noble and learned lords who have gone before me, I am of opinion, although I think the question is attended with considerable difficulty, that the decision of the Court of Appeal ought to be reversed.

Lord DAVEY.—Your lordships have had before you in the course of this session, and earlier, several appeals on this extraordinarily ill-drawn Act, but I do not know that your lordships have had one of greater importance or greater difficulty than the one before you. The difficulty really arises from this, that the draughtsman has apparently not worked out on paper into legislative language the scheme which he had in his head, and it looks very much as if the Act had really been framed from notes of legislative intention, and had not been expanded into the proper legislative language. Cases which have arisen and cases which are likely to arise appear to have been contemplated, but apparently were supposed to be covered by the general language used in the Act. I have made that observation because I think that is the key to the difficult question of construction upon which the Court of Appeal have expressed their opinion.

Now, my lords, I turn to the examination of the Act, and I entirely agree with what has been said by my noble and learned friend on the woolsack, that you ought to construe this Act so as, as far as possible, to give effect to the primary provisions of it. In the first Act I find (I will not read it again; it has been already read) that the employer subject to the provisoes is made liable to pay compensation, and it goes on, "in accordance with the 1st schedule to this Act." Now, my lords, I confess I should not read those words, "in accordance with the schedule to this Act," as being restrictive of the obligation upon the employer to pay compensation. I should not consider that those words limited or restricted the right of the workman to receive compensation, or the obligation upon the employer to pay compensation, but as being intended to denote the manner and mode in which that compensation was to be carried into effect. You may substitute for the words "in accordance with the 1st schedule" the actual title of the 1st schedule, and then the meaning which I attach to it would be perfectly clear, "in accordance with the scale and conditions of compensation contained in the 1st schedule"; that is to say, it is an expression of the mode and scale on which the amount of compensation is to be ascertained; the amount of compensation, not the right to it, is to be ascertained, and of the conditions upon which, when it is ascertained, it is to be enjoyed.

The Court of Appeal have found that those words, having regard to the construction that they put upon certain words in the schedule which have been referred to, attach a condition, and a most material condition, to the right to compensation—namely, that no workman should be entitled to compensation unless he has been in the employment of his present employer for a period exceeding two weeks.

Now, my lords, if it were intended to restrict the compensation given by the Act to workmen engaged at least two weeks by the same employer, you would expect to find it in the Act, and you would expect to find it as a qualification of the right given by the Act; you would expect to find it in some way in limiting or qualifying the description of workman who is to be entitled to compensation. But you find nothing there at all, and even if I came to the conclusion that the construction put by the Court of Appeal on the schedule was the right one, I should say that this was a casus omissus which had been overlooked in framing the schedule, and that the right being given by the statute, there was nothing in the schedule to take away the right, and that the court must find some other means of arriving at the amount and conditions upon which it was to be enjoyed so far as the schedule was inapplicable to the case.

Now, my lords, if you turn to the schedule itself, what do you find? You find in the first place that it is intituled "Scale and Conditions of Compensation." I have referred to that. Then the first section in the schedule is "The amount of compensation under this Act shall be," &c., and the clauses which have been construed follow after that enactment. "The amount," your lordships observe, "of compensation shall be" so and so. Obviously the only object of those sections in the schedule was to fix the amount of it, and not in any way to qualify or restrict or modify the right to compensation.

Then, going on with the 1st schedule, it was suggested that it might come under the term "Conditions," but that I construe to mean, reading it with the word "Scale," the conditions of enjoyment—not the conditions upon which the right is given, but the conditions under which the right given in the body of the Act is to be enjoyed. And I find, on looking through this schedule, numerous conditions; for example, in clauses 3 and 11 there are provisions for the workman's submitting himself for medical examination; in No. 5 the question as to who is a dependant is to be settled by arbitration; in 12 the weekly payments may be reviewed from time to time; by 13 they may be redeemed by the payment of a lump sum; and 14 provides that they shall not be capable of being assigned to any other person, so that you find the word "conditions" amply satisfied, and the character of the conditions which is intended is shown by the actual enactments contained in the schedule itself.

When I come to the words which have to be construed in both these cases I really have very little to say that has not already been said by my noble and learned friend on the woolsack and my noble and learned friend opposite (Lord Macnaghten). Shortly put, I think the draughtsman intended this: The draughtsman saw that in many cases the actual weekly wage would not always be of the same amount, and that therefore it was necessary in some cases, and probably in most cases, to take an average, and he has used a compendious formula or compendious expression which was intended to include the simple case as well as the more complicated case of the actual weekly wage being of a different amount. I do not say it is good drafting—I do not say that it is free from difficulty; but on consideration of all the circumstances I think that that is the proper way of construing it. The weekly earnings are to be the basis upon which the compensation is to be assessed. If you have the actual regular weekly earnings you do not want to inquire any further, but if the weekly earnings have differed in one week with another, then you require to strike an average in the ordinary way. As my noble and learned friend opposite has pointed out, if the weekly earnings were uniform throughout the year, you cannot talk of the average weekly earnings of a person who has had £1 a week throughout the year; you would not say his average wages were so and so, you would say his weekly wages were so and so. So it is impossible to attach the accurate and logical meaning of the word "average" to the enactment which you find in this schedule. Being of that opinion, I agree that the decision of the Court of Appeal should be reversed, and in one case the decision of the learned county court judge be restored. In the other case I do not know whether it must go back for a new arbitration, but the amount must be ascertained in some way.

With regard to the case of Stuart v. Nixon & Bruce I have only to add that I entirely agree with what has been said, that the injury to the workman was in the course of the process of loading the vessel from the quay. Notwithstanding that the actual putting of the goods into the hold has been completed, I think this was "relating to" "the process"—in fact, I find an admission before the learned county court judge that the process was incomplete without the putting in of these beams. I do not place much reliance upon that, because it is obvious that the county court judge understood it differently from its primâ facie meaning, but I think the admission is correct, and it is exactly the language which I should choose to adopt myself. If the two operations had been in fact severed and the one had been done by a contractor, and the other had been done by the master of the ship, that might not have been so; but where we find it done by the stevedore, I think it was done by him as part of the process of loading the ship.

Lord BRAMPTON.—Entirely agreeing as I do with the judgments which have been pronounced, I have no word to add. I agree with all that has been said by my noble and learned friends who have exhausted the case. I propose therefore to do no more than express my concurrence.

Lord ROBERTSON.—The interpretation clause of this Act defines "workman" in language of the extremest latitude as regards the nature of the contract under which he works, and in that section and in the rest of the Act as distinguished from the schedules there is no hint or suggestion that it is limited to persons who have worked for any particular period prior to the accident. The 1st section of the Act declares the employer to be liable to pay compensation in accordance with the 1st schedule to every workman who has sustained personal injury by accident arising out of and in course of the employment. Having regard to the subject-matter of the schedule and its place in the scheme of the Act, it would be most surprising if the schedule should prove to contain some limitation of the class of persons benefited. Mr. Scott is, I think, quite right in saying that the "conditions" laid down in the schedule are none of them conditions precedent to the right to compensation, but are all conditions of the exercise of the right by persons assumed to possess it. Now, the basis of the respondents' contention is the words "average weekly earnings," and ultimately the single word "average," and I think it wholly insufficient to support so considerable a burden. All that the Act itself says is that every workman injured in the circumstances stated is to get compensation in accordance with the schedule, and it is completely in accordance with the schedule that the man whose weekly earnings require no weekly arithmetical computation to reduce them to a definite standard of compensation should receive compensation according to that standard. Supposing the words had been "weekly earnings, taking one week with another," it would be far too literal to hold that because a man had only worked one week, he would be excluded; and the word "average" expresses nothing more than the same idea.

Lord LINDLEY.—Upon the main questions which have been argued before your lordships I agree with everything which has been said, and in particular I agree with the construction put upon the enacting part of the Workmen's Compensation Act and upon the expression "average weekly earnings" in the scale. To my mind the result arrived at by the Court of Appeal, to the effect that nobody can claim compensation under this Act unless he has been in the same employment for a fortnight, is startling and untenable.

With regard to the small point about the loading, I have the misfortune to be in a minority of one. But, my lords, I cannot bring myself to say that the accident which happened here was occasioned by a "factory," which means machinery loading or unloading from a wharf or quay. I do not say whether the loading or unloading was finished or not. I should say myself it was, as the county court judge held; but even if it were not, the process of loading or unloading from a wharf or quay was over and finished for ever. The accident happened by the use of a crane or a machine, not in completing that which was, according to my understanding of the case, at an end, but in a totally different operation, which was putting down the cross-bars over the hold of the ship with a view to place the hatchways over it. That point is a very small one, and I have no doubt, as your lordships differ from me, I am wrong; but as I have an opinion, I thought it right to express it.

I take it for granted that the second case will not have to go back, because, as I understand the decision, the compensation must be £150.

LYSONS v. ANDREW KNOWLES & SONS (LIMITED).

Order of the Court of Appeal reversed, with costs here and below, and order of the county court judge restored.

Solicitors, Radford & Frankland, for Bowden & Widdowson, Manchester; Rowcliffe, Rawle, Johnstone, & Gregory, for Fullagar & Hutton, Bolton.

STUART v. NIXON & BRUCE.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—In this case I do not propose to say anything further. I have already given my judgment. The county court judge, taking the view he did of the law, has not assessed compensation, and therefore it must go back because your lordships have not the power to assess the compensation here. If it were done here consistently with the judgment, the judgment must be for the sum which, according to your lordships' construction of the statute, must be the minimum sum. But I do not think your lordships have jurisdiction to enter into that question. The only judgment I can move is that the case be set back to the county court judge to find out, in pursuance of your lordships' judgment, the amount of compensation which ought to be assessed.

Order of the Court of Appeal reversed, with costs here and below; cause remitted to the county court judge to assess the amount of compensation.

Solicitors, Crowders, Vizard, & Oldham, for G. J. Lynskey, Liverpool; William Hurd & Son, for Oliver, Jones, Billson, & Co., Liverpool.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Rigby, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) — June 28.

In re E. W. A. (A DEBTOR). (a.)

Bankruptcy — Receiving order — Judgment debt — Guaranty—Release of co-guarantor—Release of debt —Agreement not to sue.

The release of one co-guarantor operates as a release of the other co-guarantors, notwithstanding that the contractual liability has passed into a judgment.

The difference as regards co-debtors between the release of a debt and the release of liability to be sued, considered and explained.

Ex parte Good, In re Armitage, 25 W. R. 422, 5 Ch. D. 46, distinguished.

This was an appeal from Mr. Registrar Linklater, making a receiving order against the appellant.

It appeared that in September, 1899, the debtor and one B. had entered into a joint and several guaranty with the Capital and Counties Bank for the payment of the sum of £6,000 owing to the bank from the P. company.

In October, 1900, the bank recovered judgment against the debtor and B. jointly and severally for the sum of £6,000.

The bank presented a petition in bankruptcy against B. founded on the judgment debt, but before any order was made upon the petition terms were arranged between the parties and embodied in a document dated the 7th of March, 1901, which was signed by the solicitors of the bank and addressed to the solicitors of B. It was to the following effect: "We beg to acknowledge the sum of £2,500 and five bills of £100 each dated to-day payable at 2, 4, 6, 8, and 10 months respectively, in full discharge of all claims by the Capital and Counties Bank (Limited) against B. in connection with the Professional and Trades Papers Co. (Limited) and all guarantees given by him to the bank in connection with that company, and in settlement of any outstanding questions as to the amount due to the bank, and we undertake to attend on the hearing of the bankruptcy petition to consent to the same being withdrawn or dismissed on terms that B. pay the costs."

On the 26th of March, 1901, the bank presented a petition in bankruptcy against the debtor, E. A. W., in respect of £3,000, the balance of the amount due on the judgment of October, 1900, the consideration for the judgment debt being alleged to be the amount due under the joint and several guaranty of September, 1899.

On the hearing of the petition the debtor opposed the making of a receiving order on the ground that he was not indebted to the bank, they having on the 7th of March, 1901, released the debt and discharged him from liability in respect of the judgment.

The registrar, however, made a receiving order.

The debtor appealed.

Reed, K.C., and Arthur Sims, for the debtor, contended that the document of the 7th of March ought to be strictly construed according to its terms and not with reference to surrounding circumstances, and being so construed it was a complete discharge of the debt: Mercantile Bank of Sydney v. Taylor, 41 W. R. Dig. 193, [1893] A. C., p. 317.

Hansell, for the bank, contended that the rule as to the release of one joint surety being the release of all did not apply where the contractual liability had passed into a judgment, and that where the reason of the doctrine ceased the doctrine also ceased: Kendall v. Hamilton, 28 W. R. 97, 4 App. Cas., p. 515. He also contended that on the true construction of the document of the 7th of March the bank did not intend to release the debt, but only to compromise the bankruptcy proceedings: Ex parte Good, In re Armitage, 25 W. R. 422, 5 Ch. D. 46; In re Wolmershausen, 38 W. R. 537.

Reed, K.C., replied.

The following cases were also referred to: Cheetham v. Ward, 1 B. & P. 630; Nicholson v. Revill, 4 Ad. & E. 675; Ward v. National Bank of New Zealand, 8 App. Cas., p. 764, 32 W. R. Dig 170; Steeds v. Steeds, 37 W. R. 378, 22 Q. B. D. 537; Commercial Bank of Tasmania v. Jones, 42 W. R. 256, [1893] A. C. 313.

RIGBY, L.J., said he concurred in the judgment about to be delivered by Collins, L.J.

COLLINS, L.J., said this was an appeal from a decision of the registrar who had made a receiving order against the appellant founded on a judgment which had been obtained against the appellant and B. as co-guarantors. The ground of the appeal was that the liability of the debtor had been discharged by the release of his co-guarantor. The debtor and B. had entered into a joint and several guaranty with the bank for the payment of the sum of £6,000 owing to the bank from the P. Co. and the bank had recovered judgment against the debtor and B.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

jointly and severally for the sum of £6,000. The bank presented a petition in bankruptcy against B. founded on the judgment debt, but before any order was made upon the petition terms were arranged between the parties and embodied in a document dated the 7th of March, 1901 [which his lordship then read]. After that arrangement the bank presented a petition in bankruptcy against the debtor in respect of the sum of £3,000, the balance of the amount due on the judgment; and the question now before the court was whether the document of the 7th of March, 1901, amounted to accord and satisfaction so as to get rid of the liability. It was contended on behalf of the bank that the release of one co-surety did not operate as a release of the other co-surety where the contractual liability had passed into a judgment. But his lordship did not see any reason for the distinction. There was only one debt, and the release of one operated as a release of both. The rule was just as applicable to a liability under a judgment as to a liability under a contract. The rule was well established, and it was too late now to contend to the contrary. The real point was as to the effect of the document of the 7th of March, 1901. Where you have a document which purports to be a release you may also have a reservation of right against other persons, so that the document only amounts to an agreement or covenant not to sue a particular individual; and if there had been any reservation of right in the document of the 7th of March, 1901, it would not have operated as a discharge of the debt. But it did not appear to his lordship that on the face of the document there was any such reservation. That being so, why should any limitation be put upon the operation of the document. It was said that the bank did not intend to release the debt, but that was not a sufficient ground for reading into the document something which was not there. It was no reason for limiting its operation to say that the legal consequences of the document went beyond the intention of those who framed it. It was also said that the surrounding circumstances ought to be regarded as qualifying the document. What were those circumstances? There were none except that the debtor had no means and B. was a person of some means. There was nothing but the fact that B. was able to pay a substantial sum; and there may have been good reason for the bank taking only half the amount due. Therefore there was nothing to lead fairly to the inference that the document was limited to the release of one person. Two cases were referred to on the question of surrounding circumstances, but when the facts of those cases were criticized they did not afford any ground for cutting down the operation of the document in the present case. In Ex parte Good, In re Armitage, there was a controversy as to whether there was any joint liability at all. But in the present case there was no such circumstance; and the case of In re Wolmershausen could be distinguished in a similar way. Their lordships could not, without straining the rules of evidence, limit the operation of the document in question, and they must therefore hold that the debtor's liability was discharged.

ROMER, L.J., agreed, but expressed a doubt whether the document of the 7th of March might not, having regard to the form of it and to the surrounding circumstances, have been construed not as a release of the debt but merely as a release of B. from his liability to be sued.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Steadman & Van Praagh; Cameron, Kemm & Co.

From Chan. Div. (Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) — June 13.

GRAHAM v. WROUGHTON. (a.)

Local government—Nuisance by sewage—Use of drain—Sewer—Notice—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 21.

Certain inhabitants of a village were in the habit of sending slops, &c., down what was originally a highway drain, which had become vested in the local authority. The defendant, without notice to the local authority, connected a water-closet with this drain and sent fœcal matter down it. He thereby created a nuisance on the plaintiff's land.

Held, that, even assuming the drain in question to be a sewer within the meaning of section 21 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the defendant, not having complied with the statutory requirement as to notice, could not avail himself of the provisions of that section, and might be restrained by injunction from sending fœcal matter down the drain.

This was an appeal from a decision of Byrne, J.

The facts were as follows: There had existed for many years in the village of Wetheral, in Cumberland, a covered drain, which ran along one side of the high road from a point near the post office in the village in an easterly direction, and passing under the garden of Mrs. Graham, the plaintiff in the action, emptied itself by a fall of nearly eighty feet into an old disused quarry, which was also the property of the plaintiff and adjoined her garden.

For many years this covered drain had been used solely for conveying surface or rain water and slops from some of the houses in the village adjoining the high road; but recently some of the inhabitants adjoining the road, and particularly the three defendants, had discontinued the use of cesspools, and now discharged solid sewage matter into this drain.

It was admitted that an intolerable nuisance was thereby caused to the plaintiff, who applied for an injunction to restrain the defendants from continuing to discharge drainage and filth into and upon her land from houses in their occupation through the drain in question.

Byrne, J., granted an interim injunction as against the defendants Wroughton and Platt, but not the third defendant Hendry, who had for some years past been discharging his drainage into the drain in question, giving them a month to make other arrangements.

The defendant Wroughton appealed.

The drain in question was originally a highway drain which since 1894 had become vested in the local authority.

By section 21 of the Public Health Act, 1875, "The owner or occupier of any premises within the district of a local authority shall be entitled to cause his drains to empty into the sewers of that authority, on condition of his giving such notice as may be required by that authority of his intention so to do, and of complying with the regulations of that authority in respect of the mode in which the communications between such drains and sewers are to be made, and subject to the control of any person who may be appointed by that authority to superintend the making of such communications"

A. Glen and Maughan, for the appellant.—Byrne, J., relied on the case of Kinson Pottery Co. (Limited) v. Corporation of Poole, 47 W. R. 607, [1899] 2 Q. B. 41. That case, however, is inconsistent with other cases on this question. It, in effect, read into section 21 the words "if the sewer is fit for the purpose." In any case it does not help the respondents, because here the sewer is fit to receive drainage and the nuisance is caused by its having its outlet on the quarry. The condition as to notice in section 21 does not apply to the present case.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

They referred to Ferrand v. Hallas Land and Building Co., 41 W. R. 580, [1893] 2 Q. B. 135; Eastwood Bros. v. Honley Urban District Council, ante, p. 308, [1901] 1 Ch. 645; Brown v. Mayor of Dunstable, 47 W. R. 538, [1899] 2 Ch. 378; Kirkheaton Local Board v. Beaumont, 52 J. P. 68; Molloy v. Gray, 24 L. R. Ir. 258, 37 W. R. Dig. 98; Ainley v. Kirkheaton Local Board, 60 L. J. Ch. 734, 40 W. R. Dig. 133; Kirkheaton District Local Board v. Ainley, [1892] 2 Q. B. 274, 40 W. R. Dig. 219; Fordom v. Parsons, [1894], 2 Q. B. 780; Wheatcroft v. The Local Board of Matlock, 52 L. T. Rep. 356, 33 W. R. Dig. 128; Falconar v. South Shields Corporation, 11 Times L. R. 223; London and North-Western Railway Co. v. Runcorn Rural District Council, 46 W. R. 484, [1898] 1 Ch. 561; Croysdale v. Sunbury Urban District Council, 46 W. R. 667, [1898] 2 Ch. 515; Sykes v. Sowerby Urban District Council, [1900] 1 Q. B. 584, 48 W. R. Dig. 104; Metropolitan Board of Works v. London and North-Western Railway Co., 29 W. R. 693, 17 Ch. D. 246.

Levett, K.C., and Read, contra.—The appellant admits the existence of a nuisance, but claims the benefit of section 21 of the Public Health Act, 1875. He has not, however, complied with the statutory conditions imposed by that section. In any case his claim comes to this, that if a drain is in existence a man may send all his sewage into it, no matter what the drain was originally intended for. This is too wide a construction to place on the section.

Glen replied.

RIGBY, L.J.—I think this appeal must fail. I think that the order made is quite right, and that no grounds have been shown upon which we can set aside the judgment.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. This case has travelled over a wide area upon the question of sewers and drains under the Public Health Act, but I think that when we come to the narrow point which has actually to be decided in this case, it will not be necessary to deal in any detail with those cases.

The point arises shortly in this way. There is in the village, to which this case relates, for anything that appears to the contrary, an adequate system of sewage, so far as fœcal matter is concerned. It seems that the practice there was to deal with that matter by privies and a cesspool, and in one case a private water-closet, but the general scheme which now exists there is perfectly adequate. There is also running along the highway a drain which it is admitted—at all events it is not denied, and the evidence is in favour of it—was originally simply a highway drain, and belonging as such to the highway authority which was not the local authority. That drain was subsequently, as far back as 1886, I think, improved at the expense of the vestry, still the highway authority, and persons occupying houses along that highway had, no doubt with the tacit assent of the highway authority, connected their houses with it for the purpose of sending down slops and that class of water. Such a state of things continued until the present local authority came into existence and took over the control of the highway—which, I think, was in 1894—and so things went on until 1900, when the appellant in this case, without any notice whatever to the local authority, made a water-closet on his land, and connected it with a communication which he already had with the highway drain, and which had been used for passing soapsuds and that class of liquid down the drain.

The appellant contends that he is justified in doing what he did by virtue of the Public Health Act, but what he has to meet in the first instance is this: The matter which he sends from his water-closet passes directly through the channel I have described into the bottom of a disused quarry, which is part of the plaintiff's premises, and, as far as I understand, immediately adjoins her garden and bowling green. The effect of that is to create, as the learned judge says, an intolerable nuisance. It is true that the plaintiff had to submit to an inconvenience which may have amounted to nuisance from the accumulation of soap-suds and that class of liquid in the quarry at the bottom of her garden, but what the appellant has done is to make that a nuisance of a very aggravated character by the passing down of fœcal matter from his water-closet directly into the quarry at the bottom of the garden, and supposing he had done that without the communication with the drain of the local authority, no one could question that he had committed a tort for which an action at the suit of the owner of the garden would lie against him. "But," he says, "I do not deny for a moment that a nuisance in which I have taken a part is created on the land of the plaintiff, but I am entirely discharged from any personal liability in respect of the matter, inasmuch as the channel by which I have conveyed that nuisance on to the land of the plaintiff partly consists of this highway drain, which I say is a sewer of the highway authority." In order to get the immunity that he claims under the Act of Parliament he must at least show that he has conformed to the conditions of the Act of Parliament, and he claims to have done so and says that he comes under section 21 of the Public Health Act, 1875. But the conditions of that section are those. [His lordship read the section, and continued:] He says "True it is I did not consult this local authority upon the matter at all. I knew, or might have known, because it was in evidence that in that small community other persons had tried to make these communications and assent had been refused. I did not ask them. I had no reason to suppose that they would assent to it. The statute obliges me to give them notice. I did not do it, and yet I claim immunity under the statute, for creating an intolerable nuisance on the land of the plaintiff." That seems a strong order, and in order to bring himself within the section he has first of all to show that the channel into which he has sent this fœcal matter is a sewer of the local authority. Mr. Glen's contention goes to this whole extent, that if a highway drain had been made simply for the purpose of collecting rain water to be used for drinking purposes afterwards, and although there was an efficient system for dealing with fœcal matter in the neighbourhood, the appellant might nevertheless pass his fœcal matter down into this channel which existed for the purpose of collecting and it may be distributing rain water for drinking purposes. That seems an extravagant construction of the statute, and one which I should shrink from unless driven to it by the absolute wording of the section.

Although there may be drains which come within the definition of a sewer under the Act, I think that it was not this class of sewer to which the provisions of the Public Health Act apply, enabling any person to pass the fœcal matter of his household into it. I do not think it is necessary to decide that as a matter of law in this case; and I should certainly be very reluctant to throw any doubt upon the views taken by the learned judges on this question, because that does not arise in this case for this reason, that even if this were a sewer which the appellant had a right under the conditions of the statute to pass fœcal matter into, he has not performed those conditions, and therefore it seems to me that he stands naked against the action that the plaintiff brought.

On those grounds I think the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors, Foulger, Robinson, & Miller, for H. F. Leavers, Carlisle; Ullithorne, Currey, & Jennings, for C. B. Hodgson, Carlisle.

Appeal.
(A. L. Smith, M.R., and Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ.) June 7.

PRICE & PRICE v. MARINE INSURANCE CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Insurance (Marine)—Subject-matter of insurance—"Advances"—Security of freight—Freight payable pro rata*—Insurance against total loss only—Construction of policy.*

The master of an Italian ship at Pensacola obtained from the plaintiffs an advance for disbursements, giving as security a document by which he promised to pay £760 ten days after the arrival of the ship at Southampton, and pledged the ship and her freight.

The plaintiffs effected an insurance with the defendants upon "advances valued £775" from Pensacola to Southampton, and expressed to be "free of all average."

The ship was lost at the Azores but the cargo was saved, and by Italian law, subject to which the contract of affreightment was made, £790 freight pro rata was paid.

Held, that as there had not been a total loss of the freight, and therefore not a total loss of the charge on freight, the plaintiffs could not recover on the policy.

Appeal by the plaintiffs from a judgment of Bigham, J., in an action brought to recover a total loss on a policy of insurance effected by the plaintiffs with the defendants under the following circumstances:

In December, 1898, the Italian ship Cinque loaded at Pensacola for a voyage thence to Southampton.

The master required money for his disbursements, and he borrowed the amount from the plaintiffs, who took from the master a document, which was in the following terms: "£760 12s. 9d. stg. Pensacola, Fla., Dec. 30, 1898. Ten days after arrival at port of destination of the steel bk. called Cinque, of which I am the master, now lying at Pensacola, Fla., loaded with P.P. sawn timber and lumber, and ready to sail for Southampton, I promise to pay to the order of myself the sum of £760 12s. 9d. British sterling in approved bankers' demand bills on London value received for necessary disbursements of my vessel at this port, for the payment of which I hereby pledge my vessel and freight, and my consignees at the port of destination are hereby directed to pay the amount of this obligation from the first amount of freight received for account of my said vessel, any other draft or obligation by me drawn at this point on said freight to be secondary to this. Signed in duplicate, one being accomplished, the others to stand void. TOMMASO RITTORI, Master of the Steel Bk. Cinque."

The effect of this transaction was to vest in the plaintiffs an insurable interest in the vessel and her freight, and the plaintiffs thereupon effected the policy sued on. It was a policy at and from Pensacola to Southampton, the subject-matter of the insurance being "advances valued £775," the risks were described in the customary way, and the insurance was against total loss only, being expressed to be "free of all average."

The vessel proceeded on her voyage, but she never reached her destination.

In February, 1899, she ran ashore at Azores and became a total wreck. The cargo was discharged, and the holder of the bill of lading obtained possession of it upon payment of £790, being freight pro rata itineris. By Italian law, subject to which the contract of affreightment had been made, such freight was in the circumstances payable.

The plaintiffs brought this action on the policy, and contended that there had been a total loss of the subject-matter of the insurance, inasmuch as their only right under the promissory note was to receive the money ten days after the arrival of the ship at Southampton, and the non-arrival of the ship involved the loss of their right to payment.

The defendants' case was that, as the shipowners had received £790 from the holder of the bill of lading at the Azores, there had been no total loss.

Bigham, J. (16 Times L. R. 481), gave judgment for the defendants on the ground that the plaintiffs did not merely get a charge payable at Southampton on the freight; they got a charge on all the freight the ship might earn on the insured voyage. The terms of the document showed that to be so, and inasmuch as the ship earned £790 which was paid to her owners at the Azores there had been no total loss of the subject-matterof the insurance.

Carver, K.C., and T. E. Scrutton, K.C., for the plaintiffs.

Joseph Walton, K.C., and J. A. Hamilton, for the defendants.

A. L. SMITH, M.R.—There are certain passages in the judgment of my brother Bigham (see 16 Times L. R. 481) which I have a difficulty in following. Mr. Joseph Walton and Mr. Hamilton, however, did not consider it necessary for their argument to support the hypothetical propositions of the learned judge to which objection was taken by us when the judgment was read in this court, and it is only necessary therefore for me to say this, that in dismissing the appeal on the real question raised, we must not be understood to confirm and approve them.

The plaintiffs having made advances effected a policy with the defendants covering the risk of these advances. The policy was warranted free of all average. What does that mean? Why, that the underwriters undertook to insure against total loss and total loss only. The document which the master of the Italian ship gave to the plaintiffs was to the effect that he promised to pay £760 ten days after the arrival of the ship at Southampton, for the payment of which sum of £760 he pledged the vessel and freight. By that document, which may be described as a promissory note, the plaintiffs took four things—first, the personal obligation of the master; secondly, the liability of the owners; thirdly, a charge on the ship; and fourthly, a charge on the freight. These were the securities they took for the advance, and by the policy they effected with the defendants they insured those securities against total loss. The ship sailed for Southampton, but at the Azores she became a total wreck. If it had not been that the case is governed admittedly by Italian law, there would in the events which have happened have been a total loss of the freight also. But by Italian law pro rata freight, we are told, to the amount of £790 was earned by the ship. It seems to me in face of that statement as to Italian law and the actual payment of the money the plaintiffs cannot recover. I ask myself, Can it be said in that state of things that there has been here a total loss of the plaintiffs' securities which were covered by the policy? There was certainly a total loss of the personal obligation of the master and of the liability of the owners, and also of the charge on the ship. But there was not a total loss of the charge on freight. It follows, therefore, that the appeal fails, for I see no reason why the charge should be made conditional, though no doubt it was natural and reasonable to attach the condition of the ship's arrival to the master's personal obligation to pay.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS and STIRLING, L.JJ., delivered judgments to the same effect.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Thomas Cooper & Co.; Field, Roscoe, & Co., for Batesons, Warr, & Wimshurst, Liverpool

---

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.
Byrne, J. } July 4.

In re YATES.
YATES v. WYATT. (a.)

Will—Construction—Annuity to maintain infants—Want of a trustee.

A testator by his will directed his trustees to pay to his widow during her widowhood an annuity until his daughter should attain twenty-one, to be applied by the widow in and about the maintenance and education of the said daughter. The widow died, leaving the daughter still an infant.

Held, that the widow was a trustee for the infant in respect of the annuity, and that the annuity continued to be payable notwithstanding that the widow had died.

By his will a testator directed "that my trustees shall out of the rents and dividends and annual income arising from my said real and personal estate pay to my said wife so long as she shall continue my widow such a sum as shall together with the income to which she will be entitled under the settlements made in contemplation of our marriage amount to the sum of £1,000 per annum by equal quarterly payments, the first of such quarterly payments to become due and be made at the expiration of three calendar months from my decease. And shall also pay to my said wife by like quarterly payments a further annuity of £300 a year until my daughter C. shall attain the age of twenty-one years, and to be applied by her my said wife in and about the maintenance and education of my said daughter. And shall also pay a further annuity of £300 per annum to my said wife by the like quarterly payments until my daughter K. shall attain the age of twenty-one years, to be applied by her my said wife in and about the maintenance and education of my last-named daughter, and I declare that the receipt of my said wife for the two said annuities of three hundred pounds shall exonerate my said trustees from all liability to see to the application thereof, and from any responsibility in respect of the misapplication or non-application thereof; and I direct that my said trustees shall (subject to the payment of the annuities hereinbefore bequeathed) accumulate the rents, dividends, and annual income arising from my said real and personal estate by investing the same and the resulting income thereof in some or one of the investments or securities hereinafter authorized" for the benefit of his daughters C. and K.

The testator's widow having died whilst C and K. were under twenty-one years of age (they were seventeen and fifteen respectively) the question arose whether the two annuities of three hundred pounds were still payable or had ceased on the death of the testator's widow.

J. G. Wood, for the infant annuitants.—There is here a trust to apply the annuities for the benefit of the testator's two daughters. If that be so then the rule applies that a trust shall not fail for want of a trustee. There is no authority or decision to act as a guide upon the point, but it is submitted that the annuities are still payable for the infants' benefit, notwithstanding the death of the widow.

George Henderson, for the representatives of the widow and next-of-kin of the testator.

Mark Romer, for the trustees.

BYRNE, J.—On the whole I think that these annuities are payable notwithstanding the death of the wife. [His lordship then read the material portions of the will, and continued:] The primary effect of the testator's will is to provide for his daughters until they should attain the age of twenty-one years, and he has constituted his wife a trustee for his daughters. He did not intend his wife to benefit. The clause exonerating the trustees from liability to see to the application of the annuities ceased on the death of his wife, and the direction to accumulate is subject to the payment of the annuities. The annuities have not ceased by reason of the death of the wife. I think I am justified in putting this construction upon this will.

Solicitors, Bird & Eldridges; Nicholson, Graham, & Graham

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } May 15, 17, 23.

HARROLD v. PLENTY. (a.)

Company—Shares—Deposit—Equitable mortgage—Foreclosure.

Where a certificate of shares in a limited company was deposited as a security for the repayment of a debt owing to A.,

Held, that the deposit of the certificate amounted to an equitable mortgage, and that A. was entitled to a decree for foreclosure.

The defendant in this action had in March, 1897, deposited the certificate of shares in a limited company with the plaintiff Harrold as security for the repayment of £150 due to the plaintiff with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum.

This plaintiff brought this action to enforce his security by sale or foreclosure.

The defendant made default in appearance.

(a.) Reported by R. LEIGH RAMSBOTHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Dighton Pollock, for the plaintiff, argued that the deposit of the share certificates was evidence of a contract to transfer by way of mortgage, and plaintiff was in the position of equitable mortgagee, not that of pledgee. His remedy was therefore to foreclose and not to sell.

Counsel referred to the following cases: General Credit and Discount Co. v. Glegg, 31 W. R. 421, 22 Ch. D. 549; London and Midland Bank v. Mitchell, 47 W. R. 602, [1899] 2 Ch. 161; France v. Clark, 32 W. R. 466, 26 Ch. D. 257; Carter v. Wake, 4 Ch. D. 605, 25 W. R. Dig. 161; James v. James, 21 W. R. 522, L. R. 16 Eq. 153; In re Richardson, 34 W. R. 286, 30 Ch. D. 396.

Danckwerts, K.C. (amicus curiæ).

The defendant did not appear.

COZENS-HARDY, J.—This action raises a question whether a person with whom certificates of shares in a limited company have been deposited by way of security is entitled to foreclosure, or whether his only remedy is sale. The defendant does not appear, but counsel who appears for the plaintiff has put before me all the authorities which might help the defendant in resisting foreclosure. The only material allegation in the statement of claim is that in March, 1897, the defendant deposited with Harrold a certificate for shares as security for the repayment to Harrold of the sum of £150 then owing to him from the defendant with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. Now it is plain that a pledgee is in a very different position from an ordinary mortgagee. He has only a special property in the thing pledged. He may obtain a sale, but he cannot obtain a foreclosure. I do not think that this is properly a case of pledge. A share is a chose in action. The certificates are merely evidence of title, and whatever may be the result of the deposit of a bearer bond, such as that which Sir G. Jessel dealt with in Carter v. Wake, I think I cannot treat the plaintiff as a mere pledgee. The deposit of the certificate by way of security for the debt which is admitted seems to me to amount to an equitable mortgage, or in other words, to an agreement to execute a transfer of the shares by way of mortgage. The result is that the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment substantially in the form which would be given if, instead of certificates of shares, the documents had been title deeds of real estate or a policy of assurance.

Solicitors, Maude & Tunnicliffe, for S. J. Knight, Newbury.

Chan. Div.
Farwell, J. } May 21.

In re SANDBACH SCHOOL AND ALMSHOUSE FOUNDATION.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. EARL OF CREWE AND OTHERS. (a.)

Charity—Scheme—Construction—Parish—Privileged and non-privileged townships—Chapelries—Overseers—Tithe—Church rate—Private Act—Endowed Schools Acts, 1869 to 1874 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 56; 36 & 37 Vict. c. 87; 37 & 38 Vict. c. 87).

On the construction of an Act of Parliament and two schemes regulating charitable trusts for the benefit of "the deserving poor of the parish of Sandbach," in which parish there were, besides the parish church, two chapelries with chapels of ease, and thirteen townships, only six of which latter were privileged under the original foundation,

Held, that the word "parish" meant the whole ecclesiastical parish, including all the thirteen townships and the two chapelries.

The payment of the whole tithe to the incumbent of the parish church points to this as the true construction, and evidence as to the local levying of rates by different overseers and of funds for chapel repairs and as to the local election of churchwardens cannot avail to the contrary.

This was an originating summons taken out by the Attorney-General asking the court to determine what persons were eligible under the provisions of a scheme made by the Charity Commissioners for England and Wales, and approved on the 28th of November, 1887, regulating the Sandbach School and Almshouse Foundation, as satisfying the description of deserving poor of the parish of Sandbach as objects of that part of the endowment which was applicable for purposes not educational within the meaning of the Endowed Schools Acts, 1869 to 1874, and in particular whether the inhabitants of the hamlets or townships of Blackden, Cotton, Church Hulme, Cranage, Goostrey, Lees, and Tremlow, or any of them were so entitled.

The respondents were the governors of the foundation.

By an indenture of the 26th of June, 1673, certain lands purchased with moneys given for the use of the poor inhabiting within certain privileged townships or hamlets of the parish of Sandbach were declared to be held by the trustees in trust to make certain yearly payments (inter alia) for bread for poor persons inhabiting within those townships, and to apply the residue of the income for the poor thereof.

By indentures of lease and release dated the 27th and 28th of September, 1683, certain lands were granted to trustees upon trust to pay annual sums to the chapelries of Church Hulme and Goostrey, for the poor of those chapelries, and to pay the residue of the rents to the minister, churchwardens, and inhabitants of the privileged townships, to be distributed among the poor of the parish of Sandbach dwelling within the privileged townships.

In 1788 and 1798 further lands were conveyed to trustees upon the same trusts as to residue.

In 1848 a private Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 11) was passed to provide for the better administration of both the non-educational charities and the educational charities, the latter of which consisted of an endowed school founded in 1718 for twenty poor children inhabiting within the parish of Sandbach, and not limited to inhabitants of the privileged townships. After reciting (inter alia) that it was expedient that all the charities should be embraced in one scheme and be under the management of the same trustees, and that it was proposed to establish a general school for the education of the poor of the said parish of Sandbach, it was enacted as follows:

"Section 1.—That all lands and premises then vested in any persons in trust for the consolidated charities and the school or either of them should be thereby vested in fifteen named new trustees discharged from the existing trusts and upon the trust therein expressed.

"Section 2.—That all money, stocks, funds, and securities then vested in or held by any persons upon trust for the consolidated charities and the school or either of them should be discharged from the existing trusts and held upon the trusts therein expressed."

Section 3 confirmed the scheme contained in Schedule A.

"Section 6.—That it should be lawful for the Court of Chancery to authorize and direct the said charities to purchase and hold in the town or parish of Sandbach aforesaid one or more piece or pieces of ground suitable as a site or sites for the erection of the school and almshouses by the scheme directed to be established.

(a.) Reported by WARWICK H. DRAPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

"Section 30.—That the expression 'the charity' should mean the consolidated charities of the town of Sandbach and the school of the said town as erected and administered under the authority of this Act."

The scheme contained in Schedule A provided by clause 1 for the appointment of fifteen trustees by the master to whom the cause stood referred, vacancies to be filled up by the trustees from parishioners of the parish of Sandbach residing within the said parish, or within fifteen miles of the boundaries thereof, and by clause 19 for the annual audit of the charity account, the same when audited to be deposited in some convenient place in Sandbach, and to be open to the inspection of any of the rated inhabitants of the parish, and to be published in one of the public newspapers circulating within the town and parish of Sandbach and county of Chester.

Clause 20 authorized the trustees to nominate fit and responsible persons within the town and parish of Sandbach to be treasurers of the charity.

Clause 23 directed the following annual payments out of income—viz., £1 to the Chapelry of Church Hulme and £2 to the Chapelry of Goostrey, to be respectively distributed amongst the poor of the said chapelries; £3 3s. to the clergyman of Sandbach for a sermon; 5s. each to the clerk and sexton of the same.

Clause 24 directed the payment of £200 per annum amongst "the deserving poor of the parish not receiving parochial relief," certain payments for educational purposes, and £200 a year for the support of the almspeople thereinafter mentioned.

Clause 28 directed a school for the education of boys to be established in the town of Sandbach, for which purpose proper premises should be purchased or erected within the town or parish of Sandbach.

Clause 29 directed that such school should be open to all the children of "the inhabitants of the parish of Sandbach generally," who should have attained the age of seven years, and should not be afflicted with any infectious distemper.

Clause 43 directed the erection of twenty almshouses in the parish of Sandbach for the reception of twenty poor persons who had been inhabitants and parishioners of the said parish, and qualified as thereinafter mentioned.

Clause 44 provided that all persons to be appointed to such almshouses should be selected from amongst proper objects and should have been resident within the said parish of Sandbach, and should have been householders assessed to and have paid rates for the relief of the poor of the said parish for a period of five years, or the widows or daughters of persons who had been such householders and paid rates for the said period of five years, or had been themselves householders and been assessed to and paid such rates for such a period of time as with the period their deceased husband or parent might have been assessed to and paid such rates would make up the full period of five years, certain limits of age being also imposed.

Clause 45 that the allowances to the almspeople should be £10 each per annum to be paid monthly.

Clause 58 provided that the residue and surplus of the income of the charity should be applied in aid or extension of any of the charitable purposes thereinbefore mentioned as to the trustees should seem meet.

Clause 59 provided that this scheme should be printed, and a copy furnished to every trustee, and that copies be deposited in the church and chapel of ease of the said parish.

The scheme of the 28th of November, 1887, made under the Endowed Schools Acts, 1869 to 1874, while making some variations in the provisions of the former scheme, made no change as to the qualification of persons eligible for the benefits of the non-educational charities.

By clause 2 it provided as follows: "Except as hereinafter provided the part of the endowment of the foundation to be henceforth applied for purposes not educational within the meaning of the Endowed Schools Act, 1869, and amending Acts shall be administered by the governing body, hereinafter called the governors, in as nearly as may be the manner in which such part would have been administered if this scheme had not been made. Such part shall be the existing twenty almshouses of the foundation, with their respective sites, and the following yearly payments, that is to say: To the chapelwardens of the Chapelry of Church Hulme the yearly sum of £1; to the chapelwardens of the Chapelry of Goostrey, the yearly sum of £2; to the clergyman of Sandbach for Wheelock's sermon the yearly sum of £3 3s.; to the clerk and sexton of Sandbach, the yearly sum of 5s. each; and for clothes, provisions, or coal for deserving poor of the parish of Sandbach the yearly sum of £200; for the maintenance of the twenty almshouse and almspeople of the foundation, including repairs, rates, taxes, insurance, and all other expenses of management relating exclusively to the almshouses and almspeople, the yearly sum of £350, in place of the yearly sum of £200 and of any other sums hitherto respectively applicable for this purpose; for pensions to persons, to be called out-pensioners, having the qualifications required in the persons to be appointed to the almshouses of the foundation, the yearly sum of £120 to be applied under regulations to be approved by the Charity Commissioners; and, so long as a yearly sum of £100, by clause 24 of the scheme contained in the Schedule A, annexed to the above-mentioned private Act, directed to be applied for the purposes of the Sandbach National Schools for girls and boys so long as in such scheme provided, shall under the conditions in that behalf laid down in such other scheme remain applicable for the purposes of those schools, such yearly sum of £100. Subject as aforesaid, the amendment shall be applied wholly for the educational purposes of this scheme."

Sir R. B. Finlay, A.G. (Dibdin, K.C., and Beaumont with him), opened the facts of the case.

Jenkins, K.C., and Austen-Cartmell, for the respondents.—After the payment of the fixed charges the residue should go to the six privileged townships. At the time when the Act was passed the non-educational benefits were limited to these townships under the various deeds constituting the non-educational groups of charities. A distinction must be drawn between the ecclesiastical parish and the legal parish; here the scheme means the town as locally understood —i.e., the six privileged townships—and this view is supported by the tests of the church rate payment and the payment for chapel repairs which are levied locally.

Dibdin, K.C., in reply.—There was no distinction in 1848 between an ecclesiastical parish and a rate district. After the Poor Relief Act, 1601 (43 Eliz. c. 2), overseers did indeed make a parish, but the Poor Relief Act, 1662 (14 Car. 2, c. 12), s. 21, was passed for the purpose of obviating the inconvenience of having one set of overseers for a very large parish, and simply provided the machinery for collecting the rates of the one mother parish, so that the "overseer" test is only to be applied under the law as it stood before 1662: Reg. v. Watson, 16 W. R. 977, L. R. 3 Q. B. 762. That the Vicar of Sandbach here takes the whole tithe is strong evidence: Reg. v. Clayton, 13 Q. B. R. 354, 362. Nothing can be founded on the suggested church rate test nor on the custom of local people repairing a local chapel, which is common and obtains in the free churches: Craven v. Sanderson, 7 A. & E. 88. Similarly, the custom to elect churchwardens locally is frequent and proves nothing: Green v. Reg., 1 App. Cas. 513, 25 W. R. Dig. 92; Bremner v. Hull, 14 W. R. 964, L. R. 1 C. P. 748; Rex v. Marsh, 5 A. & E. 468. The chapelries are still so described in the Gazette

FARWELL, J.—In this case the Attorney-General asks the court to determine "What persons are eligible under the provisions of the above-mentioned scheme regulating the above-mentioned charity made the 28th day of November, 1887, as satisfying the description of deserving poor of the parish of Sandbach as objects of the trusts of that part of the endowment of the said Sandbach School and Almshouse Foundation which is applicable for purposes not educational within the meaning of the Endowed Schools Act, 1869, and in particular whether the inhabitants of the hamlets or townships of Blackden, Cotton, Church Hulme, Cranage, Goostrey, Lees, and Tremlow, or any of them, are so entitled." That depends upon the construction not merely of the particular scheme referred to, which is dated 1887, but of the Act of 1848. That Act dealt with charities which had been founded many years before, some of them as far back as 1680, or thereabouts. There were two sets of charities dealt with. First of all there were eleemosynary charities dealing with the inhabitants of peculiar specified townships which were treated as portions, as in fact they were, of the parish of Sandbach. The other ancient charity dealt with a school; it was an educational charity. In my opinion it is plain that the eleemosynary charity dealt with six only out of the thirteen townships of which the parish of Sandbach consisted; there were fixed charges and the residue divided amongst the particular townships; but in my opinion it is equally plain that the educational charity dealt with the whole of the inhabitants of the whole parish of Sandbach. It appears to me, without going in detail into the statements in the deed, that the settlor is the Vicar of Sandbach, who is the son and heir of Francis Wells, of Sandbach, deceased, and that he settles the property that he puts in trust for the teaching of poor children in Sandbach aforesaid, and that he provides that instruction shall be given to twenty poor children, inhabitants within the said parish of Sandbach, who were to be taught and instructed in the reading of English only, and to be taught the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, the Ten Commandments, and the Church Catechism by heart, so that the ambit of that particular charity was the whole of the inhabitants of the parish of Sandbach committed to the care and custody of the vicar who was making that foundation and who thereby made provision for their instruction in godly knowledge. I have personally no doubt at all as to that being an educational charity for the benefit of all the inhabitants. Then the Act of Parliament dealing with these two matters takes up the report of the master in an information by the Attorney-General; the master having found that it was desirable that the funds and property of the several charities should be vested in one set of trustees and be administered in connection with and in aid of each other according to the provisions of one scheme.

I think Mr. Dibdin is well founded in his observation that it was intended to make a very considerable alteration, and in fact a very considerable alteration was made by the Act of Parliament. If it had been merely intended or desired to have a scheme cy près or a variation cy près the Court of Chancery could have done it without the intervention of the Legislature, but obviously what was intended was so drastic an alteration that the Legislature alone could give effect to it. I will not pause to remark on the various cases and recitals in the Act which render it plain to my mind that the parish of Sandbach is throughout treated of as a parish which includes within itself the six townships mentioned and other townships. The other townships are not mentioned by name, but it is quite plain to my mind on the general recitals of the Act that the parish of Sandbach is an entity consisting of divers townships, including among such townships the six which have been called in the scheme the privileged townships. Then the Act of Parliament proceeds first of all absolutely to discharge all the existing charitable uses and trusts and to enact a fresh scheme. [Here his lordship referred to the clauses of the scheme set out above.] Going back from clause 29 to clause 24 it appears to me that "the deserving poor of the parish" and "the inhabitants of the parish of Sandbach generally," so far as the parish is referred to, must be the same thing; and I think that is borne out when I come to look at clauses 43 and 44 when the scheme takes up the third head—namely, the other eleemosynary provision for "twenty almhouses in the parish of Sandbach for the reception of twenty poor persons who have been inhabitants and parishioners of the said parish and qualified as hereinafter mentioned." So there you have a distinction, as it were, drawn between inhabitants generally mentioned in clause 29 and inhabitants qualified as hereinafter mentioned in clause 43; and this is explained in clause 44 to be persons who have been resident within the parish of Sandbach and householders assessed to and who have paid rates for the relief of the poor of the said parish for a period of five years.

The argument presented has been this. It has been said that "parish" here may mean one of three things. It may mean either the ecclesiastical area, the ecclesiastical parish, or it may mean the various parishes or authorities in the nature of parishes to which rates are paid, or it may mean so much of the ecclesiastical parish as on the evidence has contributed towards church rates in the past while there were church rates and to repairs of the old parish church. In my opinion the cases and the Act of Parliament referred to by Mr. Dibdin show conclusively that the first and the larger sense is the only possible one; the ecclesiastical parish is, properly speaking, the whole parish and parish proper.

Now what are the tests which I can use to ascertain whether that is the meaning in this Act or not? In the first place I can find no words in the Act itself which point in any way to a limitation of the generality of the word "parish" in either of the ways pointed out by Mr Jenkins's and Mr. Cartmell's argument; nothing on the face of the document that I can see suggested it. Then what is relied upon is, first of all, this item of evidence. It is said that each of these townships has paid poor rates to their own overseers and have not paid to the overseers of the parish of Sandbach generally. That is conclusively answered by Mr. Dibdin's reference to the Poor Relief Act of 1662, which shows that it was the only possible way the rates could have been made, having regard to the magnitude of the parishes, and that Act of Parliament; separate overseers had to be appointed for each of the various townships and no argument at all can be founded on the existence of such separate overseers. Then against that on the other side there is the point that the whole tithe is received by the vicar of the parish. That was considered to be a matter of very great importance in the case of Rex v. Clayton, and to my mind is almost conclusive, and when I couple that with the fact that persons living in the two chapelries which are said to include the excluded townships, have been in the habit, as it is plain on the evidence they have been, of being married in the parish church, having regard to Lord Hardwicke's Act it appears to me that that also is very strong evidence as to what is the meaning of the word "parish" as applied to Sandbach. Against that it is said that the church rates and repairs of the church have been borne by the inhabitants of the townships other than the seven who are now claiming to come in. That again I think is answered by the authority Mr. Dibdin referred to of Craven v. Sanderson because it is plain that such an arrangement as that under which the inhabitants of the parish church and the inhabitants of Chapels of Ease contributed each exclusively to the repairs of the place of worship within their own district is a legal and a possible one, and if that be so no argument can be founded on the fact which may be attributable and is attributable to such an arrangement. Then there are the Orders in Council which throughout treat the two chapelries in question as within the parish of Sandbach. In my opinion it is proved conclusively that the parish of Sandbach does include these two chapelries, and I can find on the Act of Parliament and the scheme nothing whatever which would show that the word "parish" means anything less than the whole parish of Sandbach, and I answer the question accordingly in that way.

Solicitors, The Solicitor to the Treasury; Pritchard, Englefield & Co., for Robert Bygott & Sons, Sandbach.

Chan. Div. } June 25.
Wright, J. }

In re THE STATE OF WYOMING SYNDICATE (LIMITED). (a.)

Company — Winding up — Requisition to directors — Notice of meeting by secretary without authority — Effect on validity of resolution to wind up voluntarily — Companies Act, 1900, s. 13, sub-sections 1, 3, 5.

Where a requisition under section 13 of the Companies Act, 1900, has been sent in to the directors calling upon them to summon a meeting of the company, the notice of the meeting, if given within the period of twenty-one days mentioned in the Act, can only be given by the authority of the directors at a meeting of the board, consequently a notice given within such period by the secretary of the company without the authority of the board of directors is invalid, and the proceedings of the meeting held in pursuance of such notice are of no effect.

Quære, whether the requisitionists could, after the expiration of the twenty-one days, call a meeting by notices signed by the secretary.

Petition for compulsory winding up.

The above-named company was incorporated on the 14th of October, 1899, with a nominal capital of £150,000 divided into thirteen ordinary shares of £1,000 each and 200 deferred shares of £10 each; at the date of the petition the amount of capital credited as paid up was £4,000.

On the 25th of April, 1901, the following requisition was sent to the directors:

"The State of Wyoming Syndicate (Limited).

"To the directors of the above-named company.

"Take notice that we, the undersigned persons holding not less than one-tenth of the issued capital of the above-named company upon which all calls or other sums due have been paid hereby require you to convene an extraordinary general meeting of the above-named company for the purpose of considering, and, if thought fit, passing extraordinary resolutions as follows, that is to say:

"1. That it has been proved to the satisfaction of the meeting that the company cannot by reason of its liabilities continue its business, and that it is advisable to wind up the same, and accordingly that the company be wound up voluntarily under the provisions of the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1900

"2. For the appointment of a liquidator for the purpose of such winding up.

"Dated the 25th day of April, 1901."

This notice was signed by the requisitionists, among whom were W. Lees and W. Pinkney, two of the directors.

On the 29th of April, 1901, the following notice was sent from the offices of the company by the secretary without the authority of the directors:

"Notice is hereby given that an extraordinary general meeting of the above-named company will be held at the registered office, Finsbury House, as above, on the 10th day of May, 1901, at 2.30 p.m., for the purpose of considering and, if thought fit, passing extraordinary resolutions as follows, that is to say: [Here follow the resolutions set out above.]

"(Sd) A. B. WILKINS, Secretary."

At the meeting held on the 10th of May in accordance with the above notice, two of the directors —viz., W. C. E. Serjeant, the present petitioner, and W. Lees—the other requisitionists and many shareholders were present, and the above resolutions were passed, and were afterwards duly filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies and advertised in the London Gazette. No confirmatory meeting was necessary. It was provided by one of the special articles of the company that two directors should constitute a quorum. With regard to the calling of meetings, the company was governed by Table A to the Companies Act, 1862, clause 32 of which says that "the directors may, whenever they shall think fit . . . convene an extraordinary general meeting."

On the 16th of May, 1901, W. C. E. Serjeant presented a petition for the compulsory winding up of the company, the petition alleging that the company was indebted to the petitioner in the sum of £736 16s. 3d. on a judgment debt.

The petition was opposed upon the ground that there was a voluntary winding up already pending, but the petitioner contended that the resolution passed was not valid because section 13 of the Companies Act, 1900, had not been complied with, in that the notice of the meeting had been sent out by the secretary without the authority of the board of directors before the period of twenty-one days allowed by the section had elapsed, during which period the directors were the only persons who were authorized to summon the meeting.

F. Gore-Browne, for the petitioner.—The secretary has no official position under the Companies Acts except as to making returns, and had no authority to issue the notice of the meeting. By section 13 of the Companies Act, 1900, sub-sections 1, 3, 5, the notice ought to have been issued by the board of directors. As it was not, it is invalid and the resolutions passed at the meeting are therefore of no effect: In re Haycraft Gold Reduction and Mining Co., [1900] 2 Ch. 230, 48 W. R. Dig. 43.

(a.) Reported by W. MORRIS CARTER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

E. W. Martelli, for the liquidator and two of the shareholders.—If there is an irregularity, it has been condoned and the irregular act confirmed by all the shareholders, and it is contrary to the principles of equity to regard a mere irregularity in the internal affairs of the company, such as this is, as fatal to the validity of the proceedings. At the meeting two directors and all the shareholders who have found cash were present, and no objection on this point was taken. The Haycraft case was entirely different; there the approval of the directors was necessary, here they have no option or discretion, it is their duty to summon the meeting. I rely on Browne v. La Trinidad, 36 W. R. 289, 37 Ch. D. 1, p. 10; Foss v. Harbottle, 2 Hare 461; Southern Counties Deposit Bank v. Rider, 73 L. T. Rep. 374, 44 W. R. Dig. 32; In re Bonelli's Telegraph Co., Collie's Claim, 19 W. R. 1022, L. R. 12 Eq. 246.

WRIGHT, J., delivered judgment to the following effect: In my judgment it is clear in law that the meeting could not have been properly summoned on the day on which it was summoned except by the directors. It could not be summoned by the requisitionists because the twenty-one days limited by section 13 of the Act of 1900 had not expired. I need not decide whether the requisitionists could, after the expiration of the twenty-one days, call a meeting by notices signed by the secretary. But before that period had expired only the directors could call the meeting, and the secretary could not, without their authority, summon a meeting. This is admitted by Mr. Martelli, but he says there has been a mere irregularity in the internal affairs of the company which could have been immediately set right and would have been set right if the existence of the irregularity had been known, and that it is contrary to the established principles of equity to regard such a matter as this as an irregularity which is fatal to the validity of the proceedings. This is a serious question, and no one would desire to infringe on Browne v. La Trinidad, and the rules laid down in that and other cases. But I hesitate to apply the principles of those cases to a case like this. Nothing can be more important than the question whether a company should proceed to voluntary liquidation, especially when a petition for a compulsory winding-up order is pending against the company, and it seems to me that proceedings of this kind ought to be conducted with substantial propriety. I think that Cozens-Hardy, J., acted on this view of the law in In re Haycraft Gold Reduction and Mining Co., where the question was whether the resolution for winding up was valid. He says ([1900] 2 Ch. at p. 236): "In the present case I cannot regard the omission to convene a board meeting to consider matters of such vital moment as a winding up of the company and the appointment of a liquidator as a mere irregularity," and he then goes on to point out that the winding up in that case was part of a scheme devised for an improper purpose. I am not for a moment suggesting that that is the case here. I think I should not be deciding in accordance with the decision of Cozens-Hardy, J., if I were to hold that in a matter of this kind a secretary could act entirely on his own authority. If he does summon a meeting without authority I do not think I ought to hold that a resolution passed at the meeting is valid. If it had been a mere question of informality with reference to the constitution of the board which summoned the meeting—for instance, some question as to whether there was a proper quorum present, I might have applied the principle of Browne v. La Trinidad, but I think I should be going too far if I held that it applied to the present case. No doubt two directors, the requisitionists, and many shareholders were present at the meeting, and there would have been great reason for the argument of Mr. Martelli, if there had been full knowledge of the irregularity and the directors had done anything to recognize the act of the secretary as their act. Then a different question would have arisen, but there is no question here of ratification, and I must hold that the meeting was improperly convened, and that no valid resolution for the voluntary winding up was passed. There will therefore be the usual compulsory order for winding up No imputation is made with regard to the secretary, and the gentleman named as voluntary liquidator must have his costs out of the assets.

Petition granted.

Solicitors, Judge & Priestley; Robbins, Billing, & Co.

K. B. Div.
(Ridley and Bigham, JJ.) June 20.

MATTHEWS v. STRACHAN. (a.)

Local government — Public health — Powers of local authority—Drainage of new house—Requirements "for the effectual drainage of such house"—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 25.

Section 25 of the Public Health Act, 1875, enacts that "it shall not be lawful in any urban district to erect any house unless and until a covered drain or drains be constructed of such size and materials, and at such level, and with such fall as on the report of the surveyor may appear to the urban authority to be necessary for the effectual drainage of such house."

Held, that in considering what is necessary for the effectual drainage of a house the urban authority are not entitled to take into consideration the general requirements of their district in regard to the means of disposing of the sewage.

An urban council, in order to facilitate the ultimate disposal of the sewage in its district, formed a scheme for conveying the sewage and the surface water by means of separate sewers and constructed separate sewers accordingly. With a view to carry out this scheme the council ordered a person proposing to build a new house to construct two main drains in connection with his house, one for conveying sewage only, to be connected with their sewage sewer, and the other for conveying surface water only, to be connected with their surface water sewer.

Held, that the order was bad.

Case stated by justices of Middlesex.

On the 20th of March, 1901, an information was laid by the respondent, clerk to the Urban District Council of Harrow-on-the-Hill, against the appellant charging that the appellant had newly erected a house in Lyon-road, in the Urban District of Harrow-on-the-Hill, without constructing such covered drains thereto as on the report of the surveyor of the urban district council of the district appeared to the council necessary for the effectual drainage of the house, contrary to section 25 of the Public Health Act, 1875.

The appellant erected the house in question between August and December, 1900.

Two sewers had been placed by the council in Lyon-road, both within 100ft. from the site of the house. One of these sewers the council desired and intended to be used for the reception and conveyance of surface water only. The other they desired and intended to be used for the reception and conveyance of sewage only.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Bye-laws in relation, inter alia, to the drainage of buildings made under section 157 of the Public Health Act, 1875, were in force in the district. These bye-laws did not require that separate drains for surface water and sewage respectively should be laid for any building.

On the 22nd of January, 1900, certain regulations were issued by the council which purported to be made under section 21 of the Public Health Act, 1875, with reference to the mode in which the communications between drains and sewers were to be made.

One of these regulations prohibited surface water from being permitted to enter the council's sewer without the special sanction of the council.

Before erecting the house the appellant deposited plans of the same in accordance with the requirements of the above-mentioned bye-laws showing, inter alia, the method proposed to be adopted, and afterwards in fact adopted by him for the drainage of the house—namely, by a single drain which the appellant proposed to connect with the sewage sewer and intended for the discharge both of the surface water and of the sewage.

On the 21st of November, 1900, the council's surveyor made a report with reference to the house in which he stated that the requirements for the effectual drainage of the house were: "(a) One main drain of not less than four inches internal diameter for conveying sewage only to be . . . connected to the council's sewage sewer in Lyon-road . . .; (b) one main drain of not less than four inches internal diameter for conveying surface water only to be . . . connected to the council's surface water sewer in Lyon-road . . ."

On the 26th of November, 1900, the council took the report into consideration and after considerable discussion passed a resolution approving the plans submitted by the appellant subject to the requirements contained in the report as to the drainage of the house being carried out.

On the 27th of November a notice was sent to the appellant by the respondent requiring him to lay the drains in accordance with the surveyor's report. The appellant did not lay two drains for the drainage of the house as required by the notice and report, but laid one drain only for the drainage thereof in the manner shown in the plans deposited by him. The drain so laid by the appellant was in all respects in accordance with the requirements of the report and notice as regards the conveyance of sewage, but no separate drain whatever was laid for the conveyance of surface water, such surface water being conveyed to the soil drain in direct contravention of the council's requirements.

The council's surveyor was called as a witness before the justices. He admitted that the drain laid by the appellant would have been perfectly effectual if there had been only one sewer in Lyon-road and that his reason for reporting that separate drains ought to be laid, one for sewage only and one for surface water, was that it was desirable with a view to facilitating the ultimate disposal of sewage by the council that sewage only should be discharged into the sewage sewer and surface water only into the surface water sewer, and that there were separate sewers for sewage and for surface water in Lyon-road.

The justices held that they had no power to question the reasonableness of the requirements for the effectual drainage of the house either as regards the house itself or in connection with the general system of drainage in the district and convicted the appellant.

Section 25 of the Public Health Act, 1875, enacts as follows: "It shall not be lawful in any urban district newly to erect any house or to rebuild any house which has been pulled down to or below the ground floor, or to occupy any house so newly erected or rebuilt, unless and until a covered drain or drains be constructed, of such size and materials, and at such level, and with such fall as on the report of the surveyor may appear to the urban authority to be necessary for the effectual drainage of such house, and the drain or drains so to be constructed shall empty into any sewer which the urban authority are entitled to use, and which is within one hundred feet of some part of the site of the house to be built or rebuilt; but if no such means of drainage are within that distance, then shall empty into such covered cesspool or other place, not being under any house, as the urban authority direct. Any person who causes any house to be erected or rebuilt or any drain to be constructed in contravention of this section shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding fifty pounds."

A. F. Jenkin (McCall, K.C., with him), for the appellant.—The local authority under section 25 only had to consider what was necessary for the effectual drainage of the house, and they had no right to consider what was for the benefit of the inhabitants at large. If they desired to regulate the disposal of the sewage they should have made bye-laws under section 157.

S. G. Lushington (Macmorran, K.C., with him).—The discretion of the local authority has been properly exercised, and it cannot be disturbed: Smith v. Chorley Rural Council, 45 W. R. 417, [1897] 1 Q. B. 678. The local authority were right in taking into consideration the fact that there were two existing sewers, as that affected the question as to what was necessary for the effectual drainage of the house.

RIDLEY, J.—I think that the magistrates were wrong. The point arises under section 25 of the Public Health Act, 1875. The appellant was convicted of erecting a house without constructing such covered drains thereto as on the report of the surveyor to the urban district council appeared to the council necessary for the effectual drainage of the house.

The surveyor made a report which did state on its face that the requirements for the effectual drainage of the house were a main drain for conveying sewage only to be connected with the council's sewage sewer and a main drain for conveying surface water only to be connected with the council's surface water sewer.

No evidence was called before the council when they considered the report and they acted upon the report alone. Before the justices the surveyor was called and he stated that the drain laid by the appellant would have been effectual if there had only been one sewer, and that his reason for reporting that separate drains ought to be laid was that it was desirable with a view of facilitating the ultimate disposal of the sewage that there should be separate sewers for sewage and surface water. I think we must take that as constituting the facts of this case. It may be that the attention of the council was not called to the circumstances which caused the surveyor to make his report as he did. The report, however, was founded on a misconception, and the surveyor acted beyond the powers given by section 25. Section 25 refers to "the effectual drainage of such house," and if you go beyond this you are asking the owner of the house to assist in carrying out a system of sewering the district.

The evidence given by the surveyor before the justices shows plainly that he was acting under a misconception.

No doubt the council are the masters of the situation, but if they go beyond the limits within which they have to exercise their discretion it is our duty to say so.

It appears to me that the words of section 25 have been carefully selected to indicate that what is to be considered is the effectual drainage of the house. It is possible that in order to secure the effectual drainage of the house it may be necessary to have more than one drain, not because the system of sewering adopted by the local authority requires more than one, but because the drainage of the house itself requires more than one, and it may be necessary for the same object that there should be separate connections with the sewers. In such a case it would not be beyond the powers of the local authority to make the requirements. But if the local authority allow themselves to consider what is for the benefit of the inhabitants in general in regard to the means of disposing of the sewage they are going beyond their powers. There is no liability upon the owner of a house in regard to those matters except as one of the ratepayers.

BIGHAM, J.—I am of the same opinion. Section 25 empowers the local authority to take into consideration certain matters mentioned therein, and these are the only matters which they are entitled to take into consideration. These matters relate to the size and materials of the covered drain, the level at which it is to be constructed, and the fall which is to be given to it. If the local authority are of opinion that these matters are as they should be, then the building of the new house may proceed. In this case the council have taken into consideration other matters than those referred to. I come to this conclusion by reading not only the evidence of the surveyor but his report. It is said that the council took into consideration nothing but what they were entitled to take into consideration, but the report shows that both the surveyor and the council took into consideration what they had nothing whatever to do with.

When one considers the facts one sees why these matters were considered. There was a scheme of drainage in the district by which the sewage and surface water were kept separate. No doubt it was a good and desirable thing that this system should be carried out effectually, but the cost of carrying it out must not be put upon the individual householder. It must be borne by the ratepayers. Here there has has been an attempt to throw upon an individual the expense of carrying out the general system of drainage adopted by the council. I think the council in exercising their discretion have travelled outside what the section allows. As for the words, "and the drain or drains, so to be constructed, shall empty into any sewer which the urban authority are entitled to use," I see nothing in them which gives the local authority power to direct into which sewer the drain is to empty. If the sewer is within 100 feet from the building that is sufficient, and the householder may drain into it. I do not think those words enlarge the powers of the local authority. The council have taken into consideration matters which they ought not to have considered and the appeal must be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Burgess & Taylor.

Solicitors for the respondent, Fishers.

K. B. Div. (Ridley, J.) — May 20; June 6.

ABRAHAMS v. BULLOCK. (a.)

Master and servant—Hire of horse, brougham, and driver from jobmaster at so much a week to include driver's wages—Brougham used by hirer's traveller for his rounds—Theft from brougham of jewellery through negligence of driver leaving carriage unattended—Master parting with control of servant—Control of hirer—Non-liability of jobmaster to hirer.

The plaintiff, a wholesale jeweller, hired from the defendant, a jobmaster, a horse, brougham, and driver for £3 a week, to include the man's wages. The brougham was for the use of his traveller.

The brougham was out one day and the driver left it unattended while he had his dinner. During his absence it was driven away, and jewellery to the value of some £460 was stolen.

Held, that, although the loss was due to the negligence of the coachman in leaving the brougham unattended, yet that, under the contract, the defendant did not accept the duty of taking care of the goods, and, therefore, was not liable for the loss.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, a jeweller in a large way of business in the East End of London, to recover from the defendant, a jobmaster, £460, the agreed sum of certain jewellery alleged to have been lost through the negligence of the defendant's servant under circumstances that sufficiently appear from the judgment.

At the conclusion of the arguments the learned judge said the questions of law raised on the admitted facts did not in his opinion come within any of the authorities cited, and he would therefore take time to consider his judgment.

C. A. Russell, K.C., and Sims Williams, for the plaintiff.

Dickens, K.C., and Schwabe, for the defendant.

RIDLEY, J., read the following judgment: This is an action brought by the manufacturer of jewellery against a jobmaster to recover £460, an agreed sum, as the value of certain articles of jewellery lost owing to the alleged negligence of the defendant's servant. The main facts of the case are not in dispute, and they raise a very interesting and novel point of law. The admitted facts are as follow: On the 21st of June, 1898, the defendant wrote the plaintiff: "I shall be pleased to supply you with same brougham as you are having at £3 for the five days' work, payable monthly. Holidays or days it is not required to be allowed for. You can choose the brougham yourself, and I will keep the same coachman (Shed), paying him 18s. weekly, for five days, and will try and give him work the other two days with extra pay." The plaintiff's traveller, on behalf of the plaintiff, wrote to the defendant: "In accordance with your favour of the 21st inst., please start the brougham on Monday next." The letter also stated that the plaintiff had seen a brougham at Messrs. Alford's which he would like to have fitted up for the purpose of taking out goods. The brougham in question was fitted up, and was regularly used by Cohen, the plaintiff's traveller. About May or June, Shed's place was taken by a man named Mills, who continued to drive the brougham down to the time of the robbery. On the 24th of October, 1900, Cohen left the brougham outside the Thomas à be a debt due from such member to the society . . .," and by sub-section 2 "a registered society shall have a lien on the shares of any member for any debt due to it by him, and may set off any sum credited to the member thereon in or towards the payment of such debt." An industrial society, as long as it is carrying on business, may bonâ fide avail itself of the provisions of the above sub-section 2, notwithstanding that the society is at the time in financial difficulties and is wound up within three months of such time.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

This was an appeal by the liquidator of an industrial and provident society from the decision of the judge of the Glamorganshire County Court, who refused to set aside certain transactions whereby certain sums of money were refunded to a member of the society in respect of his shares therein, the society then being, to the knowledge of the managing committee, insolvent.

The facts fully appear in the written judgment of the court.

Herbert Reed, K.C., and J. Sankey, for C. Dovey, the appellant.—The society was in liquidation and had a number of outside creditors, and the liquidator seeks to bring in the respondent as a debtor and contributory to the society in the sum of £51 18s. 2d. for goods supplied to him. During the year 1898 the respondent was, from time to time, supplied with goods by the society, the committee debiting the amount standing to the respondent's credit as a shareholder with the price of the goods. At this time the amount of capital held by the respondent in the society was £54 19s. At the time these transactions took place the society was in financial difficulties, and therefore such withdrawals of capital by the respondent were invalid: In re Sunderland Universal Building Society, 38 W. R. 509, 24 Q. B D. 394. The Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), which avoids such a transaction as a preference.

Counsel cited also section 164 of the Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89).

S. T. Evans, K.C., for the respondent.—The decision of the county court judge was right. Section 164 of the Companies Act, 1862, does not apply here, as this is not a case of fraudulent preference. Section 164, although it uses the words "undue or fraudulent preference," does not extend the operation of section 48 of the Bankruptcy Act. 1883: In re The Stenotyper (Limited). [1901] 1 Ch. 250. The respondent was not in the position of a creditor of the society. No steps were taken by the respondent to withdraw his capital under rule 16 of the society, which rule enables members to withdraw their capital at certain rates and on certain terms on giving notice to the manager. The committee were entitled under section 23 of the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893, to deal with the business in the way they have done. The learned county court judge has found that the committee acted bonâ fide and that there was no undue preference, and his decision was right and should not be reversed.

H. Reed, K.C., replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 14.—Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J., read the following judgment of the court: This is an appeal from the decision of the learned county court judge of the Glamorganshire County Court upon a summons taken out by the liquidator of the "Hope of the Workmen's Industrial Provident Society" at Aberdare, to set aside certain transactions whereby four amounts were purported to be refunded to Richard Morgan in respect of his shares in the society. The following were the dates and amounts of the transfers or refundings impeached:

		£	s.	d.
1898.—21st February	... ...	4	19	0
,, 30th June ...	... ...	20	0	0
,, 20th July ...	... ...	12	8	3
,, 25th November	... ...	14	10	11
Total		£51	18	2

The society had been established for many years under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1876, and was in the nature of a co-operative society supplying goods to the members. The capital was in shares of £1, and it was provided by the rules that each member must hold at least five shares. By rule 16 provision was made that members might withdraw their capital at certain rates, and on certain terms, on giving notice to the manager. Early in the year 1898 the society was in financial difficulties and it was found by the learned county court judge that by the 14th of July, 1898, the society was to the knowledge of the managing committee insolvent. In February, 1898, before the first of the refundings above referred to, the amount of capital held by Morgan in the society was £54 19s. This amount appears to have been £4 19s. in excess of the maximum allowed by the rules to be held by a member, but this does not appear to be material. From time to time during the year 1898 Morgan was being supplied with goods, and it appears that owing to the strike and labour difficulties which were existing at the time he, in common with many other members of the society, was unable to pay cash for the goods supplied to him, it being provided by rule 12 that as far as possible the goods of the society were to be sold for ready money and that in no case should credit be given to members for more than two weeks. In consequence of this state of things the committee of management on the 21st of February debited the amount standing to Morgan's credit as shareholder with a sum of £4 19s, he at the same time paying £2 10s. cash, making a total of £7 9s. on account of £7 18s. 7d. due from him to the society for goods. Similarly upon the 30th of June, he being indebted to the society in the sum of £20 2s. 11d., a further amount of £20 was debited to his share account and credited against his debt for goods.

The circumstances of the transactions of the 20th of July and the 25th of November were exactly the same, and by the last debit of £14 10s. 11d. the amount standing to Morgan's credit was reduced to the sum of £4 19s. 1d.

The formal resolution for the winding up of the society was passed on the 27th of February, 1899.

It was admitted on the argument before us that no steps had been taken by Morgan to withdraw his capital under rule 16 and that therefore the transactions could not be supported under that rule.

It was stated that there were a considerable number of outside creditors, and the question raised is whether under the above circumstances the liquidator is entitled to set aside the transactions, the result of which would be that Morgan will be a debtor and contributory to the society in the amount of £51 18s. 2d. for goods supplied. If the transactions are to be regarded as withdrawals of capital by the shareholders then the case of In re Sunderland Universal Building Society decides that such withdrawals can only be legally supported when the society is or believes itself to be solvent, and under the decision in that case the two last transactions of the 20th of July and the 25th of November could not be supported.

A further point was raised with reference to the last transaction, the 25th of November, 1898, that it was void under the 164th section of the Companies Act, 1867, as having taken place within three months of the resolution of winding up. It was contended on behalf of the respondent that the transactions were in effect carried out under section 23 of the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893, and that it must be taken upon the facts that the society exercised its right to set off against the amount credited to the member on his shares the debt due from him. The point seems to us one of considerable difficulty. If the words "any sum credited to the member thereon" in sub-section 2 of section 23 are to be construed as meaning a sum credited and payable, the principle of the Sunderland case would seem to apply to this extent, that after a society is known to be insolvent there would probably be no sum to which the member would be in fact entitled; but there seems to us to be great difficulties in this construction. If effect were given to this contention it would affect the two last of the four transactions which are impeached. Section 34 contemplates that the register shall show the amount paid, or agreed to be considered as paid, on any shares, and as long as the society is carrying on business it is difficult to find any substantial ground upon which it can be held that it is precluded from exercising the right of set off mentioned in sub-section 2 of section 23. The words "set off" in that section do not appear to us to be used in the strict legal sense, but more in the business or accountant's sense, as indicating that the society may deduct or write off from the sum credited the amount of the member's debt. It seems to us that as long as a society is carrying on business it may bonâ fide avail itself of the provisions of this sub-section, otherwise it might be necessary to have a valuation of the society's assets or an inquiry into its position before any set off under the section could be made or entered in the books.

Upon the whole, we are of opinion that the county court judge, having found as a fact that the committee acted bonâ fide without any fraudulent intention or without the intention of preferring any particular shareholder, his judgment must be affirmed.

With regard to the further point taken as to the last payment, that it was void under section 154 of the Bankruptcy Act, we do not think that in any view the transaction would be within that section, Morgan not being a creditor within the meaning of the section. For the reasons we have given we think our judgment must be for the respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Bell, Brodrick, & Gray, for C. & W. Kenshole, Aberdare.

Solicitors for the respondent, Riddell & Co., for Walter Morgan, Bruce, & Nicholas, Pontypridd.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (Ireland). — May 13.

INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. PRIESTLEY AND ANOTHER. (a.)

Inland revenue—Estate duty—Settled property—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 1, 2 (a), and 5, sub-section 2.

A wife on her marriage settled certain funds, whereby a life interest was given to her husband followed by a life interest to herself, with an absolute reversion to herself. She predeceased her husband, and estate duty was paid on the principal value of her settled property.

Held, that by section 5, sub-section 2, of the Finance Act, 1894, upon the husband's death estate duty was not again payable on the settled funds.

Semble, that no estate duty was payable in respect of the husband's life interest.

Judgment of Rigby, L.J., in Attorney-General v. Dodington, 45 W. R. 657, [1897] 2 Q. B. 373, approved.

Decision of the Court of Appeal in Ireland, [1900] 2 Ir. R. 400, affirmed.

This was an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal in Ireland.

The case involved the construction of section 5, sub-section 2, of the Finance Act, 1894, which is as follows: "If estate duty has already been paid in respect of any settled property since the date of the settlement, the estate duty shall not . . . be payable in respect thereof until the death of a person who was at the time of his death, or had been at any time during the continuance of the settlement, competent to dispose of such property."

Caroline Amelia Priestley (afterwards Studdert) by her marriage settlement dated the 7th of October, 1861, assigned to trustees certain personal property in trust after the marriage to pay the income thereof to George Studdert (her intended husband) and his assigns during his life, and after his death to pay the said income to the said Caroline Amelia Priestley and her assigns during her life, and after the death of the survivor of the said George Studdert and Caroline Amelia Priestley to hold the said trust property and the income thereof in trust, in the event, which happened, of there not being a child of the marriage who attained the age of twenty-one years or married, for such person or persons as the said Caroline Amelia Priestley notwithstanding her coverture might by deed or will appoint.

Mrs. Studdert died before her husband on the 19th of March, 1897, having by her will exercised the power of appointment given to her by her marriage settlement.

George Studdert died on the 14th of April, 1897.

The appellants for the purpose of ascertaining the principal value of the reversionary interest appointed by the will of Mrs. Studdert estimated the principal value of the life interest of George Studdert at the time of the death of Mrs. Studdert in the trust property at the sum of £413 17s., and deducting this from £3,564 3s. 4d. the estimated value of the trust property, they found the sum of £3,150 6s. 4d. to be the principal value of the said reversionary interest at the death of Mrs. Studdert, and claimed estate duty on the death of Mrs. Studdert thereon, and the duty was paid to the appellants by the executor of Mrs. Studdert. The appellants also claimed estate duty on the death of the said George Studdert in respect of the principal value—namely, £3,564 3s. 4d.

The Court of Appeal considered that estate duty was not payable.

Sir R. B. Finlay, A.G., and Wright, S.G. for Ireland (Vaughan Hawkins and C. E. MacDermot (of the Irish bar) with them), for the appellants.

Ingpen, K.C., and Meredith (of the Irish bar), for the respondents.

Attorney-General v. Beech, 47 W. R. 257, [1899] A. C. 53; Attorney-General v. Dodington, 45 W. R. 657, [1897] 2 Q. B. 373; and Earl Cowley v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, 47 W. R. 525, [1899] A. C. 198, were referred to.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—In this case I entirely agree with the judgment which was given by Rigby, L.J., in the case of Attorney-General v. Dodington, and I agree with the learned judges in Ireland who have taken the same view. It only remains to say that I shall move that this appeal be dismissed. I have the less hesitation in speaking of it thus compendiously, because I think it would be impossible to answer and difficult to improve upon the judgment given by the Lord Chief Baron in Ireland. It appears to me that he has exactly expounded the construction of the question and the logical effect of the language, and the only thing that one feels a difficulty about is that there is a certain amount of want of logic, considering the reasoning both in that and in the Dodington case, in the money having been paid for duty upon the death of Mr. Studdert. But here, as there, there is no cross-appeal. The result is that we must leave the matter as it stands. I have no hesitation in expressing my own opinion that Rigby, L.J., was right in that particular, and, had the question so arisen, I should have unhesitatingly agreed to a judgment which would have gone to the full extent.

The reason to my mind is very plain. The whole question turns upon section 5, sub-section 2. As Rigby, L.J., has said, the manifest difficulty that was in the mind of the framers of the statute was that it would be unreasonable and improper in respect of settled property that the same whole estate should pay over and over again. Here it is only one life estate that is interposed, but it might be a dozen, and no doubt the framers of the statute thought that it would be extremely improper and unjust that in consequence of the splitting up what was one property included in one settlement, and which was to continue until either an actual change of entire ownership, or, what for the purpose of the Act was the same thing, the vesting in one person who had in himself or herself the power of changing the ownership completely, had occurred, there should be as many new duties enforced as there were persons comprehended in the settlement. The meaning and object of the statute appears to me to be both sensible and intelligible, although in this particular case it is only one life interest that is interposed before the change, not of the estate, but of the possession of the estate. That seems to me to be at the root of a great deal of the confusion that has arisen. The statute regards the passing of the ownership—not necessarily the possession, but the passing of the ownership—as that upon which, when occasioned by death, the duty is to be levied; and accordingly when the death occurs of a person who is entirely able to dispose of the whole estate—the whole estate, be it observed—then either the thing does pass, or shall be deemed to pass. Accordingly, on Mrs. Studdert's death, she being the complete owner at that time and entirely able to do what she pleased with it, the result is that upon her death undoubtedly duty was payable.

What the death of the husband, who had only a life estate, has to do with it, I confess I am wholly unable to understand according to the true construction of the statute. It appears to me that the statute does not regard the question of who was in possession of the estate at the moment for any purpose, however deferred the enjoyment of the possession of the estate may be. What is to happen is that the duty is to be paid upon the whole of the property on the occasion on which alone in the case of settled property it is to arise—namely, on the death of a person whom the statute treats as the person who is entirely free from the settlement, and able to do what he or she will with it; that is to be the guiding line, so that if the property does not actually pass, if he or she is capable of passing it, the statute draws the line accordingly.

I entirely agree with the reasoning of Palles, L.C.B. It seems to me to be impossible to answer it, and, as I have said, very difficult to improve upon it. Therefore, I entirely concur with the judgment which he (conspicuously he) and Holmes, L.J., have given upon the subject, based upon what is, to my mind, the very plain construction of the statute itself. I only look at the words of the statute. The scheme of the Act of course may be looked at where there are doubtful words; but I think these words are not doubtful. The result is that I move your lordships that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I agree. To my mind this is a very plain case. I think the question before the House is best answered in the fewest possible words, and as far as may be in the language of the Act itself.

On the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Studdert a deed was executed for the purpose of regulating the enjoyment and disposition of certain funds which formed part of the lady's fortune. The deed was a "settlement"—the funds became "settled property" within the definition of those expressions in the Act. The settled property was limited to the husband for life, with remainder to the wife for life, and subject thereto, in the events which happened, the property was at the absolute disposal of the wife.

The wife died in the lifetime of her husband. On her death, as it seems to me, there was no "passing" of property within the meaning of section 1 taken by itself. No property changed hands. And therefore, in my opinion, if it had not been for section 2 no duty would have been payable on Mrs. Studdert's death. But under section 2 (a), taken in conjunction with section 1, estate duty became leviable in respect of the settled property as being property of which at the time of her death Mrs. Studdert was competent to dispose. And so the commissioners claimed estate duty in respect of the settled property on Mrs. Studdert's death, as they were entitled and bound to do. It was then in the option of the persons accountable for the duty either to defer payment until the interest in expectancy at the time of Mrs. Studdert's death fell into possession, or to pay at once under discount. The latter alternative was the one adopted. The principal value of the settled property was estimated (as the Act directs) at the price which, in the opinion of the commissioners, the property would have fetched if sold in the open market at the time of the death of Mrs. Studdert. The commissioners seem to have arrived at their estimate in the ordinary way in which buyers of such property in the market make their calculations, by taking the market value of the securities forming the settled property as at the time of Mrs. Studdert's death, and then making an abatement or allowance in respect of Mr. Studdert's life interest, reckoning the probability of life according to the accepted tables of mortality. But the persons accountable for the duty have nothing to do with the mode in which the commissioners form their opinion, so long as they comply with the directions of the Act. Whatever process the commissioners may go through in their own minds—however they may split up the property for the purpose of coming at their estimate—the duty is leviable in respect of the settled property, not in respect of any particular part or parts of the settled property, or in respect of anything short of the full amount of the property. I entirely agree with the views expressed by Rigby, L.J., in Attorney-General v. Dodington, which have the approval of the Lord Chief Baron and Holmes, L.J., and I am compelled to dissent from the construction placed upon the Act by FitzGibbon and Walker, L.JJ. — a construction which seems to me calculated to reproduce the difficulties which I had thought were cleared away by the decision of this House in Attorney-General v. Beech and Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Cowley.

Shortly after his wife's death Mr. Studdert died, and the commissioners now claim estate duty once more in respect of the principal value of the settled property. Are they entitled to payment of duty over again? In my opinion, most clearly and certainly not. Since the date of the settlement, estate duty has been paid in respect of the settled property, and therefore under the express provisions of section 5, sub-section 2, estate duty is not payable again on Mr. Studdert's death. He was not at the time of his death, nor had he been at any time during the continuance of the settlement, competent to dispose of settled property. So the one and only event which could have entitled the commissioners to estate duty on Mr. Studdert's death has not occurred.

The only difficulty about the case, in my opinion, has arisen from the circumstance that for some reason, which at present I do not understand, and for which I have at present not been able to discover any authority in the Act, the respondent offered to pay, and the commissioners seem to be prepared to accept, a sum as and by way of estate duty on the amount which the commissioners, in their own minds, allowed as a deduction from the full value of the settled property at Mrs. Studdert's death in respect of her husband's life interest. I think the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Lords MORRIS and SHAND concurred.

Lord DAVEY.—I think that this property, and not a part or slice of it, must be deemed to have passed on the death of the wife, under the words of section 2, sub-section 1, where a person is "at the time of his death" competent to dispose of the property. I suppose this means has a power of disposition, and has executed it. If the power is not executed, I do not see very well in what sense the property which would have devolved on the persons entitled under the settlement—in this case the next-of-kin—would be deemed to pass on the death of the person who had the power, but had not in fact executed the power.

We have here two deaths—first, the death of the wife, when the property is, for the purpose of the Act, to be deemed to have passed; secondly, the death of the surviving husband, when the property did actually pass. I have some doubt whether property which is to be deemed to have passed at one date can be said to have passed, according to the scheme of the Act, to the same persons and under the same settlement at a later date; but that point has not been taken in the argument, and I do not desire to express any opinion of my own upon it.

For the purpose of this case I am content to rest my opinion upon the grounds fully and clearly stated in the judgment of the Lord Chief Baron in Ireland, and I agree with that learned judge in thinking that the judgment of Rigby, L.J., in the case of Attorney-General v. Dodington was correct. I agree that this appeal should be dismissed.

Lords BRAMPTON, ROBERTSON, and LINDLEY concurred.

Vaughan Hawkins. — The Attorney-General has desired me to say that, although there is no cross-appeal, the commissioners will, after what your lordships have said, return the duty on the £413.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I think the House will be of opinion that the Attorney-General has taken a very proper course.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Solicitor of Inland Revenue, Ireland, for appellants; Whitfield & Harrison, for Rooke & Rooke, Dublin, for respondents.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Rigby, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) — July 9; Aug. 1.

In re HAYES.
TURNBULL v. HAYES. (a.)

Will—Special power of appointment—Power created subsequent to will purporting to execute it—Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), ss. 24, 27.

A special power of appointment is not well executed by general words of disposition in a will executed prior to the date of the instrument creating the power.

Decision of Byrne, J. (ante, p. 21, [1900] 2 Ch. 332), affirmed.

This was an appeal from a decision of Byrne, J., reported ante, p. 21, [1900] 2 Ch. 332.

Henry Hayes, the younger, by his will dated the 29th of December, 1884, after appointing trustees and executors and giving pecuniary legacies to his wife and to his executors, proceeded as follows: "And subject to the payment of the said legacies I give all the residue of the property over which at the time of my death I shall have a disposing power unto my trustees upon trust in their discretion to sell and convert the same into money" and to invest the proceeds as therein mentioned. "And I empower my trustees to continue the existing investments of my estate, whether they shall be of the description hereinbefore authorized or not, as they in their absolute discretion shall think fit. And upon further trust, and I direct my trustees to pay the yearly income or produce arising from my trust estate unto my said dear wife for her life if she shall so long continue my widow for her own use absolutely. But in case my said wife shall marry again then I direct my trustees to pay to her out of the income of my trust estate in addition to the provision made for her by marriage settlement an annuity of £50 payable half-yearly instead of the whole of such income." And the testator directed his trustees to stand possessed of his trust estate subject to the trusts aforesaid upon trust for his children as thereinmentioned, with an ultimate gift over in default of children living at his decease or of children afterwards attaining twenty-one or marrying under that age.

The testator executed a codicil dated the 20th of March, 1893, whereby he made a change in the persons to be trustees and executors, and in all other respects confirmed his said will.

Henry Hayes, the elder, the father of Henry Hayes, the younger, made his will dated the 10th of June, 1893, and thereby empowered each child of his by his or her will or any codicil thereto to appoint in favour of his or her wife or husband the whole or any part of the yearly income of his or her share in his, the testator's, residuary estate for the life of such wife or husband or for any interest determinable on or before the death of such wife or husband. And by the same will Henry Hayes, the elder, directed that a sum of £4,000 thereby directed to be raised should be held upon the same or the like trusts, and with and subject to the same or the like powers and provisions as were thereinbefore declared with respect to the share of his son Henry Hayes, the younger, in the residue as if the same were there repeated.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Henry Hayes, the elder, died on the 19th of April, 1895, and Henry Hayes, the younger, died on the 8th of September, 1899.

Henry Hayes, the younger, left a widow and three children. He had no power of appointment exercisable in favour of his widow other than the power contained in the will of his father, and the question for determination was whether or not the power in question was well exercised by his will, which, together with the codicil, had been executed before the date of his father's will.

Byrne, J., held that the power was not well exercised. The widow appealed.

Upjohn, K.C., and A. Adams, for the widow.

H. Terrell, K.C., and D. D. Robertson, for the trustee.

Cur. adv. vult.

Aug. 1.—COLLINS, L.J., who delivered the judgment of the court, said: The question in this case is whether the will of Henry Hayes, the younger, operated as a good exercise of a special power of appointment conferred on him by the will of his father, Henry Hayes, the elder, whereby he was empowered to appoint a life interest in certain funds to his wife. Henry Hayes, the younger, made his will on the 29th of December, 1884. In March, 1893, he made a codicil confirming it, and he died in September, 1899. His father, Henry Hayes, the elder, made his will on the 10th of June, 1893, and he died in April, 1895. Thus at the date of the son's will, and of the codicil confirming it, the power created by his father's will had not come into existence. The material clauses in the two wills are fully set out in the judgment of Byrne, J., and we need not refer to them at length here. We think it is quite clear from the authorities cited by Byrne, J., that the case is not within section 27 nor section 24 of the Wills Act, and, indeed, Mr. Upjohn, for the appellant, did not contest this. The case, therefore, must be decided altogether apart from the special provisions of the Wills Act. There is, therefore, no legal presumption of intention. Nor is it, we think, necessary to decide whether it is possible as a matter of law to exercise by anticipation a special power which has not been created till after the alleged exercise. For even if it be possible to do so, as to which see per Lord Romilly, M.R., in Walker v. Armstrong, 4 W. R. 280, 21 Beav. 284, and Cowper v. Mantell, 4 W. R. 500, 22 Beav. 223, it could only be deemed to be exercised in this case if an intention to exercise it could be fairly collected from the words of the will of Henry Hayes, the younger, taken as a whole: see In re Milner, 47 W. R. 369, [1899] 1 Ch. 563. And in looking for such an intention in the case of a special power where the statute does not aid it, we necessarily, as it seems to us, start with a presumption against it when the will which is said to exercise the power has been made before the power came into existence. Further, in the case of a special power giving to the donee the right of determining in which of two or more directions a certain fund shall fall even though the power could not be said to be strictly fiduciary, there is, we think, at the lowest, a presumption that the donee could not have intended to exercise such a power at a time when he could not know the conditions or limitations imposed by the donor. It would require, therefore, as it seems to us, very clear indications in the language of the will to found an inference of intention to exercise a special power under such circumstances. In the will in question there was this clause: "And subject to the payment of the said legacies I give all the residue of the property over which at the time of my death I shall have a disposing power unto my trustees upon trust in their discretion to sell and convert the same into money." That is the only clause from which, if at all, an intention to execute the power was to be inferred. There was nothing else in the will which favoured the inference. On the contrary, there were difficulties to be got over in the language of the other parts of the will if they were to be held consistent with the alleged intention as pointed out in the judgment of Byrne, J.; and though, as is usual in these cases, many authorities were cited to show that these difficulties have been severally surmounted when construed in other contexts in other wills, the result cannot be put higher than as showing that they would not suffice to defeat an otherwise well-founded inference. Coming back, then, to the words which are said to refer to the power and to show an intention to exercise it, we think they cannot be fairly construed as disclosing an intention to exercise a non-existent special power. Taking the whole will together, we think the balance distinctly inclines against such an inference, and, at all events, there is no such clear preponderance in favour of the intention as to warrant us in differing from the opinion of Byrne, J. The appeal therefore fails.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Bell, Brodrick, & Gray, for Buchannan & Sons, Whitby.

From Q. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, M.R., and Vaughan Williams and Romer, L.JJ.) June 21.

DRIEFONTEIN CONSOLIDATED MINES (LIMITED) v. JANSON. (a.)

Insurance—Bullion—Seizure by government of assured's country—Subsequent declaration of war—Insurance of property of enemy.

Gold bullion, the property of a company registered and carrying on business in the Transvaal, was insured at Lloyd's during transit from the Transvaal to the United Kingdom by a policy which covered the usual risks of capture and detention. The gold, while in transit, was seized on the 2nd of October by the order of the Transvaal Government. At that date negotiations were proceeding between this country and the Transvaal which might result in war. On the 9th of October the Transvaal Government addressed an ultimatum to the British Government and declared war on the 11th of October. In an action on the policy, it having been agreed that the case was to be dealt with as if the war was over,

Held, by A. L. Smith, M.R., and Romer, L.J., Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting, that it was not contrary to public policy to allow the contract of insurance to be enforced, and that the underwriters were liable.

Judgment of Mathew, J. (48 W. R. 619, [1900] 2 Q. B. 339), affirmed.

Appeal, by the defendant from the judgment of Mathew, J., reported 48 W. R. 619, [1900] 2 Q. B. 339.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the judgment of A. L. Smith, M.R.

Joseph Walton, K.C., Lord Robert Cecil, K.C., and J. A. Hamilton, K.C., for the defendant.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

J. Lawson Walton, K.C., Carver, K.C., and Scrutton, K.C., for the plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 21.—A. L. SMITH, M.R., read the following judgment: There is no case to be found in the books which covers the present; and we have had judgments of different eminent judges given upon totally different facts from those of the present case cited to induce us, if possible, to hold that in this case it is against the interest of this country—that is, against what is called public policy—that the defendant should be held liable in this action to pay, under the policy of insurance he underwrote for the plaintiffs, the loss the plaintiffs have undoubtedly sustained. Notably amongst these judgments we have been referred to the judgments of Lord Alvanley in Furtado v. Rogers, 3 B. & P. 191, and of Lord Ellenborough in Gamba v. Le Mesurier, 4 East, 407, of the same learned judge in the same year in Kellner v. Le Mesurier, 4 East, 396, and of the same judge in Brandon v. Curling, 4 East, 410, as showing principles which should be applied when considering a question of public policy as applicable to a policy of insurance effected in this country on the goods of enemies. And in my opinion it is very important in this case, remembering what has been argued, to clearly ascertain and keep in mind what are its special facts in order that this court may itself determine, applying what principles are to be found in the judgments, whether it is against the interest of this country that the defendant upon the true facts of this case should be held liable to indemnify the plaintiffs for the loss of their gold which was underwritten by the defendant, and which was lost under the following circumstances: The plaintiffs are a limited company, which, for the convenience of carrying on its business was incorporated and registered in the Transvaal according to the laws of the South African Republic. Its shareholders are almost entirely resident outside that Republic and in Europe, and are not subjects of the Republic. The company has a London office and a London committee of management, and it carries on its business of extracting gold from its mines in South Africa and of sending such gold to this country and Europe for sale, and there dividing the profits among its shareholders. There is, in my judgment, no pretence for saying that the committee of management of this company or its shareholders, or the company itself as a legal entity, were de facto enemies of this country when the loss occurred. War had not then broken out; and, what is more, in my opinion they never were de facto enemies of this country. This company was in the habit before the 2nd of October, 1899, of getting the gold which it won and imported from South Africa covered by policies of insurance underwritten at Lloyd's, "at and from the mines in South Africa until its arrival in this country or Europe"; and, so far as concerns the policy now sued on, it is dated the 1st of August, 1899, and is to follow and succeed an insurance for £100,000 dated the 15th of May, 1899. When the policy was effected no question of war between this country and the Government of the South African Republic was in the contemplation of the parties; and the risks covered are declared in the usual form of a Lloyd's policy so far as regards capture—viz., "against enemies, pirates, rovers, arrests of all kings, princes, and people of what nation, condition, or quality soever." Whilst the gold covered by this policy was in transit to this country it was, upon the 2nd of October, 1899, seized and taken possession of by the Government of the South African Republic against the will of the plaintiffs when at a railway station in that country. There is no evidence of what has become of this gold excepting that it has been seized by the Transvaal Government and that it has never been returned to the plaintiffs; and to them from the 2nd of October, 1899, onwards it has ever been a total loss. It was strenuously urged in the court below, before Mathew, J., by Mr. Joseph Walton for the defendant, that war had broken out before this seizure; but Mathew, J., found, as was the fact, and it is now conceded on the part of the defendant, that war had not broken out upon the 2nd of October, for it did not break out until some time after—though it is true that the Blue Books, which, by agreement, constitute the sole evidence in this case, show that upon the 2nd of October, 1899, war was imminent. The well-known ultimatum by Mr. Reitz, the State Secretary, demanding an answer from this country on or before Wednesday, the 11th of October, 1899, at 5 p.m., was not sent until the 10th of October, 1899, and Mr. Chamberlain has certified, which certificate is to be taken as evidence, that war did not break out until 5 p.m. on the 12th of October. It is true that the plaintiff company is registered as a company in South Africa; but it is equally true that the beneficial ownership in the gold insured did not belong to persons subjects of the South African Government and resident therein; and what is more important still to my mind is that neither the persons to whom the insured gold really belonged nor the company as a legal entity were in truth and in fact enemies of this country when the loss occurred; and, indeed, in my opinion, in truth and in fact, neither these persons nor the company have ever at any time been de facto enemies of this country. The gold having been thus lost by being seized and captured by the South African Government, the plaintiffs now asked the defendant to make good this loss according to the terms of the policy underwritten by him; and what is his answer? It is said that it is against public policy—i.e., against the interest of this country, that he should do so; and thereupon this action is brought. Can any wilder suggestion be well made than that the repayment of this loss of their gold to the plaintiffs is in truth and in fact against the interests of this country? It certainly appears to me that this defence for not paying the loss incurred because of its being against public policy is, as a matter of fact, absurd, and I am not surprised that my brother Mathew has held that the defence was unfounded. The risks covered by the policy are against capture, in the words above stated—viz., against arrest of kings, princes, &c. It is true that, as Lord Ellenborough pointed out in Kellner v. Le Mesurier, these general words must be read with this exception and qualification annexed to them—viz., that they are limited to an insurance of goods other than goods belonging to enemies of this country, for otherwise they would cover enemies' property, the destruction of which it was the object of this country when at war to effect; and thus the destruction of this property by this country when at war would be rendered ineffectual, if a subject of this country could indemnify an enemy against the consequences of war with this country. In my judgment, enemy, as regards the application of this public policy, means a real de facto enemy, and not a mere possible technical enemy, as the company in this case. That the above indemnity of a real enemy de facto of this country would be against the interests of this country when at war, and therefore against public policy, I do not doubt. But where upon the facts of this case can it be found that the policy of insurance sued on covered a loss sustained by a real enemy of this country? As a matter of truth the suggested loss to a real enemy of this country is all fiction. Notwithstanding the learned and ingenious arguments of

Mr. Joseph Walton for the defendant, I am wholly unable to apply the suggested public policy to the facts of this case. It was urged that the gold taken by the Transvaal Government was taken for the purposes of war. Be it so, though there is no proof of this; and it was argued that, the gold being taken for war purposes, it was the same as if the gold had thus become a gun or other implement of war, which it was the object of this country to destroy. This, in my opinion, is another fiction and wild suggestion. If by this is meant that the gold became likened to a gun belonging to an enemy, in which I certainly do not agree, then I would point out that the defendant did not insure a gun, and how can public policy be involved? In my opinion the arguments addressed to us when applied to the facts of this case have no substance whatever in them. I should point out that the parties have agreed not to raise the defence, which would have been a good defence if the facts supported it, which they do not—viz., that the payment of the policy-moneys by the defendant to the plaintiffs would be trading with an alien enemy, and therefore unlawful. This is not insisted on, for by agreement between the parties the case is to be treated as if the war was over and no dilatory plea was to be pleaded. It was next argued that it could be extracted from the judgments cited that any contract which directly or indirectly assisted a foreign state for the purposes of war against this country, no matter how long before war actually broke out or not, was contrary to public policy. My first answer is that I do not find this laid down in any of the judgments cited. Secondly, it would, in my opinion, be contrary to the interests of this country to hold that such contracts, entered into during negotiations preceding a war or which might never result in war, were contracts against the interests of this country to enforce. And, lastly, but by no means least, the contract in this case was not entered into for any such purpose—i.e., for assisting a foreign state in making war against this country. There was one other public policy stated, which I think exists—viz., that it is against the interests of this country that a subject of this country when at war should relieve an enemy of this country against the calamities of war. Apart from the plaintiffs not being de facto enemies, which I have pointed out above, can any stretch of imagination lead anyone to suppose that, if the defendant pays to the plaintiffs the moneys secured by this policy, one single penny of those moneys would ever go towards relieving an enemy of this country against the calamities of the South African war? I certainly cannot do so. Here is another fiction. I agree with Mathew, J., and am of opinion that this appeal must be dismissed, and with costs. In my judgment the public policies which do exist have no application whatever to the real facts of this case, and it would be against all reason to hold that they had.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., read the following judgment.—This is an action brought against underwriters to recover in respect of a loss of gold on its transit from Johannesburg to the United Kingdom. The loss occurred in this way. The South African Republic, not being at war with us (but war being imminent), "commandeered" some gold, the property of the plaintiffs, a Transvaal corporation, that is, of a subject of the South African Republic, and did so with a view to the imminent war which might or might not break out with Great Britain. The general terms of the policy are sufficient to cover this loss; but it is said that the loss arose by a seizure against which a British subject could not consistently with his public duty insure in direct terms, and that, wherever the generality of the terms of assurance might in their actual application produce, if effect were given to them in their extended sense, a contravention of public interest, the insurance must be construed in such a manner as to exclude the particular event or peril which could not for the reason above mentioned be made the subject of a legal insurance in direct terms by a British underwriter. This is the law as laid down by Lord Ellenborough in the case of Kellner v. Le Mesurier, 4 East, 396; Gamba v. Le Mesurier, 4 East, 407; Brandon v. Curling, 4 East, 410; and also by Lord Alvanley in the case of Furtado v. Rogers, 3 B. & P. 191; and it follows, in my view, that in the present case one must take the particular loss and ask oneself whether the insurance in express terms against this loss would be inconsistent with the public duty of a British underwriter. If it would be, the contract would be illegal, and the policy must be construed as if it contained a proviso excluding from the policy such a loss. Lord Ellenborough, in Brandon v. Curling, 4 East (at p. 417), gives two instances of the proviso which must be read upon principles of public policy into the instrument of insurance to prevent its application to a particular risk, the insurance against which would be repugnant to the interests of the state. One instance is a proviso that the insurance shall not extend to cover any loss happening during the existence of hostilities between the respective countries of the assured and assurer. The other instance is a proviso that it shall not extend to cover any loss happening in the course of any contraband adventure in which the goods would become liable to seizure as forfeited by the laws of the country; and he says: "More instances might be put of similar implied exceptions which may arise out of the general terms of this contract." Lord Ellenborough does not say, and in my judgment does not intend to say, that the existence of a state of war between the respective countries of the assured and assurer is the only instance in which the relations of the two countries may be such that it would be injurious to the country of the assurer to allow a subject of that country to indemnify a subject of the other country against a particular loss. No doubt the application of the general rule that it is illegal for a British subject to enter into a contract of insurance inconsistent with his public duty takes place in most cases where the risk is a risk of capture in the course of war between the two countries by the warships of the country of the underwriter; but the principle that a British subject cannot make a contract of insurance contrary to his public duty is not limited to such cases; and Erle, C.J., in delivering the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber in Aubert v. Gray, 11 W. R. 27, 3 B. & S. 163, 169, seems to take the view that an insurance against a loss arising from an embargo placed by the government of the country of the assured on ships of subjects of that country with a view to expected hostilities with the country of the assurer would be contrary to public policy, and therefore an insurance which a British subject could not take upon himself. But, however this may be, the principle is clear that a British subject cannot make a valid insurance if such insurance is repugnant to the interests of his country; and the question which we have to answer in this case is whether it is against public policy that a British subject should contract to indemnify a subject of the South African Republic against this particular loss—that is to say, the loss arising from the fact that the South African Republic, not being at war with us, have commandeered some gold, the property of a Transvaal corporation, that is, of a subject of the South African Republic, and have done so with a view to the imminent war which may or may not break out with Great Britain. I cannot make any distinction between this Transvaal corporation, whoever the corporators may be, and any other subject of the South African Republic. Now, what was the character and purpose of the seizure of this gold? It was commandeered. It was not seized under the authority of the revenue law of the land; it was seized as a matter of military necessity. It was seized to provide the Government of the South African Republic with gold for the purpose of the threatened war with Great Britain in case it should break out. The gold might be applied in buying munitions of war, in paying soldiers, or in paying judges or civil servants, or in buying provisions; one cannot say. All one can say is that the evidence makes it clear that it was seized with a view to the threatened war with Great Britain. I do not think that the particular application, or intended application, of gold thus seized and for such a purpose is of any great importance. The material fact is that there was this extraordinary seizure of gold, a seizure which the Transvaal Government could only justify to themselves on the ground of the necessities of the impending war—that is, a seizure with a view to the threatened war with Great Britain. Is it illegal for a British subject to contract to insure Transvaal subjects against such a seizure? To hold that it is illegal is, it is true, to extend the principle established by Lord Ellenborough and Lord Alvanley to a case to which it has not up to this time been extended. But I take it that, if it is made out that it would be injurious generally to the state to allow such a contract by a British subject to be valid, the principle must be applied, although there may be no previous instance of its application to this particular case. I do not think that the question whether it is against the interests of the state to allow the assured to enforce against the underwriters the contract to idemnify the assured against this seizure depends on whether the seizure was an act of hostility in the sense of being an act of war. In my judgment it clearly was not an act of war, and could not be so treated by our government, and I entirely agree that the commandeering seizure by the Transvaal Government of this gold belonging to a Transvaal subject took place in the time of peace before the war had begun. I think that on the breaking out of the war the Transvaal corporation to whom the gold belonged became an "alien enemy"; and in my judgment the question whether it is against the interest of the state to allow this contract to be enforced against the underwriters depends not on whether the seizure was an act of war, but on whether it is against the interest of the state that a British subject should contract to indemnify an alien against a levy made on him by his government for the purpose of a war against this country. This question obviously cannot be determined by considering how matters stood immediately after the gold was seized. The right to raise this question as to whether the contract is void as being repugnant to the interests of the country of the underwriters is, of course, not affected by any agreement between the parties to treat, for the purpose of this action, the war as over. Such an agreement merely goes to the pleading of a temporary bar to the rule that an "alien enemy" cannot sue during the continuance of war. I am not sure that the court ought to give effect even to such an agreement, because the rule against an "alien enemy" coming into court is itself based on public policy; and I doubt if the parties to an action can waive such a rule if the fact of the plaintiff being an "alien enemy" appears upon the record. But I wish to point out that the suspension of the cause of action during the war does not prevent a contract entered into before the commencement of hostilities to indemnify an "alien enemy" from losses incurred during the war from being injurious to the interests of the country of the underwriter. This is pointed out by Lord Alvanley in Furtado v. Rogers, 3 B. & P., at p. 199. The question whether it is against the interest of the state that a British subject should contract to indemnify an alien against a levy made on him by his government for the purpose of an imminent war against this country does not, to my mind, in any way depend on the finality of the intention of the Transvaal Government to enter upon a state of war with this country. In my judgment the question whether the contract of indemnity is repugnant to the interests of the country depends upon the character of the act of seizure which brings about the loss. In this case the seizure by the Transvaal Government of the gold of its own subject, although an act of the government, was not, as I have already pointed out, an act done in accordance with the ordinary law of the country. It was not done in the due course of law; it was manifestly an extraordinary act done to meet an extraordinary occasion, when clearly war against England was immediately anticipated. It was not an act of war, nor an act of hostility in the sense of an act of war, but it was an act specifically done for the purpose of the prosecution of expected war against England. The question is whether this manifest character and purpose of the seizure made it repugnant to the interest of Great Britain that British subjects should contract to indemnify Transvaal subjects against a loss arising from such a seizure. I do not think that the legality of an undertaking to indemnify the subject of another country against the levy by his own government on his goods for the purpose of an expected war against the country of the underwriter can depend upon the accident of the expected war in fact occurring. Such an undertaking to be impugned as contrary to public policy must be an undertaking which, if expressed in terms in the policy, would be illegal; it must be illegal from the first or not at all. Take the case of an express contract to indemnify the assured in case of the capture of his ship by the warships of the country of the underwriter in the course of war between the respective countries. Such a contract is void ab initio, and the application of the assurance to such an event would ab initio be excepted from a policy couched in general terms wide enough to cover such a capture. The accident of no war occurring would merely prevent any claim arising, but would not affect the legality of the contract or its construction. The occurrence of war may suspend the remedy of the assured, but cannot alter his contractual rights. The only question to my mind is, Can a British subject legally contract to indemnify the subject of a foreign state against a loss by the forcible seizure by his government of his property for the purpose of an imminent war between Great Britain and that state? That depends on the question whether the performance of such a contract would be injurious to Great Britain. It is said to be injurious because it increases the resources of the foreign country for the expected war against Great Britain, both by relieving the foreign state from recouping their subject the value of the goods which it has seized for the purpose of war against us, and for which it has given a receipt, and by the relief such an indemnity will give the foreign subject against the burden of the war in the event of the expected war actually taking place. Is it not contrary to public policy that a British subject should in effect indemnify a foreign government against expenses incurred by them for the purpose of expected war against us, and give the foreign subject an indemnity which will greatly relieve him from the burden of the expected war in the event of its taking place? I think that such an indemnity, if carried into effect, would undoubtedly be injurious to Great Britain. The assured is complaining of a loss inflicted on him by the government of the state of which he is a citizen; and the benefit of the indemnity, by subrogation or otherwise, would in effect go to a government for whose acts there are no slight grounds for saying he is responsible, for it was decided in Conway v. Gray, 10 East, 536, that an assured was so identified with the government of his country that he could not recover under a clause in a policy in terms covering all arrests and detentions of princes if the arrest or detention was the act of the government of the assured's own country. Conway v. Gray and the other cases based upon the fiction that every subject consents to and adopts as his own every act of the government of his state were overruled by the Court of Exchequer Chamber in Aubert v. Gray, 3 B. & S. 163, 169, which was the case of an embargo put by the Spanish Government on a Spanish ship for the purpose of war with Morocco; but Erle, C.J., in delivering the considered judgment of the court, says, at p. 182: "This judgment recognizes a marked distinction between an embargo in a a time when there is peace between the countries of the insurer and the assured, laid on for a purpose wholly unconnected with hostility, either existing or expected, and an embargo connected with such hostility; therefore this judgment does not interfere with any of the decisions on points connected with war." This passage in the judgment of Erle, C.J., leaves it open to doubt whether he means that in the case of an embargo laid on for a purpose connected with hostility, either existing or expected, the theory of the adoption by the subject of the act of his government is still law, or whether he means that the theory of identity of the subject and government is wholly gone, and that the assured is unable to recover in cases where the arrest or detention is laid on for a purpose hostile to the country of the underwriter, because to allow the assured to recover in the British courts would be contrary to public policy. I am inclined to think he means the latter; but, whichever he means, he was dealing with the case of a seizure of the property of the assured by the government of his own country; and it seems to me that there is great difficulty in saying that the passage does not cover the present case, for it is impossible to say that the commandeering of this gold was wholly unconnected with hostility, either existing or expected. On the whole, I think it contrary to public policy that an underwriter should insure against such a risk, and that it is contrary to public policy that this action should be maintained.

ROMER, L.J., read the following judgment: In my opinion this appeal should be dismissed. I think that the rights of the parties to this action must be determined by considering how matters stood immediately after the gold was lost by the seizure of it by the Transvaal Government. In saying this, I of course recognize that subsequent events may be regarded if and so far as they tend to show what was the then position of affairs. At that time there was peace between the South African Republic and this kingdom. The act of seizure cannot, in my opinion, be treated as an act of hostility against this country, and certainly it was not so treated by our government. It cannot, in my opinion, be regarded as the commencement of the war which subsequently broke out. At that time, and for an appreciable time after, the plaintiff company was not an alien enemy, though for the purpose of my judgment I shall assume that the company is to be treated simply as an ordinary subject of the South African Republic. The war did not commence until about a week after the seizure, and meantime negotiations between the two governments continued. It is true that after war began, and so long as it continued, as between the two antagonistic countries, the plaintiff company, which might then be regarded as an alien enemy, would not have been entitled to enforce its right against the insurers under the contract of insurance, assuming the right to exist. During the war that right would have been suspended. On the termination of the war that right would revive. And it is common ground that we are to deal with this action on the footing that the war is ended; and, seeing that the Transvaal is now annexed, there is nothing to prevent the court's acting on this view. The question then is, Were the defendants, under the circumstances existing at the date of the seizure of the gold, freed from liability on their contract of insurance, although its terms were large enough to cover the plaintiff's loss? I think not. No authority has been cited which really supports the view urged on behalf of the defendants. I think that view ought not to be adopted by the court. The decided cases, no doubt, show that a contract of insurance, though its terms may be large enough, will be held not to cover a case which if it had formed the subject of a separate insurance would not be enforceable in our courts. If then this seizure of the gold had been insured against by a separate contract, would there be anything in such a contract to render it not enforceable in our courts? I think not. Such a contract would not fall within any of the classes of contract held by existing authorities to be not enforceable. It would not be a contract with an enemy of this country, not one to indemnify a person against a loss arising from an act of our government and intentionally inflicted upon him. It would not be a contract obviously antagonistic to the interests of this country, like one dealing with arms or munitions of war intended to be used against this country, nor one to indemnify a subject of a foreign government against an act committed by that government which was an act of hostility against this country, or which could be regarded as the commencement of war, or which would be like an embargo connected with hostility against this country perfected by the subsequent outbreak of war, such as is in my opinion referred to by the passage as to an embargo in the judgment of Erle, C.J., in Aubert v. Gray mentioned by my brother Vaughan Williams. It would, no doubt, be a contract to indemnify the subject of a foreign power, at the time of peace with us, against a pecuniary loss inflicted on him by his government with a view of strengthening the resources of that government at a time when relations between it and our government were strained. But if nothing more could be said against the contract, I think there would not be sufficient grounds in our courts refusing to enforce it. The strained relations might not lead to war, and in that case it is difficult to suppose that the contract would be treated as invalid because of the above-mentioned object of the foreign government at the time of seizure, or because the seizure may have been unjustifiable as between that government and its subject; and even if war ultimately ensued, that fact could not have a relation back so as to change the rights of the parties which were fixed as at the date of the loss suffered. It is, however, said on behalf of the defendants that the courts ought to refuse to enforce such a contract if at the time of the act of the foreign government that government had an intention of shortly afterwards making war upon this country.

For it is said that it would be contrary to the policy of this country in such a case to allow the contract to be enforced; and that, therefore, our courts ought, where such a case is said to arise, to try the question as to what was the intention of the foreign government at the time of its act. I do not think that this contention is well founded. I do not consider that it is in accordance with the interest or policy of our country or government or right in a case where an act of a foreign government not in itself hostile to this country has to be considered, and where our government has determined, notwithstanding the act, to treat the foreign government as still at peace with us and to continue negotiations with that government, that that government should be treated or regarded by our courts as having at the time of that act formed an intention irrevocably hostile to this country. I can imagine few things likely to embarrass our government more at a time when it is our policy to treat the foreign government as not being hostile than for our courts to be obliged (as they might be) to have to decide as a question of fact what was the "intention" at the time, or a short time previously, of the foreign government. The question of "intention" of a foreign government is one very difficult to inquire into or to determine. Especially would this be the case if no war ensued and the two countries became quite friendly. And yet if "intention" had to govern the rights of the parties to the contract our courts might be obliged to ascertain the intention at the time of the loss even if no war ensued. A subsequent change of intention on the part of the foreign government could not change the rights of the parties. And it is impossible to say that any "intention" is irrevocable and could not be changed. It appears to me that in such a case as we are considering these courts ought not to be asked to embark upon a consideration of the question as to the intention of a foreign government at a time when admittedly it is or was at peace with this country and is or was being treated by our government as not hostile. I think that the intention of a foreign government at any given time ought to be treated by these courts for such a purpose as that I am now considering as conclusively determined by the way in which our government chooses or has chosen to deal with that foreign government, and that where our government has not treated the foreign government as being hostile at a particular time our courts ought not to try and ascertain what was then in the minds of the king, president, or responsible ministers or authorities of the foreign government. In the result I think that it would not be contrary to the policy and interests of our government and country or proper for this court to hold that the contract of insurance in this case as applied to the loss in question was invalid or ought not to be enforced. For these reasons I think that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, William A. Crump & Son.

Solicitors for the defendant, Waltons, Johnson, Bubb, & Whatton.

From P. D. & Ad. Div. (Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., A. L. Smith, M.R., and Romer, L.J.) — May 20.

"THE DEVONIAN." (a.)

Ship—Collision—Vessel at anchor with tug attached —"Attached for the purpose of towing or manœuvring"—Failure of tug to exhibit towing lights—Liability of tow—Mersey Rules, 1900, art. 4 (a)—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 419, sub-section 4.

The plaintiffs' vessel, while lying at anchor in the River Mersey with a tug made fast alongside to keep her to her anchor till she could be towed into dock, was negligently run into by the defendants' vessel. The tug was carrying the ordinary lights for a steamship under way.

Held, that, under rule 4 of the Mersey Rules, the tug ought to have carried towing lights; that the infringement of the rule was one which might possibly have contributed to the collision; and that for this infringement the plaintiffs' vessel was to blame, both apart from statute and under section 419, sub-section 4, of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.

Appeal from the judgment of Sir Francis Jeune on the trial of an action of damage by collision.

The action was brought by the owners of the steamship Veritas, by the owners of her cargo, and by her master and crew, suing for their lost effects, to recover the damage sustained by them by reason of a collision which occurred about 10.45 p.m. on the 12th of October, 1900, in the River Mersey, off Salisbury Tower, between The Veritas and the defendants' steamship Devonian.

The Veritas, a Norwegian steamship of 485 tons gross register, with a crew of thirteen hands, was bound from Krageroe to Liverpool with a cargo of ice.

During the early morning of the 12th of October, when she was about thirty miles N.W. from the Bar lightship, her engines broke down and she was subsequently towed to an anchorage on the east side of the Mersey.

Her master made arrangements for towing her into dock when the tide made; and shortly before the collision she was lying at anchor in charge of a duly licensed Mersey pilot, waiting for water to get into dock.

The weather was clear and moonlight, there was a moderate breeze from the westward, and the tide was about half flood running about three knots.

The Veritas had a white light forward and a white light at the stern, properly placed according to the rules regulating the lights to be carried by vessels at anchor in the Mersey, and these lights were burning brightly.

The screw steam tug Prairie Cock had been engaged to stand by The Veritas and be ready to hold her up against the tide, and she was attached on the starboard side of The Veritas fore and aft.

The Prairie Cock was carrying a masthead light and side lights, the ordinary lights for a steamship under way.

In these circumstances The Veritas was run into by The Devonian, a steamship of 10,500 tons gross register, which was on a voyage from Boston to Liverpool with a crew of ninety-eight hands and a general cargo, passengers and cattle.

The Devonian struck the port bow of The Veritas near the stem, doing her so much damage that she began to sink.

The Prairie Cock and another tug which had come up took hold of The Veritas and attempted to tow her ashore, but she ultimately sank and was lost.

The plaintiffs alleged that the collision was brought about by the bad look-out kept by those on board The Devonian. The defendants charged The Veritas with allowing the tug Prairie Cock to exhibit misleading lights. The plaintiffs contended that even if wrong lights were exhibited by the tug the plaintiffs would not be liable for this.

By rule 4 of the Rules for Navigating the River

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Mersey, "A steam vessel when towing another vessel or vessels, or when attached for the purpose of towing or manœuvring such vessel or vessels, shall carry the compulsory lights prescribed by article 3 of the General Regulations—viz., two bright white lights and side lights.

At the trial the learned President, who was assisted by two of the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House, found that The Devonian was to blame for keeping a bad look-out, and that the tug was guilty of a breach of rule 4 of the Mersey Rules in not exhibiting towing lights, and he held that, the tug being under the control of The Veritas, the owners of The Veritas, were, by virtue of section 419, sub-section 4, of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, to blame for that breach. In the result therefore he held that both vessels were to blame.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Laing, K.C., and Stubbs (Robson, K.C., with them), for the plaintiffs.

Joseph Walton, K.C., Aspinall, K.C., and Glynn, for the defendants.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—This is an interesting and important case, and it is desirable to understand clearly the facts on which our decision has to be given. If it were the case of a tug merely hanging on to a vessel at anchor for the purpose of preventing herself from drifting away, and not at the time engaged, or not at the time in a condition to render help, then other considerations would arise. In all cases of collision statements found in a ship's log are accepted as contemporaneous statements of the nature of any manœuvre which the ship was engaged in carrying out, and this court has held that such a statement was fair evidence against the ship. In this case the log of The Veritas contained the following entry with regard to the tug: She was engaged to make fast alongside to manœuvre and keep us to our anchor until we could enter the dock." That statement was put to the captain when he was in the witness-box and he said that it was correct. The learned President found that the tug was fast fore and aft, and that she was in a position to put a strain on the rope at any time; and he came to the conclusion that she was there to assist, and to manœuvre, if necessary, the vessel to which she was fast. I concur in that view, and I am of opinion that the tug clearly came within the words of rule 4 of the Mersey Rules as being attached to The Veritas "for the purpose of towing or manœuvring" her, and that she was in such a position and engaged in such work as made it imperative on her to have two white lights at her masthead. Since The Fanny M. Carvill, 24 W. R. 62, 13 App. Cas. 455, n., was approved by the House of Lords in The Duke of Buccleugh, 40 W. R. 241, [1891] A. C. 310, it has been settled that the true construction of section 17 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1873 (now section 419, sub-section 4, of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894), is that the infringement must be one having some possible connection with the collision, and I agree with the President in thinking not only that there was a possibility, but more than a possibility, that the absence of a second white light might have contributed to the collision.

Then the question arises whether The Veritas is responsible for the absence of the second white light, and, further, whether she is responsible so as to come within section 419, sub-section 4, of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. Apart from the statute there seems to be no real difficulty as to the law. Ever since the case of The Cleadon, 14 Moo. P. C. 97, 9 W. R. H. L. Dig. 15, it has been held that, where one ship is in tow of another, the tow and the tug may for some purposes be considered as one ship, the motive power being in the tug and the governing power in the ship that is being towed. In the case of The Niobe, [1891] A. C. 401, 40 W. R. Dig. 101, Lord Selborne said: "Where a ship in tow has control over and is answerable for the navigation of the tug, the two vessels—each physically attached to the other for a common operation, that of the voyage of the ship in tow, for which the tug supplies the motive power—have been said by high authority to be for many purposes properly regarded as one vessel." No doubt there have been cases, such as The Stormcock, 5 Asp. M. L. C. 470, 34 W. R. Dig. 56, in which that rule has not been applied, but in my opinion, where two vessels are so attached and under such government or control that they move practically as one vessel, then the tow is responsible for any infringement of any rule of navigation on the part of the tug. And I think that in this case the tug and tow were so attached and were under such control as to be regarded as one vessel. The point remains whether the case comes with section 419 (4) of the Merchant Shipping Act, which enacts that "Where in a case of collision it is proved to the court before whom the case is tried that any of the collision regulations have been infringed, the ship by which the regulation has been infringed shall be deemed to be in fault, unless it is shown to the satisfaction of the court that the circumstances of the case made departure from the regulation necessary." It was argued on behalf of the appellants that "the ship" in that section meant that ship on board which in a physical sense the infringement occurred. I think that is too narrow a construction of the section. In my opinion the ship by which the regulation was infringed was the ship on which was the authority to see that proper lights were exhibited on the tug. I therefore think the appeal should be dismissed.

A. L. SMITH, M.R., and ROMER, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Thomas Cooper & Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co., for Hill, Dickinson, & Co., Liverpool.

High Court of Justice.

K. B. Div.
(Bruce and Phillimore, JJ.) June 4.

STODDART v. THE ARGUS PRINTING CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Gaming — Betting — Advertisement of house kept for purpose of receiving money in connection with betting —Betting House Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), s. 7 —Betting House Act, 1874 (37 Vict. c. 15), s. 3.

By an agreement entered into by the plaintiff and the defendants the defendants agreed to print and publish a certain paper on the plaintiff's behalf every week on certain terms and conditions, one of which was that they were only to be called on to fulfil the contract if the said newspaper contained matter which was neither libellous nor illegal. The plaintiff called upon the defendants to print and publish for circulation in England with the said newspaper and as part of it an advertisement relating to a "coupon competition"—that is to say, of a promise by the plaintiff to pay a sum of money to such persons as should correctly guess the result of a certain horse-race then shortly about to be run, and should write their guesses upon certain forms, called "coupons," which were issued with each number of the newspaper, and should return the coupons so filled up to the plaintiff's office in Holland, together with the sum of one penny in respect of each guess made. The defendants refused to print the advertisement, contending that the publication was illegal and constituted an offence against the Betting Acts, 1853 (section 7) and 1874 (section 3). The plaintiff thereupon brought an action to recover damages from the defendants for breach of contract.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that the publication of the said advertisement did not constitute an offence under section 7 of the Betting House Act, 1853, or section 3 of the Betting House Act, 1874, as the advertisement did not relate to a house to which persons physically resorted for the purpose of betting.

This was an argument of points of law arising on the pleadings.

By his statement of claim the plaintiff, Joseph Stoddart, said that:

"1. The plaintiff is and has since the beginning of the year 1890 been carrying on business as the proprietor of a newspaper called Sporting Luck.

"2. By an agreement dated the 20th of March, 1890, the defendants agreed with the plaintiff to print and publish Sporting Luck on his behalf every week on terms and conditions in the said agreement more particularly specified.

"3. The defendants have recently, while the said agreement was still in force, without any justification and in violation of their said agreement, refused to print and publish Sporting Luck for the plaintiff, whereby the plaintiff has suffered considerable damage."

By their amended defence the defendants said that:

"1. The defendants always have been and still are ready and willing to fulfil their said contract so far as they legally may and to print the said newspaper. It was a condition of the said agreement that the defendants were only to be called upon to fulfil it if the said newspaper contained matter which was neither libellous nor illegal.

"2. The defendants only refused to print the said newspaper because the plaintiff called upon them, under the contract which is above referred to, to print and publish for circulation in England with the said newspaper and as a part of it an advertisement headed 'International Supplement' relating to a horse-racing competition, the publication of which, according to the defendants' contention, constitutes an offence against the Betting House Acts of 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, s. 7) and 1874 (37 Vict. c. 15, s. 3).

"Particulars: (1) On the 30th of October, 1900, one Ada Jane Stoddart was tried and convicted at the Central Criminal Court for that she, being the occupier of an office at 10, Red Lion-court, in the City of London, had unlawfully opened, kept, or used that office for the purpose of money being there received by her as the consideration of undertaking to pay thereafter money on events relating to horse-racing in contravention of section 1 of the Betting House Act of 1853.

"(2) The learned judge, at the trial of the said Ada Jane Stoddart, reserved the point and stated a case for the consideration of the Court of Crown Cases Reserved as to whether the then defendant had in law been guilty of any offence against the said section of the said Act, and on the 17th of November, 1900, the conviction of the said Ada Jane Stoddart was unanimously affirmed by the Court for the Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved. The facts that were proved against the said Ada Jane Stoddart and upon which her conviction was founded were that she was the occupier of an office at 10, Red Lion-court, in the City of London, and the registered proprietor of a newspaper published weekly at that office. Each number of the paper contained a notice of what was called a 'coupon competition'—that is to say, of a promise by the then defendant to pay a certain specified sum of money to such persons as should correctly guess the result of a certain horse-race then shortly about to be run, and should write their guesses upon certain forms called 'coupons,' which were issued with each number of the newspaper, and should return the coupons so filled up to the then defendant's office, together with the sum of one penny in respect of each guess made. A large number of persons every week sent in to the said office coupons filled up as aforesaid, accompanied by remittances of money.

"(3) As between the date of the said decision of the Court of Crown Cases Reserved affirming the said conviction and the date of the issue of the writ in this action, the plaintiff instructed the defendants under the agreement referred to in paragraph 1 in this defence to publish the advertisement called 'An International Supplement,' containing a number of coupons as part of the newspaper called Sporting Luck, in which was advertised to the English public a system of competition identical in all respects with that in regard to which the said Ada Jane Stoddart had been convicted, except that the competitors were no longer to send their moneys or deposits to No. 10, Red Lion-court, in the City of London, or to any place of receipt or deposit within the jurisdiction of the English courts, but were to send all moneys to, and it was expressly announced that in the future all moneys would only be received at an office which had been opened by the plaintiff for the purpose of receiving them, at Middleburg, in the kingdom of Holland.

"(4) The defendants refused to print the said advertisement, contending that as the said office in Middleburg, in Holland, had been opened by the plaintiff for a purpose which would infringe section 1 of the Betting House Act of 1853, and section 3 of the Betting House Act, 1874, if it had been so opened in this country, the publication of an advertisement in relation to such an office was illegal under the specified sections of the two several Acts of Parliament which are above set forth, which refusal constitutes the breach alleged in the statement of claim and sued upon in this action."

Lord Coleridge, K.C., and C. H. Stutfield (Bovill Smith with them), for the plaintiff.—The question here is whether the advertisement was or was not an infringement of section 1 of the Betting Act, 1853. The only advertisement which is illegal is that of a house. Section 1 deals with two offences—firstly, keeping a house for betting with persons resorting thereto; secondly, keeping a house for the purpose of receiving there any money or valuable thing as the consideration for any assurance to pay any money on any contingency relating to any horse or other race. Section 7 refers back to section 1, and prohibits the advertising as stated in section 7 of any house as described in section 1, it enlarges the scope of section 1. Section 3 of the Betting Act, 1874, also refers back to section 1 of the Act of 1853, and merely prohibits the doing of something in a house as defined in section 1 of the Act of 1853: Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co., 47 W. R. 585, [1899] A. C. 143. The object of the Act of 1853 is to suppress betting-houses, and therefore it is the locality, not the betting, that is prohibited, and that locality must be within the jurisdiction—that is, it must be a betting-house within this country: Cox v. Andrews, 12 Q. B. D. 126. No bet is illegal except in respect of its being made in a house in England. "Publishing" a betting-house in Holland is not publishing a betting-house within section 1 of the Act of 1853, and, therefore, it is not punishable under that Act. It would be contrary to international comity to condemn a house in Holland as a common gaming-house within an English Act of Parliament. That would be the result if sections 11 and 12 of the Act of 1853 applied to houses abroad: Macnee v. Persian Investment Corporation, 38 W. R. 596, 44 Ch. D. 306. In the present case there is no betting with persons resorting to the house. In Reg. v. Brown, 43 W. R. 222, [1895] 1 Q. B. 119, it was held that there must be a physical resorting to bring the case within section 1. Section 7 of the Act does not cover this case. The mere advertising of an illegal house is not sufficient; it must be an advertisement of an illegal house to which persons resort for the purpose of betting. A house with which business is done by means of letter, telegram, or telephone is not a house within section 1.

C. W. Mathews, for the defendants.—Section 7 is co-extensive with section 1, and makes it an offence to publish an advertisement of any betting-house and does not place any limit as to where the house is situated. In Reg. v. Brown Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., says, referring to section 1, "The real gist of the offence created by the section is the opening and keeping of a house for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto, and the offence could be proved although no person even resorted there." Reg. v. Stoddart, ante, p. 173, [1891] 1 K. B. 177.

PHILLIMORE, J.—My learned brother has asked me to deliver the first judgment. In this case we are of opinion that there should be judgment for the plaintiff, and possibly on a somewhat narrow ground. Section 1 of the Betting Act of 1853 deals with two different offences—first, that of keeping a betting-house to which persons resort for the purpose of betting. The decision of the Court of Crown Cases Reserved in Reg. v. Brown is binding on us, and says that the resort to the house must be physical. Therefore the first part of section 1 of the Act of 1853 makes it illegal to keep a house to which persons physically resort for the purpose of betting.

That is not the class of offence which it is suggested the plaintiff Stoddart may be committing by what he is now doing. The second half of the section deals with the case of a person who keeps an office at which money is received (whether physically brought or sent by post or messenger) by the owner, occupier, or keeper of the office as or for the consideration for any . . . promise, or agreement, . . . to pay or give thereafter any money or valuable thing on any event or contingency of or relating to any horse-race," or to certain other events. Under that half of the section Mrs. Stoddart was convicted, and the conviction was upheld by the Court for the Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved in Reg. v. Stoddart. The circumstances under which she was convicted are precisely the same as those under which the business is being carried on by the plaintiff, and which the defendants are asked to advertise, except that the plaintiff has his house of business outside the jurisdiction—namely, in the kingdom of Holland, and not within the United Kingdom. It has been argued that the place where the plaintiff carries on his business makes all the difference; but, speaking for myself, I do not think it is necessary to consider that point. If this business had been that which Mrs. Stoddart carried on, and for which she was convicted, I still fail to see that advertising that business would, in the language of the amended defence, have constituted an offence against the Betting Acts, 1853 and 1874. The sections with regard to advertising are section 7 of the Act of 1853 and section 3 of the Act of 1874.

Upon careful analysis of section 7 of the Act of 1853 it will be seen that it is directed against advertisements of houses kept for the first of the two purposes mentioned in section 1, and not against houses kept only for the purpose of the second offence under section 1. The point was left to a certain extent open in Reg. v. Stoddart, whether the particular form of so-called competition for encouraging which Mrs. Stoddart was convicted was betting or not. For myself I think it was betting for the reasons given in that case by my brother Wills; but it is not necessary to decide that point at all, because the offence under the first half of section 1 is not that of keeping the house open for the purpose of betting simpliciter, but of keeping the house open for the purpose of betting by persons resorting thereto, which under the authority of Reg. v. Brown means physically resorting. So that, whether this form of competition be or be not a bet, it is not a bet made by persons resorting to a place for the purpose of betting; and therefore section 7 of the Act of 1853, which only relates to advertisements of such house, does not make this particular publication an offence. At one time during the argument we thought that section 3 of the Act of 1874 put further difficulty in the way of the plaintiff, but when it is analyzed it appears clear that it does not do so. Sub-section 1 relates entirely to information or advice. It makes it an offence to advertise that a person will give information or advice with respect to any such bet or wager, but that is not this case. I agree with the contention of Mr. Stutfield that in sub-section 2 the words "with respect to any such event or contingency" are all subordinate to the words "information or advice." My brother Bruce has pointed out to me that in sub-section 1 the words seem to show that that must be so, awkwardly as the grammatical meaning is expressed. Therefore sub-section 2 only deals with advertisements which point out persons or places where information or advice can be obtained, which again is not this case. Sub-section 3 deals with advertisements inviting any persons to make any such bet or wager, or take a share in or in connection with any such bet or wager. One has to consider what is "such bet or wager." It is such bet or wager, as sub-section 1 shows, as is mentioned in the principal Act. The only bets or wagers which are mentioned in the principal Act are bets or wagers made by persons resorting to a house for the purpose of betting or, according to the construction put upon those words, physically resorting to a house for the purpose of betting. Therefore there is nothing in section 3 of the Act of 1874 which makes the conduct of these defendants illegal. They are not offending because they are publishing this advertisement, and therefore they have no right to break their contract, and there must be judgment for the plaintiff. In saying this, however, we pass no opinion upon the question whether the plaintiff, Joseph Stoddart, is carrying on a legal business. From what passed on a previous occasion, when the court was differently constituted, I should conjecture that it was hoped by this proceeding to obtain a decision from this court which might have some bearing on certain summonses now pending before the alderman against the plaintiff Joseph Stoddart in respect of the carrying on of his business. If that be so, nothing that we now say will assist or injure the plaintiff at the hearing of those summonses. Speaking for myself, and I believe speaking with the consent of my brother, I in no way consider whether or not Joseph Stoddart, by having moved the business from London to Middleburg, has or has not escaped from the decision of the Court for the Consideration of Crown Crown Cases Reserved in Reg. v. Stoddart. Assuming that he is doing exactly the same thing for which Mrs. Stoddart was convicted, I still say that neither section 7 of the Act of 1853 nor section 3 of the Act of 1874 makes it illegal for the defendants to print and publish this particular advertisement.

BRUCE, J.—I am of the same opinion and for the same reasons.

Judgment for plaintiff.

Solicitors for plaintiff, Le Brasseur & Oakley.

Solictors for defendants, Lewis & Lewis.

K. B. Div.
(Ridley and Phillimore, JJ.) } May 21.

In re AN ARBITRATION BETWEEN MARGETTS AND THE OCEAN ACCIDENT AND GUARANTEE CORPORATION (LIMITED). (a.)

Insurance (Marine)—"Actual collision with another vessel"—Fouling anchor in bed of river attached to ship—Liability of insurance corporation under policy.

An insurance of a tug against damage arising from "actual collision with another vessel, wharf, mooring, pier, or similar structure,"

Held to cover damage caused to the tug by striking upon an anchor in the bed of the river attached by a length of chain to a vessel.

Special case stated by arbitrator on a question of law.

The question arose under a policy of insurance which provided inter alia that the corporation would pay to Messrs. P. Margetts, the assured, the amount of any damage which should be caused to any tugs belonging to the assured, and covered by the policy, owing to "actual collision between any such tug and any vessel wharf, mooring, pier, or similar structure."

On the 13th of August, 1900, the Ada, one of the tugs covered by the policy, while coming up the Thames, struck upon an anchor in the bed of the river and sunk. The anchor was attached by about 20 or 30 fathoms of chain to a schooner lying on the north side of the river, with her afterpart on the mud, but attached to the anchor at her bows.

The question was whether upon the facts stated the corporation were liable to pay to the assured the amount of the damages to the said tug.

A. E. Nelson, for the assured, contended that an anchor being a necessary part of a ship the accident to The Ada arose out of a collision with a ship or her moorings within the meaning of the policy, and cited The Warwick, 15 P. Div. 189, 6 Asp. Mar. L. C. 545, 39 W. R. Dig. 213; European and Australian Royal Mail Co. (Limited) v. Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Co., 14 W. R. 843, 2 Mar. Law. Cas. 351; and The Niobe, [1891] A. C. 401, 40 W. R. Dig. 101.

G. Spencer Bower, for the corporation.—There was here no collision "with a vessel" within the meaning of that risk as covered by the policy: Hoskins v. Pickersgill, 3 Doug. 222.

THE COURT (RIDLEY and PHILLIMORE, JJ.) answered the question in the affirmative. In the case of The Niobe the collision of the tug towing the vessel was held to be a collision of The Niobe with another vessel. That was an a fortiori case, and on that authority the corporation were liable to the assured.

Solicitors for Messrs. P. Margetts, Lowless & Co.

Solicitors for the Ocean Assurance Corporation, William Hurd & Sons.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(1903) 2 KB. 623.

K. B. Div.
(Ridley, J.) } May 18.

PERRY v. CLEMENTS. (a.)

Master and servant—Negligence—Personal injury—Accident caused by defendant's servant — Action against defendant—Notice of accident previously given by plaintiff to his employers—Wages paid as before—No further proceedings taken against employers under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, ss. 2, 6—Right of plaintiff to sue defendant.

The plaintiff, a sawyer, who worked for Messrs. Jones Brothers, met with an accident caused by the negligence of a servant in the employment of the defendant.

Having given notice of the accident to his employers, Messrs. Jones Brothers, they continued to pay the plaintiff the same wages as before, and no further steps were taken by him to obtain compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

In a common law action against the defendant for damages,

Held, the action was maintainable, because a mere notice of an accident given under section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, to the employer was not a "proceeding" against the employer within the meaning of section 6, and did not, therefore, preclude the plaintiff from bringing an action against a person, other than his employer, whose negligence caused the injury.

Further consideration.

This case was tried before Ridley, J., and a common jury, and they found a verdict for the plaintiff with £225 damages.

The plaintiff was in the employment of Messrs. Jones Brothers, of Oakwood-court, Addison-road.

The defendant was a contractor carrying on business at Hammersmith.

On the 12th of March, while the plaintiff was having his dinner at Messrs. Jones's works, a horse and cart belonging to the defendant was backed against some stone near where the plaintiff was sitting and a portion of the stone fell on him causing injuries of a serious character.

After the accident, on the 17th of May, a notice in accordance with section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, was served on Messrs. Jones Brothers, notifying that Perry had been injured on the 12th of March.

No further steps under that Act were, however, taken or claim for compensation made as they voluntarily continued paying the plaintiff his wages.

The plaintiff meanwhile commenced this action against the defendant for damages, and the defendant pleaded that the action was not maintainable on the ground that the plaintiff had taken "proceedings" against his employers for compensation under the Act of 1897, and was therefore by section 6 of the Act estopped from recovering damages from the defendant in respect of the same injury.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Montague Shearman, for the defendant.—Section 6 of the Act of 1897 enacts that where the injury for which compensation is payable under the Act is caused under circumstances creating a legal liability in some person other than the employer—which is the case here—to pay damages in respect thereof, the workman has an option as to which of the two parties he will sue. He may proceed either at law against the stranger to recover damages at common law, or against his employer for compensation under the Act. He may not go against both, and if compensation be paid under the Act, the employer is to be indemnified by the stranger. The document notifying the injury was served on the plaintiff's employers Messrs. Jones Brothers. That was a notice and a claim for compensation as well: Powell v. Main Colliery Co., 48 W. R. 534, [1900] 2 Q. B. 145, ante, p. 49, [1900] A. C. 366. Messrs Jones Brothers admitted the claim and have paid the plaintiff the same wages as before the accident. He cannot, therefore, recover compensation from the defendant as well, and the defendant is entitled to judgment in spite of the finding on the jury.

Witt, K.C., and Alen Macpherson, for the plaintiff.—The mere notice of an accident not followed by a claim for compensation is not of itself a proceeding under the Act of 1897. The plaintiff has not recovered "compensation" at all. His wages merely represent what but for the accident he would have earned and nothing more. It is absurd that a man should be deprived of his right to recover damages against a stranger merely because he gave formal notice that he had met with an accident to his employer.

RIDLEY, J.—I have come to the conclusion that in this case judgment should be entered for the plaintiff in accordance with the finding of the jury. And for these reasons. I do not think that the formal notice of injury served on the plaintiff's employers, Messrs. Jones Brothers, on the 17th of May can be treated as a claim within section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. That section enacts that proceedings to recover compensation must be given within six months from the occurrence of the accident, otherwise the claim cannot be maintained. Looking at the Act it seems to me clear, and it has so been decided, that the claim for compensation is the initiatory proceeding and not the notice of injury. In this case all that was done was to serve on Messrs. Jones Brothers a simple notice informing them that Perry had been injured while in their employment. There is no intimation in that notice that Perry intended to claim compensation from them. The notice and the claim are distinct, and must be treated as such whether they appear on two separate documents or are contained in one and the same document. One had to be served as soon as practicable, the other must be served within six months of the accident. In this case all that was done was to give notice. In the absence, therefore, of a claim for compensation the mere notice under the Act of 1897 was insufficient to estop the plaintiff from recovering the damages awarded him by the jury, and judgment for him for that sum must accordingly be entered.

Solicitors, Alexander Pope; Leighton & Savory.

K. B. Div.
(Kennedy and Phillimore, JJ.) May 15.

MAPLE & CO. (LIMITED) v. WILSON (SURVEYOR OF TAXES). (a.)

Inland Revenue—Inhabited House Duty—Blocks of shops—Buildings used partly as shops and partly for residence of staff—House Tax Acts, 1808 (48 Geo. 3, c. 55), Schedule B, r. 3, and 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 36).

The appellants appealed against an assessment made upon certain blocks of buildings used by them partly as shops and partly for the residence for their staff.

Held, dismissing the appeal, that the blocks of premises were assessable to the Inhabited House Duty as a whole, because the business part of the premises communicated with the residential part, and the fact that the communication was closed at night by iron doors made no difference.

Case stated by Commissioners of Income Tax for the Holborn Division of the County of Middlesex upon confirming an assessment to inhabited house duty for the years 1897-8 and 1898-9 of £11,069 at 6d. in the £ which had been made upon a portion of the premises in occupation of the appellants, Maple & Co. (Limited), fronting Tottenham Court-road, and extending down Beaumont-place and Grafton-street respectively.

The assessment was made under the House Tax Acts, 1808 and 1851. Schedule B, r. 3, of the former Act provides that shops and warehouses which are attached to a dwelling-house and being in communication with it shall, in regard to the charge of duty, be valued together with the dwelling-house and household and other offices.

By the Act of 1851 warehouses which are distinct and separate buildings, and which are used solely for the purpose of lodging goods and merchandise, or for carrying on some manufacture, notwithstanding that the premises might be adjoining or in communication with a dwelling-house or shop, are exempted from the operation of the earlier Act.

The premises in question were divided into several blocks, each block having its own party walls and communicating with the other blocks by means of double iron doors open during the day but closed at night for protection against fire. Most of the blocks were used solely as shops and show-rooms, but two of them were used partly for business purposes and partly for residential purposes. In these the basement, ground-floor and first floor were used as shops and show-rooms, and on the second floor there were dining and recreation rooms for the assistants, and on the third, fourth, fifth and sixth floors were kitchens and offices and bedrooms, dormitories, and sitting-rooms for forty clerks, house servants, waiters, and the like. The lower floors communicated direct with the other blocks by means of iron doors separated by lobbies. The upper or residential floors communicated with the lower floors by means of two staircases, one of which communicated with all the floors. The other staircase was situated between the blocks which were partly residential and the blocks which were used solely for business purposes, and was bounded by party walls. On the second floor landing of this staircase there was an iron door leading to the residential blocks, and also an iron door leading to the adjoining non-residential block. On the upper landing there were doors communicating with the residential premises, but none which communicated with the business premises.

Sir Edward Clarke, K.C., and Ernest Pollock, for the appellants.—The residential portions of the premises being distinct from the business portions of the establishment, the assessment to inhabited house duty should be restricted to such parts of the premises as are used for the purposes of a dwelling-house, there being no communication within the meaning of rule 3 of Schedule B of the Act of 1808 between the residential portion and the business portion of the premises. At any rate the assessment should be limited to the two blocks which are used in part for residential purposes.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Sir E. H. Carson, S.G., and S. A. T. Rowlatt.—It is impossible to draw a line for the purpose of imposing this tax between those parts of the premises which the appellants contend ought not to be assessed thereto and the rest of the building. Nor are the business parts of the premises separate warehouses, and therefore they are not exempted by the proviso at the end of rule 3.

KENNEDY, J.—In my judgment this appeal fails because on the evidence before us it seems clear that the business portion of the premises communicate in fact with the residential portion. The fact that for protection from fire, and for the proper conducting of the establishment, there are rules and regulations in pursuance of which the means of communication open in the daytime are closed at night is immaterial. The question of whether these premises as a whole ought to be assessed to the tax depends not on how the premises are in fact used, but whether in fact communication exists between the residential portion and the business part of them, so that they can be said to be separate buildings to the dwelling-house. In my judgment the whole of the buildings are assessable under rule 3, and no exemption can be claimed under the latter part of the rule, because it is clear the premises are not "such warehouses as are distinct and separate buildings."

PHILLIMORE, J., gave judgment to the same effect.

Solicitors, Peake, Bird, Collins, & Co.; The Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

C. C. R.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Mathew, Wills, Grantham, and Bigham, JJ.) May 18.

THE KING v. TAYLOR. (a.)

Criminal law — False pretences — Friendly society— Member in arrears with subscription—Arrears paid up by prisoner—He places member's name on sick list —Applies sick pay to satisfy debt—Person to whom false pretence made.

It was the duty of the prisoner, who was an officer of a society, to return the names of members entitled to sick pay. The prisoner wrongfully entered on the list a member's name, which he gave to the secretary, and in due course received an order from the treasurer to pay the member the sum named. When the prisoner received the money he applied it in payment of a debt due from the member to himself. Upon an indictment charging the prisoner with obtaining the money from the treasurer by falsely pretending to him that the member was entitled to sick pay,

Held, dismissing the appeal, that there was evidence upon which the jury might find that the false pretence was made by the prisoner to the treasurer.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Case stated by the chairman of the Worcestershire Court of Quarter Sessions, upon the trial of an indictment against Herbert Taylor, the present appellant, heard at the April Quarter Sessions.

The indictment charged the appellant with obtaining two sums of £1 each from William Martin, by falsely pretending to him, Martin, that one, Arthur Bennett, was entitled to that sum for sick pay.

Taylor was an officer of the court of the United Friendship Branch of the Broomgrove District of the Ancient Order of Foresters' Friendly Society, and it was his duty, on the application of any member for sick pay, to visit that member and satisfy himself that the member was entitled to sick pay, and then to take the proper steps to obtain it for him.

Taylor had been paying the arrears of a member of the society, named Bennett, until the latter owed him £3. Considerable correspondence had taken place between Taylor and Bennett's wife about this debt, and Mrs. Bennett wrote on one occasion that her husband was suffering from a bad cold. She did not, however, nor did any one else, make any application for sick pay for him, but the appellant took the necessary steps to place Bennett's name on the list of persons entitled to sick pay, and received in due course, from the treasurer, on two occasions, £1 for twelve days of such pay. He did not, however, pay the money over to Bennett or Bennett's wife, but applied the money in part satisfaction of the sum which Bennett owed him.

The list of members entitled to sick pay was handed in to the secretary, who then made out documents in the form of cheques addressed to the treasurer of the court, authorizing him to pay to the person named the amount due to him for sick pay. Taylor, in the ordinary and proper course of business, on receipt of these cheques, took them to the treasurer, who thereupon paid to Taylor the money mentioned in them for him to pay over to the sick member. The cheques were the treasurer's authority for making the payments, and not the list.

The chairman directed the jury that it was immaterial that personally Taylor made no representation to the secretary or treasurer, but that the fact of his falsely pretending or representing that Bennett was entitled to sick pay when he was not (if the jury so found), and by this pretence or representation getting his name inserted in the list and thereby obtaining the money, would be sufficient in law to sustain the indictment. The jury brought in a verdict of "Guilty." The question for the opinion of the court was whether the false representation by Taylor to the secretary, upon which an order for payment was made out to the treasurer, was in law a false pretence by Taylor to the treasurer.

Daldy, for the appellant.—The conviction is wrong, because there is no evidence of a false pretence made to the treasurer. There is nothing to connect the false statement made by Taylor in the list he supplied to the secretary with obtaining by false pretences money from the treasurer. He cited, Reg. v. Rouse, 4 Cox. Cr. Cas. 7.

Stamford Hutton, for the prosecution, was not heard.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—The question is one of fact for the jury. The course of business was that Taylor gave a list of the names of persons entitled to receive sick pay to the secretary, who prepared from the list cheques which were handed by Taylor to the treasurer. The treasurer thereupon then paid the amounts mentioned in the cheques to Taylor. Taylor made an untrue representation through the secretary which enabled him to obtain two sums of money from the treasurer. He made the representation for the express purpose of obtaining the money from the treasurer. The jury found that that representation was made to the treasurer, and we cannot say that there was no evidence on which they could so find.

The other members of the court (MATHEW, WILLS, GRANTHAM, and BIGHAM, J.J.) concurred.

Solicitors: Wainwright & Co., for J. W. Clulow, Brierly Hill, Staffs; Robbins, Billing, & Co., for Wm. Waldron, Brierly Hill, Staffs.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Divorce. } May 6, 9.

WAUDBY v. WAUDBY AND BOWLAND. (a.)

Divorce—Practice—Wife's costs—Jury discharged without giving a verdict.

It is the usual practice of the Divorce Court to allow to an unsuccessful wife her costs up to the limit of the amount paid into court or secured, with the addition of such sum as may be added de die in diem at the trial; but if a wife brings her case to a hearing without having previously taxed them against her husband, and is unsuccessful, the husband is not liable.

This was a husband's petition for a dissolution of his marriage.

The questions left to the jury were:

(1) Has the petitioner been guilty of cruelty and adultery (which at the trial was not denied)? Answer, Yes.

(2) Has the respondent condoned the petitioner's cruelty and adultery? Answer, Disagreed.

(3) Has the respondent been guilty of adultery with the co-respondent? Answer, Disagreed.

JEUNE, P., declined to allow these findings to be recorded as a verdict and discharged the jury.

Barnard applied for the wife's full costs. He contended that if the case was set down again for trial the wife would be entitled to bring in all her costs up to the setting down of the case the second time and to have her bill taxed, including the costs of the late trial. If she were to elect to change her solicitors the court would be powerless to compel them to hand over her papers to other solicitors for the purposes of a new trial. Under rule 158 of the Rules and Regulations applicable to this court a wife may file her bill of costs for taxation as against her husband, and the registrar is bound to ascertain what is a sufficient sum of money to cover the costs of the wife incidental to the hearing of the cause. Whatever the practice has of late been, nevertheless the principle was clearly carried out in Hurley v. Hurley and Menzies, [1891] P. 367, 40 W. R. Dig. 76. Until a wife has been proved guilty she is to be presumed innocent, and is entitled to pledge her husband's credit. In Robertson v. Robertson, 29 W. R. 880, 6 P. D. 119, the Court of Appeal held that the wife was entitled to her full costs, although she was found guilty. The rule giving a wife security for her costs is only to prevent the necessity of taxation de die in diem, as was the practice in the old Ecclesiastical Courts. The case of Hurley v. Hurley and Menzies is binding upon the court, and it is not a matter of discretion at all. The principle was followed in Delaforce v. Delaforce and Driscoll, [1892] W. N. 68.

Bargrave Deane, K.C. (Priestley with him), cited Walker v. Walker, 4 Sw. and Tr. 264, 10 W. R. Prob. Dig. 21, and contended that inasmuch as there had been no application for security for costs at all in this case the husband could not be liable.

JEUNE, P., in delivering a considered judgment, said: In this suit the husband charged the wife with adultery. No application was made by the wife for taxation or security for costs against the husband, and it must, therefore, be assumed that she was in some way enabled to bring her case to a hearing without assistance. The case came before me, sitting with a special jury, and, as too frequently happens, the jury were unable to agree on their verdict, and were discharged. Application was then made that the husband should be ordered to pay the full costs of the wife in respect of the abortive trial. Apart from the special practice of this division as to a wife's costs in a matrimonial suit, it is indisputable that such an application was premature. As a general rule, there can be no order as to the costs of a party in an abortive trial until by further proceedings the rights of the parties are ascertained. There is, however, in this division, as in the Ecclesiastical Courts which previously had cognizance of matrimonial matters, a well-recognised rule that a husband must provide means for his wife to bring her case to a hearing if she is unable to provide such means for herself. This principle has given rise to several rules by which practical effect has been given to it. The practice is that pendente lite an application is made by the wife that the husband shall pay her costs incurred up to the time of the application, and further pay into court, or secure, a sum estimated to be sufficient to cover her costs up to the hearing. A further practice once existed that during the trial the wife's costs were taxed de die in diem and provided by the husband, which has been modified into a practice that on application a wife is allowed to bring in her actual costs of the days of the trial as if the husband had been ordered to pay or secure them. Then after the hearing is concluded the judge is to decide what costs shall be allowed to the wife, a practice embodied in the 159th rule. The usual practice undoubtedly has been, and is, to allow a wife who has been unsuccessful her costs, but only up to the limit of the amount paid into court or secured, with the addition of such sum as may be added, as above mentioned, on account of the prolongation of the trial. Although in Robertson v. Robertson, the view appears to have been taken by the Court of Appeal that such limitation ought not in practice to exist, that case cannot, after the observations upon it of Lord Hannen in Smith v. Smith, 30 W. R. 688, 7 P. D. 84, be taken as an authority governing the practice of this court to its full apparent extent; and, as far as I know, the "usual order" invariably asked for at the end of a trial in which a wife who has had her costs secured is unsuccessful carries a right to the wife to have her costs only up to the limit of the amount secured. There are two decisions which carry further the right of a wife who has had her costs secured, and with regard to whose conduct a jury fail to agree. This question, of course, could not have arisen before 1857, as before the Act of that year, the judicial system applicable in the Ecclesiastical Courts, as in those of Equity, did not recognise trial by jury. But in Hurley v. Hurley and Menzies, it was held by Collins, J., to whose assistance at that time this division was so greatly indebted, that after an abortive trial, a wife was entitled to her full costs; and this decision was afterwards followed by Sir Charles Butt, when President, in Delaforce v. Delaforce and Driscoll,

(a.) Reported by GWYNNE HALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

68. I do not pause to criticise the discretion which those learned judges exercised in giving the wife her full costs, and not her costs up to the limit of security, or to consider whether, if those cases were in point, I should be bound to exercise my own discretion in the same way. It is, however, the foundation of the peculiar practice of this division, with regard to a wife's costs, that the wife should be unable without assistance from her husband to bring her case to a hearing, evidenced as that is by her applying for payment of a security for such costs before the trial. As Lord Hannen pointed out in Smith v. Smith, it was in 1858 expressly decided by the full court, consisting of Lord Chelmsford, Whiteman, J., and Sir Cresswell Cresswell, in the case of Keats v. Keats and Montezuma, 1 Sw. and Tr. 334, at p. 358, that if a wife brings her case to a hearing without having previously taxed her costs against her husband, and fails, the husband has never then been made liable for her costs. In the present case, therefore, if at the late trial the wife had failed, she could not have obtained any costs against her husband. But if this be so, to give her costs would be to treat her as if she had succeeded, which is to my mind clearly impossible. It is true, as was so strongly urged upon me, that a wife must in law be presumed to be innocent until she is proved to be guilty, but that to my mind has nothing to do with the matter. She is an accused woman, and her rights as to costs depend on the question whether or no that accusation is well-founded, a matter in the present case not yet determined. There is no injustice done by refusing the wife's application for costs at present. She has not needed assistance to bring her case to a hearing. If the husband does not proceed to another trial, the wife will be entitled to ask for her costs as of a proceeding abandoned against her. If she is unable without assistance to proceed to another trial, there is nothing to prevent her from applying to tax her costs against her husband in respect of such future trial. If at the next trial she succeeds, she will, unless some special reason prevent it, obtain her full costs of both trials. I think, therefore, that the present application by the respondent must be refused.

Solicitors, Iliffe, Henley, & Sweet; Long & Gardner; Ridsdale, & Son.

Court of Appeal.

From K. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, M.R., and Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ.) July 20.

FARQUHARSON BROTHERS & CO. v. KING & CO. (a.)

Principal and agent—Fraud of agent—Sale of goods—Conduct of principal enabling agent to commit the fraud—Estoppel.

The plaintiffs, who were timber merchants, imported timber which they warehoused at the docks. The timber, when sold by them, was delivered to purchasers by means of delivery orders addressed by the plaintiffs to the dock company. The plaintiffs gave their confidential clerk authority to sign delivery orders for the purpose of carrying through sales, and gave the dock company notice to honour delivery orders signed by him. The clerk, by means of delivery orders signed by him in fraud of the plaintiffs, had certain timber at the docks transferred into a fictitious name, and then sold the timber in this fictitious name to the defendants, who acted bonâ fide in the transaction, and he converted the purchase-money to his own use. In a common law action against the defendants to recover damages for the conversion of the timber,

Held, Stirling, L.J., dissenting, that the plaintiffs had by their conduct in giving their clerk authority to sign delivery orders enabled him to commit the fraud, and that therefore the loss must fall upon them.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Application for judgment or a new trial in an action tried before Mathew, J., and a jury.

The action was brought to recover certain timber or damages for its conversion.

The plaintiffs were timber merchants, and the defendants were packing-case manufacturers.

The plaintiffs used to import large quantities of timber, which they warehoused at the Surrey Commercial Docks.

When the timber was sold to purchasers the plaintiffs used to sign transfer or delivery orders addressed to the dock company directing them to transfer the timber into the names of, or to deliver it to, the purchasers.

The plaintiffs had an office in the City of London, and in their employment they had a confidential clerk named H. J. Capon. Capon's duties were to attend at the office and to direct the business in the absence of the partners, and he had authority to sell timber to a limited amount to old customers of the plaintiffs' firm.

On the 25th of January, 1895, the plaintiffs sent the following written authority to the directors of the Surrey Commercial Docks: "We hereby authorize you to accept all transfer or delivery orders which shall be signed on our behalf by Mr. H. J. Capon, whose signature is subjoined. The company acting also on our signature as heretofore. This authority is to remain in force until expressly revoked in writing by us." This document was signed by the plaintiffs. With it the plaintiffs sent the following letter to the manager of the docks: "Dear Sir,—We have made arrangements whereby in future Mr. Capon will sign D/orders on behalf of and in addition to the other members of the firm, and enclose our written authority for same.—Yours truly, FARQUHARSON BROTHERS & CO."

Commencing in 1896, Capon, by means of the wrongful exercise of his authority, perpetrated a series of frauds, which he carried on until 1900.

He manipulated the plaintiffs' books in such a way as to make it appear that there was less timber at the docks than was actually the case. This surplus timber was dealt with by Capon on his own account.

By means of the above authority he signed transfer orders directing the dock company to transfer this surplus timber at the docks into the name of "J. T. Brown."

Writing to the defendants, who were not old customers of the plaintiffs, in the assumed name of "J. T. Brown, timber agent," from an address in Battersea, which was in reality a stationer's shop, he stated that he had a quantity of timber known as "throw outs" for sale on commission for a firm of ladder builders.

The defendants bonâ fide entered into a series of contracts for the purchase of the timber from the fictitious Brown, paid him the price, and obtained delivery of the timber from the docks by means of delivery orders signed in the name of Brown.

The business between Brown and the defendants was throughout entirely conducted by correspondence.

It appeared from the evidence of witnesses called for the defence that the prices paid by the defendants were fair and reasonable, and it was admitted that the defendants, in entering into the contracts of purchase, had acted with perfect honesty and good faith, and in the ordinary and proper course of business.

The learned judge asked the jury the following question: Did the plaintiffs so act as to hold Capon out to the defendants as their agent to sell the goods to the defendants? The jury answered this question in the negative. The judge was requested, by the defendants counsel, to put the following question to the jury: Had the plaintiffs, by their conduct, enabled Capon to hold himself out as the true owner, or as entitled to dispose of the goods? This he refused to do. Upon further consideration the learned judge entered judgment for the plaintiffs for £1,200, the agreed amount of damages.

It was agreed upon the appeal that the court should have power, if any other question should have been left to the jury, to say what was, in point of fact, the right answer which should be given to that question.

J. Lawson Walton, K.C. (Cababé with him), for the defendants.—The learned judge did not leave the right question to the jury. It was not suggested that the plaintiffs so acted as to hold out Capon to the defendants as their agents to sell the timber. The defendants did not know that Capon was the agent of the plaintiffs. The right question for the jury was the one which the learned judge refused to put: Ramazotti v. Bowring, 8 W. R. 114, 7 C. B. N. S. 851. The proposition upon which the defendants rely is that where one of two innocent persons must suffer from the fraud of a third person, he shall suffer who has enabled such third person to commit the fraud: Henderson v. Williams, 43 W. R. 274, [1895] 1 Q. B. 521; Root v. French, 13 Wend. N. Y. Supr. Ct. 570. If the plaintiffs did so act as to enable Capon to hold himself out as entitled to dispose of the goods, the plaintiffs are estopped as against the defendants, who are innocent purchasers, from denying Capon's authority. It is not necessary that the plaintiffs should hold out Capon as so entitled. There was no holding out in Ramazotti v. Bowring. The defendants are therefore entitled to judgment.

He also referred to Pickering v. Busk, 15 East 38; Cooke v. Eshelby, 35 W. R. 629, 12 App. Cas. 271; Brocklesby v. Temperance Permanent Building Society, 43 W. R. 606, [1895] A. C. 173.

Joseph Walton, K.C., and W. Whately, for the plaintiffs.—There was in this case no holding out of Capon by the plaintiffs to the defendants as having authority or as entitled to sell this timber. The only holding out by the plaintiffs was to the dock company by reason of the authority given to the company to act upon transfer and delivery orders signed by Capon. Mere negligence in the custody or management of one's own property does not of itself raise an estoppel unless there has been a holding out: Scholfield v. Lord Londesborough, 45 W. R. 124, [1896] A. C. 514. The owner of property who has given a thief the opportunity of stealing it can recover it from a bonâ fide purchaser for value. There must be a holding out which is the proximate cause of the loss: Bank of Ireland v. Evans' Trustees, 3 W. R. 573, 5 H. L. Cas. 389; Swan v. North British Australasian Co., 11 W. R. 862, 2 H. & C. 175; Mayor, &c., of Merchants of the Staple of England v. Bank of England, 36 W. R. 880, 21 Q. B D. 160. In Henderson v. Williams there was a holding out, and all the judges decided the case upon that footing. The giving of the authority to Capon to sign delivery orders was not the proximate cause of the loss. The fraud of Capon intervened and was the proximate cause. Capon merely abused his authority by stealing the timber. It is like entrusting the key of a safe where valuable documents are kept to a person who subsequently steals them: Bechuanaland Exploration Co. v. London Trading Bank, [1898] 2 Q. B. 658, 47 W. R. Dig. 29. If the statement in Root v. French, which was quoted by Lord Halsbury in Henderson v. Williams, is that mere carelessness is enough to raise an estoppel, it is too wide. [A. L. SMITH, M.R., referred to Nash v. De Freville, 48 W. R. 434, at p. 436, [1900] 2 Q. B. 72, at p. 82.] That statement—that whenever one of two innocent persons must suffer by the acts of a third person, he who has enabled such third person to occasion the loss must sustain it—is taken from the dictum of Ashurst, J., in Lickbarrow v. Mason, 2 T. R. 63, and is two wide. Nor was there any entrusting of the timber or of the indicia of title to Capon. If the plaintiffs had signed the transfer orders to Brown they would have entrusted the timber to him, that is, to Capon. There must be an entrusting in fact, not a fraudulent taking of the timber by Capon. The Factor's Acts are the high-water mark of the doctrine of entrusting. Those Acts were passed to amend the common law. In Lamb v. Attenborough, 10 W. R. 211, 1 B. & S. 831, the facts were very similar to the present case, and yet the court held that the Factor's Acts did not protect the person with whom the plaintiff's clerk had fraudulently deposited the dock warrants. It would be strange if, notwithstanding, the court should hold that the defendants were protected at common law, Johnson v. Credit Lyonnais, 26 W. R. 195, 3 C. P. D. 32, it's a strong authority in favour of the plaintiffs. The judgment was therefore right.

J. Lawson Walton, K.C., in reply.—In the cases like Bank of Ireland v. Evans' Charities the person who committed the fraud was merely entrusted with the custody of the seal, or whatever the property might be. He was not authorized to do any act with it. In the present case Capon was authorized to do a certain class of acts, and abused his authority in that respect, whereby an innocent person suffered loss. The fraud of Capon was the proximate cause of the loss. Pickering v. Busk is in point. Entrusting possession of the goods is not necessary; control over the goods is sufficient. The real question is whether Capon had the dominion over the goods so that he could dispose of them. Clearly he had. The authority to him to sign transfer and delivery orders as if he was a partner in the firm gave him the dominion or control over the goods which directly caused the loss. Dyer v. Pearson, 3 B. & C. 38; Vickers v. Hertz, L. R. 2 Sc. & D. 113, 19 W. R. H. L. Dig. 15.

A. L. SMITH, M.R.—This is an action of detinue and conversion tried before Mathew, J., and a special jury. The learned judge left a question to the jury which was answered adversely to the defendants, and he thereupon entered judgment for the plaintiffs for £1,200, the agreed amount of damages. The defendants now move for judgment or a new trial, contending that the right question was not put to the jury, and it has been agreed between the parties that we shall have power to say, not merely what is the proper question that should have been put to the jury, but what on the facts is the right answer to be given to that question.

The plaintiffs, who are timber merchants, complain that the defendants have detained from them and converted to their own use, during a period extending over four years, divers quantities of small lots of timber, the agreed value of which has been taken at £1,200. It appears that the plaintiffs are importers of timber, having an office in the City of London, and they stored the timber which they imported at the Surrey Commercial Docks in their own names. The timber, when sold to a purchaser, was handed over to him by means of a delivery order signed by the plaintiffs and addressed to the dock company. This was the mode of transacting business followed down to the 25th of September, 1895, when a change was made. The plaintiffs had in their employment a confidential clerk named Capon, and, as unfortunately sometimes happens, this clerk turned out to be a rogue. On that day the plaintiffs sent an authority to the directors of the dock company to accept all transfer or delivery orders signed by Capon on their behalf, and at the same time they sent a letter to the docks manager telling him that they had made arrangements whereby in future Capon would sign delivery orders on behalf of, and in addition to, the other members of the firm. Those are most important documents. Nothing could possibly be larger than the authority so given to Capon as to getting the timber out of the docks. It was a plenary authority without stint or limit given to Capon to sign delivery orders addressed to the dock company directing them to hand over the timber to any one whom Capon designated. Under that authority Capon could have signed delivery orders to transfer the timber into the name of any one he pleased. He had carte blanche in that respect. I should have thought that any person of ordinary prudence would have paused before handing over the control of his goods to a clerk in that way. Armed with this power, Capon committed frauds both upon the plaintiffs and the defendants. He cheated them both. He signed delivery orders for these small lots of timber and then sold them to the defendants. It is admitted that the defendants purchased the timber bonâ fide, honestly believing that Capon, who was acting in the name of Brown, had authority to sell it, and that the sale was in the ordinary course of business. The defendants' honesty is admitted. These are the facts. At the trial Mathew, J., put one question to the jury and declined to put any other. The question which was put to the jury was this: Did the plaintiffs so act as to hold Capon out to the defendants as their agent to sell the goods to the defendants? That question could only be answered in one way—that is to say the way in which it was answered: Was that the right question to ask the jury? I do not think so. The right question to ask the jury upon the facts here is this: Did the plaintiffs by their conduct enable Capon to hold himself out as the owner of the goods so as to enable him to dispose of them? That question ought to have been put to the jury. The next matter to consider is: What is the right answer to give to that question? In my opinion the answer ought to be in the affirmative, and judgment should be entered for the defendants. The law upon the point as to which of two innocent persons must suffer from the fraud of a third person has given rise to a good deal of discussion. I myself laid down a proposition in Nash v. De Freville which I think is good law, subject to a limitation. In that case I said: "It is a well-known principle of law that whenever one of two innocent persons must suffer by the acts of a third person, he who has enabled such third person to occasion the loss must sustain it." That is merely repeating what was laid down by Ashurst, J., in Lickbarrow v. Mason. The act, however, which enables the third person to occasion the loss must be one immediately connected with the fraud which is the cause of the loss. In the present case the plaintiffs gave an authority to the dock company to honour all transfer or delivery orders signed by Capon. Shortly after that was given Capon began to sign transfer or delivery orders to the dock company to transfer certain timber to the order of Brown, who was a fictitious person. Having thus got the timber into the name of Brown, he then, in the name of Brown, directed the company to transfer the timber to the order of the defendants, who thereupon took delivery of it and paid the fictitious Brown for it. Upon these facts, can it be denied that the plaintiffs by their conduct enabled Capon to hold himself out as the owner of the goods so as to enable him to dispose of them? Without the authority of the 25th of January, 1895, Capon could not have signed the delivery orders and could not have acted as he did. The authority of the 25th of January directly enabled Capon to commit the fraud. As to the contention that the fraud of Capon, and not the authority of the 25th of January, was the proximate cause of the loss, I would point out that the rule as to which of two innocent persons should suffer for a loss occasioned by the act of a third person can only come into operation when there is a fraud committed by the third person; and if the contention put forward is correct, we may as well run our pen through the rule. In Vickers v. Hertz the Lord Chancellor (Lord Hatherley) said: "When, however, one person arms another with a symbol of property he should be the sufferer, and not the person who gives credit to the operation and is misled by it." Then in Henderson v. Williams Lord Halsbury said: "I think that it is not undesirable to refer to an American authority—which I observe was quoted in the case of Kingsford v. Merry, 5 W. R. 151, 1 H. & N. 503—Root v. French in which, in the Supreme Court of New York, Savage, C.J., makes observations which seem to me to be well worthy of consideration. Speaking of a bonâ fide purchaser who has purchased the property from a fraudulent vendor and given value for it, he says: "He is protected in doing so on the principle just stated, that when one of two innocent persons must suffer from the fraud of a third, he shall suffer who, by his indiscretion, has enabled such third person to commit the fraud." The result is that, upon the facts of this case, the question which, as I have stated above, should have been put to the jury must be answered in the affirmative, and the verdict and judgment must now be entered for the defendants.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The case seems to me to be a difficult one, and I think it is important to endeavour to draw with some precision the line between the authorities on the one side and on the other. Perhaps the best way of effecting that object will be to state first what in my judgment are the facts of the case, and then to state the legal position resulting from those facts.

The plaintiffs kept a large stock of timber at the Surrey Commercial Docks, and they gave authority to the dock company to honour all transfer and delivery orders relating to their timber signed by their confidential clerk, Capon, as if they were signed by a member of the firm. Capon signed various transfers of lots of timber into the name of Brown. He did this for the purpose of carrying out sales which he had effected with the defendants, and he gave the defendants delivery orders in the name of Brown. The defendants in good faith duly paid Capon in the name of Brown for the timber in question, and they received the timber from the dock company by means of the delivery orders. In my opinion the effect of these facts is this: that the plaintiffs entrusted Capon with the power of transferring the timber standing in the name of the firm to any order that he chose, but they only authorized him to make such transfers for the purpose of sales to customers of the firm, and Capon, contrary to his authority, exercised the power of making transfers for the purpose of carrying through sales effected by him in fraud of his employers in the name of Brown. That is to say, the plaintiffs for their own convenience entrusted Capon with the power of placing timber in the names of persons other than their customers, or, in other words, they gave him the power which enabled him to commit the fraud which he did commit. They gave him that power for the purpose of carrying through sales, though not for the purpose of carrying through those sales which in fact he did carry through. The plaintiffs did something more than merely place the timber in the custody of Capon—they enabled him to transfer the timber from their name into other names for the purpose of carrying through sales. They not only gave him the key of a box, but they authorized him to deal with the goods in the box.

The general principle which underlies this class of cases is that which was laid down by Ashurst, J., in Lickbarrow v. Mason—namely, that "wherever one or two innocent persons must suffer by the acts of a third, he who has enabled such third person to occasion the loss must sustain it." Notwithstanding observations of Lord Halsbury in Henderson v. Williams, where he refers to the wide proposition laid down by Savage, C.J., in Root v. French, it must be admitted, having regard to all the authorities, that that proposition was stated in too wide terms. The cases show that there must be some limitation placed upon it. Sometimes it is said that the conduct which is the basis of the estoppel must be in the same transaction, and must be the proximate cause of the fraud, or the proximate cause of the loss. In other cases it is said that it must be the effective or proximate cause of the loss. But, at any rate, there are plenty of cases to shew that it is necessary to qualify in some way the general terms of the dictum of Ashurst, J. The conclusion at which I have arrived is that one ought never to say that a person has, within the meaning of the rule, enabled the third person to occasion the loss or commit the fraud, unless the act which he did is an act which he intended to be acted upon by somebody. For instance, suppose that in Brocklesby's case the father had simply entrusted his son with the deeds to take care of, and the son had thereupon used them for a fraudulent purpose, that would not have been within the rule, for on that supposition the father would not have done an act which he intended to be acted upon. But, in point of fact, in that case the father handed the deeds to his son not simply that he might take care of them, but that he might raise money on them; and that brought the case within the rule. In the present case the power which the plaintiffs gave Capon was a power to make transfers and issue delivery orders for the express purpose of carrying out sales. They meant, of course, that the sales should be made on their account, but the object of the power was that the sales should be carried out. The mode of working was that the dock company should receive instructions from time to time from the confidential clerk to transfer timber from the name of the firm into the name of somebody else. In these circumstances it seems to me that this case is in the same position as Henderson v. Williams. In my opinion we ought not to treat this case as if the sale to the defendants were something independent of the power conferred by the plaintiffs on their clerk, but to treat it as if that sale were a dealing with the goods in pursuance of that power, though not in pursuance of the clerk's authority as agent for the plaintiffs. With regard to the question how this case ought to have been left to the jury, I think that the proper question to put to the jury is that stated by Lord Tenterden in Dyer v. Pearson—viz., whether A. had by his conduct enabled B. to hold himself out to the world as having the property as well as possession of the goods.

STIRLING, L.J.—I am unable to arrive at the same conclusion as the other members of the court. In my opinion the judgment of Mathews, J., is right. This is not a case under the Factors Acts, but under the common law. The rule at common law is well stated by Blackburn, J., in Cole v. North-Western Bank, L. R. 10 C. P. 354, at p. 362, 23 W. R. Dig. 186: "At common law a person in possession of goods could not confer on another, either by sale or by pledge, any better title to the goods than he himself had. To this general rule there was an exception of sales in market overt, and an apparent exception where the person in possession had a title defeasible on account of fraud. But the general rule was that, to make either a sale or a pledge valid against the owner of the goods sold or pledged, it must be shown that the seller or pledger had authority from the owner to sell or pledge, as the case might be. If the owner of the goods had so acted as to clothe the seller or pledger with apparent authority to sell or pledge, he was at common law precluded, as against those who were induced bonâ fide to act on the faith of that apparent authority, from denying that he had given such an authority, and the result as to them was the same as if he had really given it. But there was no such preclusion as against those who had notice that the real authority was limited And the possession of bills of lading or other documents of title to goods did not at common law confer on the holder of them any greater power than the possession of the goods themselves." In the present case there was no sale in market overt; it was not a case of a person in possession having a title defeasible on account of fraud. Capon, who made the sale to the defendants, made it without authority. The only question is whether the case comes within the exception referred to by Blackburn, J., as to the owner of the goods having so acted as to clothe the seller with apparent authority to sell the goods. Upon this point many authorities have been referred to. The two most important are Johnson v. Crédit Lyonnais and Henderson v. Williams. Both are decisions of this court, and are therefore binding upon us. Taking first the case of Johnson v. Crédit Lyonnais, which is the earliest in point of date, the facts of that case are shortly stated in the headnote. H., a merchant dealing in tobacco and a broker in that trade, had fifty hogsheads of that article lying in bond in his name in the K. dock. The warrants for them had been issued to him. The plaintiff bought the tobacco from H. and paid for it, but he left the dock warrants in the possession of H., and took no steps to have any change made in the books of the dock company as to the ownership of the tobacco. H., being the ostensible owner of the tobacco, fraudulently obtained advances on the pledge of a portion of the tobacco from the defendants respectively, and handed to them the dock warrants. Both the defendants acted in good faith, and took fresh dock warrants from the dock company. It was held that the conduct of the plaintiff in leaving the indicia of title in H.'s hands, and thus enabling him to obtain advances on the security of the goods, was not such as to disentitle the plaintiff to recover their value from the defendants. Cockburn, C.J., in delivering judgment, referred to the authorities, including the case of Dyer v. Pearson, and said (3 C. P. D., at p. 40):—"Sitting here in a Court of Appeal, I feel myself at liberty to say that these authorities fail to satisfy me that at common law the leaving by a vendee of goods bought or the documents of title in the hands of the vendor till it suited the convenience of the former to take possession of them, would on a fraudulent sale or pledge by the party so possessed divest the owner of his property or estop him from asserting his right to it. If this had been so, there would have been, as it seems to me, no necessity for giving effect by statute to the authorised sale of goods by a factor." I pause here to say that a forcible observation was made by Mr. Joseph Walton, when he called attention to the case of Lamb v. Attenborough, a case almost indistinguishable in its facts from the present case. In that case the clerk, who was the plaintiff's servant, and who had authority to sign delivery orders in his master's name, fraudulently pledged the goods and signed delivery orders; and it was held that the Factors Acts did not apply so as to protect the person with whom the goods had been pledged. How extraordinary it would be if the pledgee could justify under the common law of England apart from the Factors Act, which was passed for the express purpose of remedying the common law. Returning to the case of Johnson v. Crédit Lyonnais, Cockburn, C.J., further on said: "It would be to carry this doctrine much too far to apply it where advantage has been taken of a man's remissness in looking after his own interests to invade or encroach upon his rights, in the absence of knowledge on his part of the thing done, from which his assent to it could reasonably be implied."

I proceed now to contrast that with the case of Henderson v. Williams. There the owner of goods at a warehouse was induced by the fraud of F. to place the goods at the disposal of F. by a transfer order addressed to the warehouseman. F. then sold the goods to an innocent purchaser, who, before concluding the contract, sent to the warehouseman to ascertain if the goods were at F.'s order. The warehouseman replied that the goods were at F.'s order, and that he would hold them for the purchaser on receipt of F.'s transfer order. There were two points taken on behalf of the purchaser in that case, but the one material to the present case is that the owner of the goods had conferred on F. full power to dispose of them, and had held him out as having such power, and that therefore F. was capable of giving a good title to the goods. In that case Lord Halsbury, after quoting the passage from the judgment of Savage, C.J., in the American case which has been referred to, said: "It appears to me, therefore, that when once the correspondence is looked at upon which these goods were committed to Fletcher, to his order and disposition, and Fletcher was invested with a full power of disposition, it is impossible to argue that this was not a holding out by the true owner of the goods of Fletcher as capable of giving a good title." The plaintiffs in the present case did not hold out Capon as capable of giving a good title to the timber. They gave authority to the dock company to accept Capon's delivery orders, but they did not authorize the dock company to communicate that to anyone. They did not authorize Capon to hold himself out as having authority to deal with the goods at all. The case does not, in my opinion, come within the judgment in Henderson v. Williams. The plaintiffs knew nothing of the transfer of the goods into the name of Brown, nor of the sale of the goods. I think that the case would be the same if Capon had transferred the goods into his own name, got delivery of them, and sold them.

I must also deal with the question of negligence. That question was raised in Johnson v. Crédit Lyonnais, and Cockburn, C.J., at p. 40, says: "That the plaintiff, in omitting to have the goods transferred to his own name, and to have the dock warrants delivered over to him, was wanting in common prudence, in other words, was guilty of negligence, I cannot bring myself to doubt." Then, on p. 42, he says: "But whether this negligence of the plaintiff will, under the circumstances, give to the defendants any ground of complaint which can be enforced in point of law is a very different question. Negligence, to afford a ground of action to one who has suffered from it, must have reference to some duty which the party guilty of the negligence owed to him. The law is, in my opinion, correctly stated by Blackburn, J., in Swan v. North British Australasian Co., where, after referring to what was said by Parke, B., in Freeman v. Cooke, 2 Exch. 654, namely, that 'negligence, to have the effect of estopping the party, must be the neglect of some duty cast upon the person guilty of it,' he goes on to say: 'This, I apprehend, is a true and sound principle. A person who does not lock up his goods, which are consequently stolen, may be said to be negligent as regards himself; but, inasmuch as he neglects no duty which the law casts upon him, he is not, in consequence, estopped from denying the title of those who may have, however innocently, purchased those goods from the thief, except in market overt.' The same principle could obviously apply to the case of goods fraudulently sold or pledged by a person left in possession of them. The rule thus laid down is applicable here. The plaintiff may have been negligent, and his negligence may have brought on the defendants the loss of the money they have advanced. But the plaintiff owed no duty to the defendants—at least, no duty which the law can recognise—either as individuals or as members of the general public." That judgment was concurred in by the other members of the court. On the points to which I have referred, Bramwell, L.J., added nothing; and Brett, L.J., said: "If the plaintiff was guilty of no negligence and did not give either authority or ostensible authority to Hoffman to pledge the tobacco, the defendants cannot, I think, be protected by any principle of law independent of the statutes"; and he came to the conclusion that there was no such negligence as would prevent the plaintiff from succeeding. It seems to me that in the present case the plaintiffs owed no duty to the defendants or to the general public. I come to this conclusion with great diffidence, seeing that my brethren have come to a different conclusion. I am far from saying that the law is even now in a satisfactory state. That it was not in former times in a satisfactory state may be taken as admitted, because the Factors Acts were passed to alter the law as laid down by Blackburn, J., in Cole v. North-Western Bank. I may add that if I had to say whether it was more equitable that the loss should fall on the plaintiffs or on the defendants, I should be inclined to say that it would be more equitable that it should fall on the defendants.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Ward, Perks, & McKay.

Solicitors for the defendants, Anning & Co.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } July 25.
Byrne, J. }

In re POWER.
In re STONE.
ACWORTH v. STONE. (a.)

Inland Revenue—Estate duty—Will—Exercise of general power of appointment—Appointed fund—General residue—Property "passing to executor as such"—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 9, sub-section 1.

Apart from any special direction by the testator a fund appointed by the testator under a general power of appointment, is not property that passes to the testator's executor as such, and consequently the fund appointed and not the general residue must bear the estate duty payable in respect of such fund.

In re Treasure, 48 W. R. 696, [1900] 2 Ch. 648, and In re Maddock, [1901] W. N. 118, followed.

In re Moore, ante, p. 373, [1901] 1 Ch. 691, not followed.

This was a summons taken out by the executors and trustees of Ellen Louisa Power, who died on the 31st of January, 1900, to determine, inter alia, whether the estate duty payable on the death of the said testatrix, in respect of certain property appointed by her will dated the 16th of May, 1896, under a general power of appointment given to her by the will of James Stone, who died on the 4th of January, 1865, ought to be paid out of the property so appointed or out of the residuary estate of the said testatrix.

The will contained no direction as to the payment of duty or testamentary expenses.

Horsley, for the trustees.

Church, for the appointees.—There are unquestionably here conflicting decisions. In re Treasure, 48 W. R. 696, [1900] 2 Ch. 648, and In re Maddock, [1901] W. N. 118, conflict with In re Moore, ante, p. 373, [1901] 1 Ch. 691, a decision of Buckley, J.; but the latter should be followed. In In re Treasure there was a direction for payment of the testamentary expenses. The fund passes to an executor as such within the meaning of section 9 of the Finance Act: In re Hoskins's Trusts, 25 W. R. 779, 6 Ch. D. 281; Hanson on Death Duties, 4th ed., pp. 194-5. One proof of this is that such a fund is recoverable by a married woman executrix virtute officii.

R. J. Parker, for the parties interested in the residue.—The decisions of Kekewich, J., in In re Treasure and In re Maddock should be followed. The general rule as to equitable and legal assets is laid down in Pardo v. Bingham, L. R. 6 Eq. 485, 17 W. R. Ch. Dig. 49. [He referred also to Williams on Executors, pt. 4, bk. 7, chap. i.] Property which comes to an executor as such is property which the executor would have a right to recover if the will had only appointed him executor and contained nothing else. Attorney-General v. Brunning, 8 W. R. 362. 8 H. L. Cas. 243. In In re Davies' Trusts, 20 W. R. 165, L. R. 13 Eq. 163, Wickens, V.C., says that it has not been decided that the appointment of an executor in a will and nothing more would make an appointed fund assets. In In re Thurston, 34 W. R. 528, 32 Ch. D. 508, Chitty, J., stated that the appointment of an executor is not sufficient to make the property the subject of the power, assets for all purposes. Under the old law the Ordinary could not have applied such funds in pios uses. The only funds which he could so apply were funds which the executor could recover in virtue of the probate: Hanson on Death Duties, p. 272: Platt v. Routh, 3 Beav. 257, 6 M. & W. 756. The reason why courts of equity made equitable assets liable for debts was the legal presumption that if a man wishes volunteers to take, he also wishes his creditors to take.

Church in reply.—Most of the cases relied on are anterior in date to In re Hoskins's Trusts. The Act itself draws no distinction between legal and equitable assets.

BYRNE, J.—The question raised by this summons is whether or not, where a general power of appointment by will over a fund has been exercised, the appointed fund passes to the executor "as such" within the meaning of that expression as used in section 9 (1) of the Finance Act, 1894. If it does so pass, estate duty is payable out of residue; if not, it has to be borne by the appointed fund. In the case of In re Treasure, Kekewich, J., held that the appointed fund does not, under such circumstances, pass to the executor "as such"; but there was another ground of decision—viz., that the duty fell within the description of testamentary expenses which were directed to be paid out of residue, and, consequently, that although the fund did not pass to the executor "as such," the duty fell to be paid out of residue. In the case of In re Moore, Buckley, J., declined to follow the opinion expressed by Kekewich, J., and held, in a case where there was no direction as to payment of testamentary expenses, that the appointed fund did pass to the executors "as such," and that the estate duty was on that ground payable out of residue. The point again came before Kekewich, J., in the case of In re Maddock, there being no direction as to payment of testamentary expenses, when, as I am informed, without fresh argument he adhered to his opinion as expressed in In re Treasure, notwithstanding the decision in In re Moore. In this state of the authorities I am bound to express my own opinion upon the question. The rule is that property subject to general powers of appointment becomes assets for the payment of the appointor's debts, if the power is actually exercised in favour of volunteers, and Lord Hardwicke in Townshend v. Windham, 2 Ves. sen., 1-10, points out that "if there is a power to execute by will or deed, though executed by will, it operates not as a will to that purpose, but as an appointment, not as an appointment of his own assets, but of the estate of another, and takes not place by force of the will." Prior to the passing of the Act 23 Vict. cap. 15, property over which the deceased had a general power of appointment only was not subject to probate duty. This was decided in Drake v. Attorney-General, 10 Cl. and Fin., 257, affirming the decision of Lord Langdale in Platt v. Routh. In Drake v. Attorney-General, the Lord Chancellor, in giving the unanimous opinion of the House and of the judges, says: "The property here taken by Mrs. Platt for her life was taken not subject to any power of appointment for any persons specially named, and is therefore subject to legacy duty in the hands of her appointees. But, on the other hand, the property appointed was not property which, within the meaning of the Act as applied to the schedule imposing the probate duty, was so completely her property as to render it liable to that duty, so that the judgment of the court below appears to be right in both instances." Lord Langdale's decision in Platt v. Routh was in accordance with the certificate of the Court of Exchequer. Lord Abinger, in giving the judgment of that court, says, at pp. 790-791, 6 Mee. & Wel.: "In that case," referring to a case of Attorney-General v. Hope, 1 C. M. L. R. 530, "which was very fully considered, the House of Lords held that probate duty was not payable in respect of such parts of the testator's assets as were situate in America at the time of his death, and the broad ground on which that decision rested was that probate duty is granted in respect of such part only of the assets as the executor can recover by virtue of the probate; being, in fact, that property which but for the will the Ordinary would in early times have been entitled to apply in pios usus. Now, although Judith Ann Platt had what we consider an absolute power of appointment over the property in question, yet it is clear that the Ordinary never could under any circumstances have had any right whatever to interfere with it, and it is also certain that, whether probate be granted or not, the executor, qua executor, can have no title to any part of the property." Lord Langdale, in the course of his judgment (see 3 Beav. 281), says: "The next question is whether the residuary estate of John Ramsden appointed by the will of Mrs. Platt is chargeable with probate duty upon the probate of the will of Mrs. Platt, and I am of opinion that it is not. It was not the property of Mrs. Platt, and could not be recovered by her executors by virtue of the probate. It would be singular that the rule of this Court, which requires a probate merely as evidence to show that the instrument of appointment is a will, should have the effect of subjecting the property to duty as if it had been the property of the testator, which the court does not consider it to be." I pass by another passage. "But the 38th section of the Act appears to me to show that the Act only relates to the estate and effects of the deceased for or in respect of which the probate is granted, and as this was not the property of the deceased, I am of opinion that no duty is payable in respect of it." It is, I think, quite clear that the appointed property was considered not to pass to the executor virtute officii or "as such." Kindersley, V.C., in Cook v. Gregson, 4 W. R. 581, 3 Drew., 547, at p. 550, in considering the difference between what are legal and what are equitable assets says that "every item of property come to the hands of the executor which he has recovered, or had a right to recover, virtute officii, that is, which he would have had a right to recover if the testator had merely appointed him executor, without saying anything about his property or the application thereof" is legal assets. Lord Chelmsford, in the Attorney-General v. Brunning, 8 H. L. Cas., at p. 265, expressly approved of this passage. In the last-mentioned case the question was whether or not money paid to an executor under a contract for sale of land entered into by the testator was legal or equitable assets, and Lord Cranworth observes (see p. 258), "With all deference to the Court of Exchequer, I think that court fell into an error in treating this money as being equitable assets. It is a sum which the executor would take as executor, and which therefore would be legal assets in his hands. His right would not depend on anything contained in the will of Mr. Hope. Mr. Hope's administrator would have been entitled in case he had died intestate, and what an administrator is entitled to recover as administrator virtute officii can never be equitable assets." Lord Cranworth also points out that foreign assets were not liable to probate duty not being recoverable by virtue of the English probate, and when they come to the hands of the executor they so come because he has established a title in a foreign jurisdiction. In In re Davies' Trusts, Wickens, V.C., states it as settled law that a testator who has a general power of appointment directing payment of his debts without more and appointing an executor makes the appointed fund liable, in aid of his own assets, for payment of his debts; and he expresses his opinion that the same rule would apply though no executor were appointed. I think that it is also established that the appointment of an executor without more would not make the fund assets (see In re Davies, and In re Thurston). In this state of the law the Act 23 Vict. c. 15 was passed; and the effect of sections 4 and 5 is to make the appointed funds liable to probate duty, but not, as it appears to me, to cause that to pass to the executor "as such" which had not previously so passed. Passing to the case of In re Hoskins's Trust, I do not myself think that James, L.J., meant to express the opinion that the executor was entitled to receive the fund "as such," but that he must prove the will and constitute himself executor before he could ask to have the fund handed over. The production of probate would be necessary as proof of title on the part of the executor in his capacity as a person nominated to administer the fund and as showing an appointment. Turning to the Finance Act, and bearing in mind that estate duty was intended to be analogous to probate duty, I cannot gather any suggestion of intention to alter the incidence of duty in respect of funds appointed under a general power. Before that Act I consider that the fund in question would have been equitable assets and not legal. I do not think that by the Act it was intended or that the effect of the section under discussion is to convert equitable into legal assets, or to cause property to pass to the executor virtute officii which had not previously so passed, nor, as I have said, do I believe that James, L.J., in the case of In re Hoskins, meant to decide or to express an opinion which would have a similar result. I need not dwell upon the difficulty I have naturally felt in deciding in opposition to the opinion of Buckley, J., but I consider that I ought to decide in accordance with the view expressed by Kekewich, J., in the case referred to.

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, Norris, Allens, & Chapman.

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } May 15; June 21.

POWER v. BANKS. (a.)

Corporation sole—Endowment—Rector—Wrongful investment—Statute 13 Eliz. c. 10.

In pursuance of the private Act 31 Geo. 2, c. 2, a sum of money was vested in the rector of a parish as corporation sole. In 1881 a rector of the parish invested part of the money in the purchase of land, which was conveyed to him, "his heirs and assigns," with a declaration in bar of dower. The deed was not enrolled in Chancery and there was only one attesting witness, and no licence in mortmain was obtained. Part of the property thus conveyed was sold by the rector, and the rest, on resigning the living, he conveyed as beneficial owner by deed to H. (his successor) in fee simple in consideration of five shillings as purchase-money. Shortly afterwards H. sold the property by auction, and defendant B. was the purchaser.

Held, that though personal property cannot usually be vested in a corporation sole, the Statute 31 Geo. 2, c. 2, made this case an exception, and therefore that the rector as corporation sole could receive and give a good discharge for the money vested in him.

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that, on the sale by H. to B., as the purchase-money was received by H., it came into the proper hands, and that the defendant B. was not answerable.

In this action the incumbent of St. Mary's, Stratford, Bow, claimed from a purchaser of ground-rents a sum of money invested by a previous incumbent in the ground-rents, on the ground that this money was part of the endowment of the living.

By an Act of Parliament entitled "An Act for providing a maintenance for the minister of the parish church of St. Mary, Stratford, Bow, in the county of Middlesex," 3 Geo. 2, c. 3, the sum of £3,500, part of the moneys appropriated by an earlier Act for the maintenance of ministers of certain new churches, was allotted as the share which the rector of St. Mary, Stratford, Bow, should have, and this sum was to be laid out in purchasing lands, ground-rents, or other hereditaments in fee simple to be conveyed to and settled upon, and to the use of, the rector of the said church for the time being for and towards the maintenance of such rector.

By the private Act, 31 Geo. 2, c. 2, it was enacted, inter alia, that the sum of £3,274 7s. 4d., South Sea Annuities, in which the sum of £3,500 had been invested, and which was then standing in the books of the South Sea Company in the name of Henry Fane, late treasurer to the commissioners, acting under the prior Acts, should be transferred unto the rector and his assigns to the intent that the dividends might be received by the rector and his successors towards his and their maintenance, but not to be transferred, sold, or disposed of unless for such purpose and with such licence and consent as therein mentioned, and which stock should on the death or removal of the said rector vest in, and was thereby vested, in the succeeding rector and not in the rector so removed, nor in the executors or administrators of the deceased rector, and should be carried to the account of such succeeding rector accordingly in the said company's books for the purposes of the said Act. And it was further declared that when a proper and convenient purchaser should be found it should be lawful for the rector, for the time being, with the consent of the bishop of the diocese, to be signified in writing under his hand and seal and attested by two witnesses, to sell, and that the money produced by such sale should be received by such person or persons as the said bishop should by writing under his hand and seal attested as aforesaid appoint, and such money should be laid out and applied in the payment of the purchase-money for such lands, tenements, or hereditaments, such purchase being first approved by the said bishop in writing under his hand and seal attested as aforesaid, and that the same lands, tenements, or hereditaments should be settled and assured to the use of such rector and his successors for and towards his and their maintenance for ever. Under the statute 16 & 17 Vict. c. 23, owners of South Sea Annuities who did not assent to the conversion of their annuities were directed to be paid off at par.

Mr. Driffield, who was rector of St. Mary, Stratford, Bow, at that time, did not assent to the conversion, and in April, 1854, the sum of £3,524 6s. 7d. was paid to him.

He invested this money in Consols, and apparently treated it as his own. Subsequently he sold out the Consols, and applied the proceeds towards the payment of the contract price for the building of a new church called St. Stephen's, Old Ford.

By a deed dated the 6th of April, 1857, to which the Bishop of London was a party, and by another deed dated the 7th of July, 1857, the new church until consecration, and afterwards the pew rents, were charged with payment to Mr. Driffield of £4,000, with interest at 4½ per cent.

Mr. Driffield afterwards borrowed £1,500 on the security (inter alia) of this mortgage.

In 1880 Mr. Driffield resigned the living, and he was succeeded by Mr. Insley.

In April, 1881, Miss Hyndman's trustees paid Mr. Driffield £3,500 for the purpose of discharging the debt on St. Stephen's, Bow, in consideration of the transfer to Miss Hyndman's trustees of the patronage of three churches—St. Stephen's Church, Bow; St. Mark's Church, Bow; and St. Paul's Church, North Bow. Mr. Driffield accepted the £3,500 in full satisfaction of his charge and executed a release. Out of the £3,500, the sum of £1,000 balance due to his mortgagees was paid to them, and he received £2,500.

On the 20th of April, 1881, he paid Mr. Insley £3,524 6s. 7d., and took from Mr. Insley a receipt "on account of the endowment of the rectory of Bow." He also paid Mr. Insley back interest on this sum.

In October, 1881, Mr. Insley purchased some freehold land at Lewisham for £2,362 10s. This was part of the money he had received from Mr. Driffield. The land was conveyed by deed dated the 25th of October, 1881, to Mr. Insley "his heirs and assigns," with a declaration in bar of dower. This deed was not enrolled in Chancery and there was only one attesting witness. The consent of the bishop was not given to the purchase, nor was any licence in mortmain obtained. In April and August, 1889, Mr. Insley sold portions of the Lewisham property to Mr. Byrne and Mr. Bush, receiving in each case the full purchase-money. It did not clearly appear what was done with this purchase-money, but it was apparently represented by a sum of Great Western Railway Stock standing in the names of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

In March, 1892, Mr. Insley resigned the living, and he was succeeded in June by Mr. Hare. By deed dated the 17th of February, 1893, Mr. Insley "in consideration of 5s. as purchase-money" as beneficial owner conveyed all the unsold Lewisham property to Mr. Hare in fee simple with a declaration in bar of dower. This deed was not enrolled and there was only one attesting witness.

On the 6th of October, 1893, the unsold property was put up for sale by auction by Mr. Hare, and defendant was the purchaser of one lot. The conveyance was dated the 14th of November, 1893. It was made between Mr. Hare of the first part, Mr. Insley of the second part, and the defendant of the third part. After reciting the contract for sale, it recited that Mr. Insley had not dealt with the property for value since the execution of the deed of the 17th of February, 1893, and at the request of the defendant had agreed to join in manner thereinafter appearing. Mr. Hare as beneficial owner conveyed and Mr. Insley as beneficial owner confirmed the property to the defendant in fee simple. Mr. Hare received the defendant's purchase-money. On his resignation of the living, in May, 1899, it was not forthcoming.

The plaintiff was the present rector. The action was commenced on the 19th of October, 1900. It was founded upon the Act 31 Geo. 2, c. 2. A declaration was sought that the conveyance of the 14th of November, 1893, was void, and that the hereditaments were part of the possessions appertaining or belonging to the rector, or in the alternative a declaration that the defendant took the conveyance with notice that they were held subject to a trust for the benefit of the rector for the time being, and that the defendant is a trustee for the rector for the time being, and the plaintiff asked for consequential relief.

Dibdin, K.C., and Errington, for plaintiff, referred to Attorney-General v. Gardner, 2 De G. & Sm. 102; Attorney-General v. Munro, 2 De. G. & Sm. 122; Attorney-General v. Ward, 6 Hare 477; Churcher v. Martin, 37 W. R. 682, 42 Ch. D. 312; Board v. Board, 22 W. R. 206, L. R. 9 Q. B. 48; Dalton v. Fitzgerald, 45 W. R. 685, [1897] 2 Ch. 86; In re Hallett's Estate, 28 W. R. 732, 13 Ch. D. 696.

Micklem, K.C., and Buckmaster, for defendant, referred to Magdalen Hospital v. Knotts, 27 W. R. 602, 4 App. Cas. 324; In re Salmon, 38 W. R. 150, 42 Ch. D. 351.

COZENS-HARDY, J., found on the facts that neither Insley nor Hare nor Corbin nor the defendant was aware of the statute of Geo. 2; but Insley and Hare both knew that the property was, or was purchased out of, or represented in some way, "church property." They thought, as did Corbin, that whatever the trust might be, there was full power to vary the investment and to sell the land for this purpose. The defendant himself knew nothing whatever about the matter. [His lordship then proceeded:] These facts raise legal questions of great difficulty, especially having regard to the peculiar position of a rector. He is a corporation sole. Apart from statute or special custom, personal property cannot be vested in a corporation sole. It will pass to the executors or administrators and not to the successors of the corporation sole. Fulwood's case, 4 Coke, 65; Howley v. Knight, 14 Q. B. 240, and cases there cited. Apart from statute, real property cannot be vested in a corporation sole either at law or in equity without a licence in mortmain. Now the statute of 31 Geo. 2, clearly vested the South Sea Stock in the rector as a corporation sole, and thus created an exception from the general rule. The Conversion Act of 1853, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 23, enabled all persons and bodies, politic or corporate, to assent to accept new stock, and provided that those who should not signify their assent should receive £100 cash for every £100 of stock, and should be at liberty to demand and receive payment from the bank. The bank assumed, and I think rightly, that Mr. Driffield, as a corporation sole, could receive and give a good discharge for the cash. Whenever, by statute or by special custom, as in the case of the Chamberlain of London, chattels or choses in action are vested in a corporation sole, it seems to follow that such corporation sole must have the right to receive and get in and give a good discharge for the property thus vested in him. Mr. Driffield handed the money to Mr. Insley, who must be taken to have received it in his character of corporation sole. His receipt was a good discharge to Mr. Driffield. Mr. Insley was accountable for this money to his successor, Mr. Hare. When in 1881 he invested part of the money in the purchase of land, he did not purport or intend to effect a purchase under the statute of George 2, of which he had never heard; nor did he purport or intend, as an individual, to create a trust of the land, for the benefit of himself and his successors, as a corporation sole. Any such trust would have been unlawful as putting an equitable estate in mortmain without a licence from the Crown. In other words, Insley could not elect to treat this land as part of the benefice or as appertaining or belonging to it. The land was therefore not subject to the restraining Acts, and I cannot hold the subsequent conveyance by Hare to the defendant to be void under the statute 13 Eliz. c. 10. What, then, was the legal position when Insley purchased the land? He still remained accountable for the cash. There was nothing to prevent him from selling the land, which was his, to provide the cash. In the case of an unauthorized purchase by a trustee, I think the trustee can make a good title to a purchaser with notice, provided only that all the beneficiaries are not at once competent and desirous to take the land in specie: see In re Patten and Edmonton Guardians, 31 W. R. 785, 52 L. J. Ch. 787. Here there was no beneficiary either competent or desirous to take the land in specie. The right of the trustee to sell cannot depend upon the question whether the entire amount of the trust fund or only a portion of it is cleared by the sale. He must have a right to sell in lots and generally to realize the property as a prudent owner would. He is simply doing his duty by turning the property into cash so as to replace as far as may be the trust fund. The contrary view would prevent a trustee from ever remedying a breach of trust of this nature without instituting a suit for that purpose, as was done in Robinson v. Robinson, Ir. Rep. 10 Eq. 189, 24 W. R. Dig. 298. No cestuis que trustent are said to have a lien upon the improper investment, but where there is no right to elect to take the land in specie I am not aware of any authority which shows that, before proceedings taken to assert the lien, the trustees cannot realize the property by means of an honest sale. It is analogous to the lien, which in the dissolution of a partnership exists on partnership assets in favour of a retiring partner, or the executors of a deceased partner. Such a lien does not prevent the continuing or surviving partner from selling the assets, In re Langmead's Trusts, 3 W. R. 260 and 602, 20 Beav. 20, but I doubt whether this analogy is too favourable to the plaintiff. By means of the sales effected by Insley the purchase-money got into the hands of the corporation sole—i.e., into the proper hands, and I cannot see what harm was done by this. To affect the purchasers from Insley with the consequences of any subsequent misappropriation by the corporation sole would be unjust, unless the sale itself was a wrongful act. On Insley's retirement in 1892, I assume that he in some way secured the purchase-money he had received for the benefit of Hare as corporation sole. He certainly passed on to Hare, as an individual, the unsold property, which so far as appears was of ample value to make good the balance. Hare sold by public auction; no impropriety in the sale is suggested. The legal estate passed to the defendant. The purchase-money was received by Hare, the corporation sole. It reached the proper hands. Hare subsequently stole the money, but I cannot bring myself to make the defendant answerable for his misdeeds. I have assumed in favour of the plaintiff, without deciding it, that the defendant cannot, having regard to Corbin's position of solicitor for vendor and purchaser, be regarded as a purchaser for value without notice. But even on that assumption, I think, for the reasons above stated, that the action fails, and I must dismiss it with costs.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, Leslie Stock.

Solicitors for the defendant, Corbin, Greener, & Cook.

K. B. Div.
(Kennedy and Phillimore, JJ.) May 15.

SOUTHWELL (SURVEYOR OF TAXES) v. SAVILL BROTHERS (LIMITED). (a.)

Inland Revenue — Income tax — Deductions—"Call of licences"—Necessary annual trade expense—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), s. 2, Schedule D.

Expenses incurred by brewers in applying for new and additional licences for houses owned and leased by them, including payments made to owners of public-houses for the surrender of licences in order to enable the brewers to obtain a new licence, cannot be deducted from the profits made by the brewers and assessable to income tax under Schedule D of the Income Tax Act, 1853.

Case stated by Commissioners for Income Tax for the Division of Beacontree, in the county of Essex, held at Stratford in June, 1900.

Messrs. Savill Brothers (Limited), brewers, of Stratford, the respondents, who had been duly assessed, appealed by Mr. Phillip Savill, one of their directors, against an assessment of £35 000 in respect of their profits as brewers charged upon them for the year ending the 5th of April, 1900.

The facts were set out as follows:

The respondents carry on the trade of brewers at Stratford, and they submitted accounts showing profits for the year 1897 £31,247 6s., for 1898 £33,355 10s. 4d., and for 1899 £30,752 13s. 5d.; but in arriving at these figures they had deducted for the year 1897 £780 16s. 2d., for the year 1898 £1,576 4s. 10d., and for the year 1899 £2,242 15s. 2d., these being sums expended in connection with applications made by the company to the licensing justices for the grant of new and additional licences to houses owned and leased by them, and also to houses not owned by them, but for which the company conduct the applications for the purpose of maintaining, and, if possible, increasing the trade. These expenses consisted of law costs, printing and advertising, preparing petitions, serving notices, court fees, surveyor's fees, and payments for the "call of licences." The sums expended on this latter account during the three years were respectively £250 in 1897, £1,015 15s. in 1898, and £1,525 in 1899.

These amounts represented payments made to the owners of public-houses for the right to call for a surrender of the licences attached to such houses in the event of the justices requiring them to be surrendered before the grant of a new licence for a new house. The respondents contended that as the licensing justices for the Beacontree Division of Essex, in which the bulk of their trade was carried on, required an applicant for a new licence to offer surrenders of existing licences as a preliminary for the grant of a new licence, the amounts paid for the call of these surrenders were a necessary trade expense incurred in the ordinary course of the business of a brewer. When the applications were unsuccessful these expenses were charged to the "licensees' expenses" of the year. When the application was successful, the expenses were added to the cost of the new house. For the Crown, it was contended that the expenses referred to were not exclusively laid out for the purposes of the trade of brewers, but were altogether outside it, being an outlay of capital made with a view to the extension of their business by increasing the number of houses which would be supplied with their goods, and therefore such expenses were not allowable as deductions under the rules of Schedule D.

The Commissioners determined that, having regard to the requirements of the licensing justices, the amounts should be allowed as a necessary annual trade expense incurred by the respondents, and reduced the assessment to £31,852, being the average profits of 1897-1898-1899. They stated this case, however, for the opinion of the court, as the surveyor of taxes was dissatisfied with their decision.

Sir R. B. Finlay, A.G., and S. A. T. Rowlatt, for the Crown.

Sir Edward Clarke, K.C. and Horace Avory, K.C., for the respondents.

The COURT gave judgment for the Crown, allowing the appeal.

KENNEDY, J.—The question in this case is whether the respondents, who carry on the trade of brewers at Stratford, in estimating the profits made by them in their business for the purposes of taxation under Schedule D of the Income Tax Act, 1853, are entitled to deduct sums expended by them in connection with the applications made by them for the grant of new and additional licences to houses owned and leased by them, and also to houses not owned by them, but for which the respondents conduct the applications for the purpose of maintaining and, if possible, increasing their trade. The conclusion I have come to is that the Commissioners were wrong, and that these expenses which the brewers seek to have deducted ought not to be treated as a loss to be put against profits. They are expenses which may very well be treated as an investment made out of profits. It was contended by the respondents that as the licensing justices of the Beacontree Division required an applicant for a new licence to offer surrenders of existing licences as a preliminary to the grant of a new licence, the amount paid for the call of these surrenders was a necessary trade expense, although they admitted that when the application was successful the expenses so incurred could not be deducted from profits. On the other hand, it was contended for the Crown that the expenses referred to were an outlay of capital made by brewers with a view to the extension of their business by increasing the number of houses which would be supplied with their goods, and that such expenses were not allowable as deductions under the rule of Schedule D. When, therefore, the Commissioners allowed as a necessary annual trade expense these sums so expended and reduced the assessment accordingly, I think they were wrong. It is admitted that if the proceedings to obtain a licence were successful the expenses could not be deducted, and, therefore, I fail to see on what principle these expenses should be deducted when the proceedings were unsuccessful.

For these reasons my judgment must be for the Crown, as I do not think the respondents are entitled to deduct the expenses in arriving at their annual profits.

PHILLIMORE, J.—I am of the same opinion. The case is obscure. The question is whether the sums of money expended by brewers in obtaining new licences are to be deducted from profits. It is not clear from the case whether the sums are expended in successful pursuits or in unsuccessful pursuits, or partly in successful and partly in unsuccessful pursuits. The matter has been cleared up by the admission of Sir Edward Clarke that if and so far as they are in respect of successful applications he does not support them. He says, however, that none are in respect of successful applications. If they cannot be supported in respect of successful applications, why are they to be supported when they are in respect of unsuccessful applications? They are sums applied in extending the business, and why should those sums be deducted from the profits of brewers assessable to income tax under Schedule D? They may not really be an expenditure of capital. The profits for the year would be exactly the same whether this money was expended at the close of the year or not. It might become a profit if not used for the next year, but the applying for the renewal of these licences appears to me to be a legitimate annual trade expense. I agree that this appeal should be allowed.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitor for the Surveyor of Taxes, The Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Solicitor for the respondents, Sandilands & Co.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance, J.) May 14.

FULLERS (LIMITED) (Appellants) v. SQUIRE (Respondent). (a.)

Factory—Workshop—Shop used for process of "adapting for sale"—Factory and Workshop Act, 1878 (41 Vict. c. 16), s. 93.

A shop was used during the daytime for the selling by retail of bonbons and sweetmeats, and after the ordinary shop hours for the purpose of packing such goods in boxes ornamented and tied with ribbons, so as to make them attractive to purchasers.

Held, on these facts, that such packing was an "adapting for sale" of an article within section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, and that the premises were a "workshop" within the meaning of that section.

Case stated by G. L. Denman, Esq., metropolitan police magistrate, sitting at Marlborough-street police court.

A complaint and information was preferred by the respondent Rose Elizabeth Squire, an inspector of factories and workshops, against the appellants Fullers (Limited), under sections 13 and 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, for that they on the 19th of December, 1900, being then the occupiers of certain premises, the same being a workshop within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 to 1895, at 206, Regent-street, within the metropolitan police district, did there and then unlawfully employ a certain woman, to wit one Ada Simmonds, after the legal period of employment, contrary to the said statute.

The magistrate convicted the appellants.

By section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, the expression "workshop" means, inter alia, "any premises, room or place not being a factory within the meaning of this Act, in which premises, room or place, or within the close or curtilage or precincts of which premises, any manual labour is exercised by way of trade or for purposes of gain in or incidental to the following purposes or any of them—that is to say (a) in or incidental to the making of any article, or of part of any article, or (b) in or incidental to the altering, repairing, ornamenting, or finishing of any article, or (c) in or incidental to the adapting for sale of any article, and to which or over which premises, room or place the employer of the persons working therein has the right of access or control."

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The appellants were a firm of wholesale and retail manufacturers of bonbons, sweetmeats, and confectionery, carrying on a wholesale business at a factory at Hammersmith, and had, amongst other retail places of business, a retail shop at 206, Regent-street.

At 206, Regent-street, the appellants carried on their business on the ground, first, and top floors. On the top floor artificial flowers were sewn on to the wicker hampers hereinafter mentioned. This floor was separate and distinct from the ground and first floors, and was separately managed and regulated by the appellants, according to the provisions of the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 to 1895. The ground and first floors were used for the sale of bonbons, sweatmeats, wicker hampers, packed and decorated as hereinafter set out, cardboard boxes, and confectionery, and also as tea-rooms, and in the manner hereinafter described.

One Ada Simmonds was, on the 19th and 20th of December, 1900, in the employment of the appellants, and was employed by them at their premises at Hammersmith from 8 a.m. until noon, and afterwards on the ground and first floors at 206, Regent-street (with certain intervals), from 1 p.m. on the 19th of December to 3 a.m. on the 20th of December.

For the purposes of such last-mentioned employment Simmonds was furnished by the appellants with an assortment of bonbons and sweetmeats of various shapes, sizes, and colours, also with cardboard boxes, ornamented wicker hampers, ribbons of a variety of sizes and colours, and fancy lace paper necessary for her work hereinafter described.

From 1 p.m. on the 19th of December until 3 a.m. on the 20th of December Ada Simmonds was chiefly engaged in packing and arranging in layers in the cardboard boxes and ornamental hampers an assortment of bonbons and sweetmeats of different colours, shapes, and sizes in fancy patterns, placing sheets of lace paper between each layer of sweetmeats or bonbons, tying up the hampers and boxes when so filled with the fancy ribbons, and in arranging them with bows on the outside of the boxes and hampers with a view to rendering them more attractive to purchasers than they would be if not so tastefully sorted, arranged, packed, and bound up; and the magistrate found as a fact that the same were so rendered more attractive by the work so expended upon them, and that such work required the exercise of skill and taste on the part of Ada Simmonds.

The hampers when so filled, arranged, and dealt with were intended to be, and were, sold to customers as a whole, and at a certain fixed price for the whole, but such price was the same as that charged to customers for such ornamented hampers when empty, plus the price of the sweets, no special or separate charge being added in respect of the packing.

On behalf of the appellants, it was contended that the employment of Ada Simmonds by the appellants was not manual labour exercised by way of trade or for purposes of gain in or incidental to any of the purposes set out in section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878.

The magistrate held that that portion of the premises at No. 206, Regent-street in which Ada Simmonds was so engaged was a workshop within the meaning of section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, and that she was employed contrary to the provisions of the Factory and Workshop Acts. The question for the opinion of the court was whether the magistrate was right in convicting the appellants of the offence charged in the information.

Joseph Walton, K.C. (Given with him), for the appellants.—The provisions in section 93 were intended to deal with processes in the manufacture of articles, not with the mere preparation of articles for delivery on sale. The process of packing the bonbons and sweetmeats into boxes is not an "adapting for sale" within the section; it is merely getting the sweets ready for delivery when bought by the customer. If this process were "an adapting for sale," then all shops, such as grocers' or druggists' shops, in which articles are packed to make them ready for customers would be workshops within the meaning of the Act. There was no evidence on which the magistrate could find that the place where this woman was employed was a workshop within the meaning of section 93.

H. Sutton for the respondent was not called on.

LORD ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—This case is very near the line. The facts appear to be that the place at which the work was being carried on was, at any rate for a great part of the day, an ordinary shop, that is to say, sweetmeats and other articles were sold by retail; but the evidence was that up to 3 o'clock in the morning of the 20th of December the premises were being used for this particular operation to be carried on. It must have been continued to a very considerable extent, that is to say, for several hours after the ordinary shop hours had ceased. I do not wish to express any opinion upon the point raised by Mr. Walton, that if in an ordinary shop during shop hours packing takes place, that will of necessity bring the case within section 93 of the Act of 1878. We have to consider whether there was any evidence on which the magistrate could have come to the conclusion he did. I have no doubt that what was done does come within the words of the section. There were boxes of sweetmeats and they were being adapted for sale by the operation the packer was carrying on, namely, putting the bonbons and sweetmeats in layers, and placing paper in between the layers, and ornamenting and adorning the boxes afterwards. If this had been done in a room in a separate factory, or a building in which sweets were bought wholesale, I should have no doubt about it. I was impressed at first by the ingenious argument of Mr. Walton, but I think the magistrate was entitled to hold, on the evidence before him, that what was being done on these premises was not being done as an incident of the shop business, but was an adapting of the articles for sale. I think it is impossible to say there is no evidence on which he could come to the conclusion he has formed, and I think the appeal must be dismissed.

LAWRANCE, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellants, Beaumont & Son.

Solicitors for the respondents, Solicitor to Treasury.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance and Phillimore, JJ.) May 13.

LEE v. BENT.
BARLOW v. NOBLETT. (a.)

Adulteration—Food and drugs—Certificate of analysis, sufficiency of—Arsenic in beer—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 18.

In two prosecutions under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, for selling beer not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded, certificates of analysts were tendered as evidence which, in the one case, stated that the samples submitted to them contained "arsenic," and, in the other, "a serious quantity of arsenic."

Held, that neither of the certificates were sufficient.

These two cases involved similiar points of law under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, and were heard together.

Lee v. Bent was a case stated by justices of Eccles, in Lancashire.

An information was preferred by James Bent, the respondent, against Frank Lee, the appellant, under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, charging him with selling to the prejudice of the appellant (the purchaser) beer which was adulterated with arsenic and was not of the nature, substance and quality demanded by the purchaser. The respondent purchased from the appellant a quantity of beer, and having duly complied with all the requirements of the Sale of Food and Drug Acts, caused part thereof to be analysed by public analyst. The public analysts only delivered their certificate as follows: "To Mr. Superintendent Bent—We, the undersigned, analysts for the County of Lancaster, do hereby certify that we have received on the 11th day of December, 1900, from police-constable Chipchase, a sample of beer for analysis (which was marked No. 855), and have analysed the same, and declare the result of our analysis to be as follows: 'We are of opinion that the said sample contains arsenic.' Observations: No change has taken place in the constitution of the sample that would interfere with the analysis" (signed by the analysts).

At the hearing of the information the above certificate was tendered as evidence on behalf of the respondent; but it was contended on behalf of the appellant that the certificate was bad on the following ground: (a) that the certificate of the analyst was not in the form presented by section 18 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, and as set forth in the schedule thereto; (b) that the certificate did not state the constituent parts of the sample analysed, and did not state the quantity of arsenic alleged to be therein; (c) that the certificate did not state the weight of the sample analysed. One of the public analysts who signed the certificate gave oral evidence on behalf of the respondent. It was proved to the satisfaction of the justices that the sample contained arsenic to such an extent as to be injurious to health, and that absolutely pure beer does not contain arsenic.

The justices admitted the certificate in evidence, and being of opinion that the offence had been committed, convicted the appellant.

Barlow v. Noblett was a case stated by justices of Bury, in Lancashire.

The facts of this case were similar in all respects to those in the preceding case, with the exception that the declaration in the analyst's certificate was, "We are of opinion that the said sample contains a serious quantity of arsenic."

The certificate was admitted in evidence and the appellant was convicted.

Section 18 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, provides that "The analysis shall be in the form set forth in the schedule hereto, or to the like effect." The form referred to is as follows:—

"To ,

I, the undersigned, public analyst for the , do hereby certify that I received on the day of , 18 , from , a sample of for analysis (which then weighed), and have analysed the same, and declare the result of my analysis to be as follows: 'I am of opinion that the same is a sample of genuine'; or, 'I am of opinion that the said sample contained the parts as under, or the percentages of foreign ingredients as under.'"

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Montague Lush (Fletcher Moulton, K.C., with him) for the appellants in each case. There is not sufficient precision in the certificates. They ought to have stated the proportion of arsenic in the sample analysed: Fortune v. Hanson, 44 W. R. 431, [1896] 1 Q. B. 202, and Newby v. Sims, [1894] 1 Q. B. 478. The justices were therefore wrong in admitting them as evidence.

Joseph Walton, K.C. (Pickford, K.C., E. Sutton, and F. Mellor with him), for the respondents in each case.—A certificate need not set out the constituent parts of the sample analysed. Where the case is not one of adulteration it need only state the result of the analysis: Bakewell v. Davis, [1894] 1 Q. B. 296, and Bridge v. Howard, 45 W. R. 78, [1897] 1 Q. B. 80. The result of the analysis was sufficiently stated in both of the certificates under consideration. The certificate of the analyst is not intended to be conclusive evidence of an offence having been committed. Section 21 only provides that it shall be sufficient evidence of the facts therein stated, unless the defendant shall require that the analyst be called as a witness. A certificate is not bad because it is insufficient to warrant a conviction. In Fortune v. Hanson and Newby v. Sims, which were both cases of adulterated milk, the analysts usurped the jurisdiction of the justices by stating that the sample contained so much per cent. of "added water," without stating what were the actual proportions of milk and water. It was held that they ought to have left it to the justices to decide how much of the water was added. Here there was no such usurpation of jurisdiction. The declaration in the certificates meant that there was an appreciable quantity of arsenic in the samples.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—In the first of these cases the analyst has certified that the sample contained arsenic, and in the second case that it contained a serious quantity of arsenic. Now we are of opinion that these two certificates are not sufficient. It is very important that the practice should be uniform, and we do not think it possible, after the series of decisions on the subject, to say that the certificate of the analyst can be other than a document issued in proper form, and that that certificate ought to contain in it sufficient materials to enable the magistrates to form a judgment on the face of the certificate that the offence charged had been committed. We need not consider whether a certificate would be bad which went further, but we think, at least, it should contain that. There are many cases in which the only evidence is the certificate of the analyst. Nothing is said in these two certificates as to what ordinary beer—I will not say absolutely pure beer, but ordinary beer—contains, and nothing is said as to the degree or amount of arsenic found in the sample, except in the one case that arsenic was there, and in the other case that there was a serious quantity of arsenic. We think, having regard to the necessary protection of the person charged, that the certificates ought to contain further particulars to enable the magistrates to have before them materials on which they can come to a conclusion. I think that we could not decide otherwise without overruling several decisions which seem to us to be founded in good sense. We need not consider whether or not in every particular case it is absolutely necessary to say that the certificate must set out all the proportions of the ingredients contained in the sample, but we think we are justified in saying that these certificates are not sufficient, and the convictions in both cases must therefore be quashed.

LAWRANCE, J., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Snow, Fox, and Higginson, for Harcourt E. Clare, Preston.

Solicitors for the respondents, Grundy, Kershaw, Samson, & Co., for Grundy, Kershaw, Samson, & Co., Manchester.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. } June 10.
Admiralty. }

"THE WINKFIELD." (a.)

Ship—Admiralty—Collision—Limitation of liability—Loss of mails—Locus standi of Postmaster-General as bailee—Negligence of stranger.

The Postmaster-General, being under no liability to his bailors for property bailed to him as Postmaster-General, cannot on behalf of the bailors recover for the loss of the property bailed, the loss being caused by the negligence of a stranger.

Claridge v The South Staffordshire Tramway Co., [1892] 1 Q. B. 422, 40 W. R. Dig. 11, followed.

This was a motion brought by his Majesty's Postmaster-General to review and vary the registrar's report, dated the 29th of March, 1901, in an action by the owners of the steamship Winkfield against the owners of the steamship Mexican, in which they claimed to limit their liability under the terms of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, in respect of a collision which occurred on the 5th of April, 1900, between the steamship Mexican and steamship Winkfield.

It appeared that the collision occurred in a thick fog off Table Bay, Cape Town, and resulted in the loss of the steamship Mexican with a portion of the mails she carried.

In April of last year the owners of the steamship Winkfield commenced an action in this court in which they admitted in writing liability as to a moiety of the damages proceeded for in the action subject to their statutory right to limitation of liability.

On the 24th of July a decree limiting the liability to £32,514 17s. 10d. was obtained, and that sum was paid into court on that day, which was the amount of their £8 statutory liability.

A large number of claims had been put forward in the case, among which was one by the Postmaster-General on behalf of himself and the Postmasters-General of Cape Colony and Natal in respect of the loss of registered letters and parcels for which claims had been made upon him.

The claim formulated was (1) for the value of the lost bags and cases belonging to the Post Office, (2) for the contents of a great number of parcels shipped either from Cape Colony or Natal, and (3) for the contents of a number of registered letters from those colonies.

Sir R. Finlay, A.G., and R. B. D. Acland, for the Postmaster-General, said that a number of claims had been made upon the Post Office by the senders and owners of lost letters and parcels, and as being a convenient course and to save expense these claims had been put forward by the Postmaster-General as bailee. It had been argued against the Post Office that inasmuch as the Crown was not bound by the statutes limiting the liability, the Post Office ought not to recover against any property of the owners of the steamship Winkfield, and that the claims ought to be marshalled so as to exclude the Crown from receiving against the fund in court. The cases, Claridge v. The South Staffordshire Tramway Co. [1892] 1 Q. B. 422, 40 W. R. Dig. 11; The Minna, L. R. 2 A. & E. 97, 17 W. R. Adm. Dig. 20; and Meux v. The Great Eastern Railway Co., 43 W. R. 680, [1895] 2 Q. B. 387, were cited, it being contended that the decision in the case of Claridge v. The South Staffordshire Tramway Co. was wrong. Inasmuch, however, as the case was decided in the Divisional Court it was no doubt binding upon this court, and if it was to be reviewed it must be in the Court of Appeal.

(a.) Reported by GWYNNE HALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Scrutton, K.C., for the owners of The Mexican,

Bateson, for the owners of the cargo, and Head, for the owners of The Winkfield, were not called upon.

JEUNE, P., in delivering judgment, said that the point raised was a most important one, and if the Postmaster-General had not the power he claimed to have, he certainly ought to have it. The case, however, of Claridge v. The South Staffordshire Tramway Co., [1892] 1 Q. B. 422, was exceedingly clear on the point. It should, however, be remembered that this court, although it often followed by analogy common law authorities, was not a court of common law at all, and therefore it would be important to consider what the civil law had to say on the matter. The motion would be dismissed, with costs, and the whole matter, including the question of costs, must be considered in the Court of Appeal.

Solicitors, Sir Robert Hunter; Thomas Cooper & Co.; Jas. Ballantyne; Botterell & Roche.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). } Dec. 10.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL. (a.)

Inland revenue—Income tax—Deduction of tax from interest or annuities—"Payable out of profits or gains brought into charge to such tax"—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 8), s. 24, sub-section 3.

The London County Council raised money on loan by the creation and issue of Metropolitan Consolidated Stock, which with the dividends and sinking fund were charged on the lands, rents, and property of the council, and in addition the stockholders had the security of the rates. In the year 1897-8 the council claimed exemption from income tax on rents received by them and on interest on advances by them to other public bodies, as having been paid out "of profits or gains already brought into charge."

Held, that section 24, sub-section 3, of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, entitled them to do so, for the income tax assessed under the various schedules is one tax, and not a collection of taxes essentially distinct.

Decision of Court of Appeal (48 W. R. 294, [1900] 1 Q. B. 192) reversed.

This was an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (A. L. Smith, Collins, and Vaughan Williams, L JJ.) affirming that of the Divisional Court (Day, J., and Lawrance, J.), 48 W. R. 294, [1900] 1 Q. B. 192.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The facts are given in the report below, the question being to what extent the county council were entitled to retain the sums deducted by them in respect of income tax when they paid dividends to the holders of the Metropolitan Consolidated Stock. The sections of the Acts appear in the judgment.

Sir Edward Clarke, Q.C., and Jelf, Q.C. (Ryde with them), for the appellants.

The Attorney-General (Sir R. B. Finlay, Q.C.) and Danckwerts, Q.C. (Rowlatt with them), for the respondent.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—Acting under statutory authority, the Metropolitan Board of Works, and the London County Council as their successors, have from time to time raised money on loan by the creation and issue of stock known as Metropolitan Consolidated Stock. This stock and the dividends upon it, and the sums required to form a sinking fund are charged "indifferently" on the whole of the lands, rents, and property belonging to the council, and, in addition to the benefit of this charge, the stockholders have the security of the rates.

For the financial year 1897-8, the year to which your lordships' attention was specially directed, the dividend on Metropolitan Stock amounted in round figures to £1,140,000. On the other hand, in that year the Council received about £100,000 in rents, and about £500,000 for interest on authorized advances to other public bodies. The balance required to make up the dividend was raised by rates. In their return to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue the council charged themselves with income tax on the proceeds of rates applied towards the payment of the dividend, but they claimed exemption in respect of the rest of the money so applied as having been paid out of profits or gains already brought into charge. The commissioners disallowed the claim. They insisted that the council was bound to pay over the amount of income tax deducted from interest on Metropolitan Stock so far as the deduction was made out of moneys not brought into charge under Schedule D. It was no answer to say that the moneys had been brought into charge under some other schedule. That was the principal question in the controversy before your lordships. There was another point raised on behalf of the Crown which I confess I do not quite understand. It was seriously argued that, inasmuch as the holders of Metropolitan Stock have a charge on all the property of the council—capital and income alike—for their interest as well as for their principal, and might in case of default resort to any and every item comprised in their security, therefore it would be right and proper before default, and merely for the purpose of computing income tax, to treat the dividend on Metropolitan Stock as paid rateably out of the capital of the property belonging to the council and the different branches of their income That is an ingenious, but not, I think, a very business-like suggestion. It is enough to say that it is the plain duty of the council, not being beneficial owners of the funds which they administer, to keep down annual charges out of annual income as far as it will extend, and not, perhaps, the less so because the instructions of the Treasury, under whose financial control they are placed, require them to keep accounts distinguishing capital from income. The return to which I have already referred shows that the council has dealt with the matter properly. I cannot see that there is anything calling for further inquiry. I pass from that point. It is not, I think, open to argument. I cannot say as much for the principal matter in dispute. That involves the construction of a modern Act of Parliament.

The question depends upon the meaning and effect of sub-section 3 of section 24 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, which enacts that "upon payment of any interest of money or annuities charged with income tax under Schedule D, and not payable or not wholly payable out of profits or gains brought into charge to such tax," the rate of income tax in force at the time shall be deducted and an account rendered to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue "of the amount so deducted or of the amount deducted out of so much of the interest or annuities as is not paid out of profits or gains brought into charge as the case may be." And then the amount deducted is declared to be a debt due to the Crown and recoverable accordingly.

It will be observed that there is a change of language, and that the word "paid" takes the place of the word "payable" which occurs in the earlier part of the sentence. The result, therefore, is that so far as interest of money or annuities chargeable under Schedule D are in fact paid out of profits or gains "brought into charge," whether in law payable thereout or not, the person who makes the payment and deducts the rate of income tax is not accountable to the Crown for the duty deducted.

The difficulty which has given rise to the present claim on the part of the Crown is created by the use of the words "profits or gains brought into charge to such tax" in the earlier part of the sub-section, and the words "profits or gains brought into charge" in the latter part. What is the meaning of "such tax"? And what is the meaning of "brought into charge"? The Divisional Court and the Court of Appeal have both held that the expression "such tax," referring back to the foregoing words, means "income tax under Schedule D," and that the expression "profits or gains brought into charge" in the latter part of the sub-section means "profits or gains brought into charge under that schedule," and not "profits or gains brought into charge by virtue of the Income Tax Acts."

Now, if one had to construe the enactment with nothing but the words of the sub-section to go upon, ignoring the state of the law at the time when the enactment was passed, and supposing, as one might possibly suppose from the language used, that there was a special or peculiar sort of income tax which could be properly described as "income tax under Schedule D," still I think it would be difficult to give any satisfactory reason why the expression "such tax" should mean "income tax under Schedule D" rather than "income tax" simply, or why the expression "brought into charge" should be limited to what is brought into charge under one particular schedule. But the sub-section in question, as the Act itself declares, is introduced by way of amendment. And how can you understand the true meaning and effect of an amendment unless you bear in mind the state of the law which it is proposed to amend? It is necessary, therefore, to take a wider survey; and then, I think, the meaning of the enactment becomes plain enough. I cannot help thinking that the advisers of the Crown have somewhat misapprehended the scope and leading principles of our income tax legislation, and have not paid sufficient attention to the state of the law at the time when the Act of 1888 was passed. The consequence is that now, when the Act of 1888 has been in force for a number of years, it is discovered that a provision described in the Act as an amendment has worked a radical change in the law.

Income tax, if I may be pardoned for saying so, is a tax on income. It is not meant to be a tax on anything else. It is one tax, not a collection of taxes essentially distinct. There is no difference in kind between the duties of income tax assessed under Schedule D and those assessed under Schedule A, or any of the other schedules of charge. One man has fixed property; another lives by his wits; each contributes to the tax if his income is above the prescribed limit. The standard of assessment varies according to the nature of the source from which taxable income is derived. That is all. Schedule A contains the duties chargeable for and in respect of the property in all lands, tenements, and hereditaments capable of actual occupation. There the standard is annual value. It is difficult to see what other standard could have been adopted as a general rule. But there again, if the subject of charge be lands let at rack-rent, the annual value is "understood to be the rent by the year at which the same are let." In every case the tax is a tax on income, whatever may be the standard by which the income is measured. It is a tax on "profits or gains" in the case of duties chargeable under Schedule A, and everything coming under that schedule—the annual value of lands capable of actual occupation as well as the earnings of railway companies and other concerns connected with land—just as much as it is in the case of the other schedules of charge. And it is to be observed that the expression "profits or gains," which occurs so often in the Income Tax Acts, is constantly applied without distinction to the subjects of charge under all the schedules. I need not trouble your lordships by giving instances of this use of the expression, because I shall presently have occasion to call your lordships' attention to a section in the Act of 1842 in which it so happens that the expression "profits or gains arising from lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritages" is used to denote the annual value of lands capable of actual occupation brought into charge under Schedule A. I will only refer in passing to one rather striking example. The "general declaration" required by the Act of 1842, s. 190, Sched. G, 15, is described as "general declaration by each person returning a statement of profits under Schedules (A), (B), (D), or (E)."

Unfortunately the learned judges of the courts below took a very different view in regard to this point. That, I think, was the initial mistake. In the Divisional Court the argument on behalf of the Crown as reported was this: "The tax under Schedule A is a tax on property and is totally distinct from income tax under Schedule D." It appears from the shorthand notes that that argument was adopted by the court without any qualification. Indeed, the presiding judge seems to have held that "Schedule A" was "not part of the Income Tax Act." The passage is omitted in the regular reports, though it is really the key to the judgment. In the Court of Appeal the argument apparently was not put quite so high. But there is this observation in the leading judgment: The tax under Schedule D is a tax upon 'gains and profits,' an entirely different tax from the tax under Schedule A." The other members of the court agreed. With all deference, I do not think that that is a sound view of the Income Tax Act.

It is interesting and, I think, instructive to trace the development of income tax legislation. A very clear account of it is to be found in Mr. Stephen Dowell's excellent work. I turn at once to the original Act—the Act of 1799 (39 Geo. 3. c. 13), as amended by 39 Geo. 3. c. 22. For the purposes of the tax the income for the current year of persons to be assessed was ranged under four divisions: "I. Income arising from lands, tenements, and hereditaments. II. Income arising from personal property and from trades, professions, offices, pensions, stipends, employments and vocations. III. Income arising out of Great Britain.

V. Income not falling under any of the foregoing rules." In the form of return required from the taxpayer, which is given in a schedule, these four heads of income were represented by nineteen "cases," of which the first fourteen fell under Division I. The taxpayer had to return his total income under each and all of these cases. From this total income the taxpayer was allowed to make a great many deductions under various heads, also specified in the schedule. There were deductions for rents of all sorts. There was a deduction for "annual interest for debts," whether "personal" or charged on property enumerated in the several "cases"—a deduction for "allowances to children or other relations," and a deduction for "annuities." The total amount of deductions was to be subtracted from the total amount of income, and the difference was the "income chargeable." That general return, as Mr. Dowell observes, was regarded as the most objectionable feature in the income tax. By the Act of 1803, in lieu of a general return, particular returns of income from particular sources were required. That was the origin of the five schedules of charge with which we are now so familiar. It was not that there was any difference in kind between the income arising from the different sources. The alteration was made in order to avoid disclosure of the taxpayer's circumstances. This new method was found to work so well that it has been continued in every Income Tax Act ever since. The Act of 1853, after imposing the duties of income tax by section 1, distributes those duties in section 2 among the different Schedules A, B, C, D, and E, on the ground, as there stated, of convenience of classification and facility of collection.

Another departure was made in 1803 from the system adopted in the Act of 1799. The principle was established of taxing income at its source, and afterwards distributing the burden among those upon whose shoulders it ought to fall. Speaking generally, the deductions authorized by the Act of 1799 were prohibited altogether, and the taxpayer liable to an annual payment, whether payable out of any subject of charge or not, was authorized to deduct and retain the tax upon the payment which he was bound to make. And so the law stood when the Act of 1888 was passed.

I need not trouble your lordships with a reference to all the provisions of the Income Tax Acts which authorize a person who has paid income tax on what is not really available income, because it includes money which he has to pay over to someone else, to deduct and retain the tax upon that payment. But it is, I think, worth while to refer very briefly to sections 102, 103, and 104 of the Act of 1842. In the Act of 1842 the charge upon annuities, yearly interest of money, and other annual payments is not expressly included in Schedule D, where it was afterwards placed by the Act of 1853. It forms the subject of a distinct section. The charging section is section 102. It extends to all annual payments. The charge is to be according to, and under and subject to, the provisions by which the duty in the third case of Schedule D may be charged. Then there is a provision that "in every case where the same shall be payable out of profits or gains brought into charge by virtue of this Act" (your lordships will note those words; they extend to income chargeable under each of the five schedules), no assessment is to be made upon the person entitled to the annual payment. The whole of the profits and gains are to be charged, and the person charged in respect thereof is entitled to deduct a proportional part of the duty when he comes to make the annual payment to which he is liable. In every other case the annual payment is charged with duty in the hands of the recipient. Then section 103 imposes penalties on persons refusing to allow the deductions authorized by the Act. It is only material, as showing that these provisions with regard to annual payments extend to annual payments out of profits or gains chargeable under all the different schedules. Then comes section 104, a curious section, and one rather clumsily framed. It provides that when it is proved to the satisfaction of the commissioners "that any annual payment shall be annually paid out of the profits and gains bonâ fide accounted for and charged by virtue of this Act at the rate and according to the rules specified in Schedule D," a certificate may be granted entitling the person so assessed, upon making the annual payment, to deduct a proportionate part of the duty; and then it goes on to say that "no such certificate shall be required when such payments are to be made out of the profits or gains arising from lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritages as before mentioned, or of any office or employment of profit, or out of any annuity, stipend, or any dividend or share in such public annuities as are herein mentioned, but such deductions may be made without having obtained such certificate." So it came to this in the result, that a certificate was only required when the payment was to be made out of profits or gains chargeable under Schedule D.

A change was made by the Act of 1853 in ease of the taxpayer. Section 40 of that Act had the effect of dispensing with the certificate of the commissioners altogether. It authorized "every person" liable to the payment of rent or yearly interest of money, or any other annual payment, on making such payment to "deduct and retain thereout" the rate of duty then payable. It is obvious that that enactment was not a sufficient protection for the Crown. It contained no provision for cases where the annual payment was made out of gains or profits not brought into charge by virtue of the Act. And the person making the annual payment was not bound to make a deduction for income tax; if he did, he was apparently not bound to account to the Crown except in the case of payment out of rates under section 102 of the Act of 1842. It was to stop this gap, as it seems to me, that the enactment now under consideration was passed. It was not intended, I think, to effect a revolution in income tax law.

Now, what has the Act of 1888 really done? It is no longer optional for a person who has to make an annual payment to deduct income tax. He is bound to make the deduction, and bound to pay over to the Crown the amount deducted unless the payment comes out of income which has already paid the duty. That is a substantial improvement, and a reasonable security for payment of duty in many cases where formerly it was liable to be evaded. But to read the enactment as imposing a double duty would be contrary to the whole scope of income tax legislation, and whimsical in the highest degree, when you consider that the double burden would necessarily fall upon the fundholder, in whose case the collection of duty is certain, while a person chargeable under Schedule D would be expressly exempted from double duty.

It seems to me that the mistake comes from misreading sub-section 3 and making a pause in the sentence at a wrong place, and so treating the words "income tax under Schedule D" as a compound expression instead of connecting the words "under Schedule D" with "charged," to which they properly belong. When the enactment speaks of "interest of money or annuities charged with income tax under Schedule D," it does not refer to such interest or annuities as being charged with a special kind of income tax. There is really no such thing as income tax under Schedule D in that sense. The expression only means "assessed to income tax in accordance with the provisions of Schedule D."

It seems to me, therefore, that the contention put forward on behalf of the Crown cannot be maintained; and I am of opinion that the information must be dismissed with costs both here and below, and I move your lordships accordingly.

Lord DAVEY.—I had prepared the judgment which which I am about to read before I had the advantage of seeing that which has been delivered by my noble and learned friend Lord Macnaghten. There is necessarily some repetition in what I have written; but I apologise to your lordships for troubling you with the same matter twice over. I think it better, as we are differing from the court below, to read my own judgment.

I am against the contention of the Crown on both the points which have been argued. The enactment on the construction of which the case turns is the 3rd sub-section of section 24 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888; but in order to understand this section it will be proper to refer to a few sections of the earlier Income Tax Acts. By the 10th rule of section 60 of the Act of 1842, which is applicable to Schedule A, it is provided (reading it shortly) that where any lands are subject or liable to the payment of (inter alia) any annual payment thereupon reserved or charged the owner may retain the proportionate part of the tax out of such annual payment. The person entitled to receipt of the annual payment is bound to allow the deduction, and the owner is discharged of so much money as if the same had actually been paid to the person entitled to the annual payment. An annual payment of course includes interest reserved by the year on a mortgage, notwithstanding the suggestion of Mr. Danckwerts to the contrary. It has been continuously so construed by landowners, mortgagees, and the Crown, and if anything were wanted to make clear that which was clear enough before, it will be found in the 11th rule, which makes special provision for the case of a mortgagee in possession who receives the rents and pays himself his own interest, allowing the amount of the tax on his interest to the mortgagor. Section 102 of the same Act brings the yearly interest of money, whether payable as a charge upon any property or as a reservation thereout or as a personal debt or obligation, within the third case of Schedule D; but it is provided that where the same shall be "payable out of profits or gains brought into charge by virtue of this Act" (your lordships will observe the language) no assessment is to be made upon the person entitled to such interest, but the whole of such profits or gains is to be charged with the duty upon the person liable to make the payment, and he is entitled to deduct the proportionate amount of the tax from the yearly interest, and is thereby discharged of so much money as such deduction shall amount unto. I construe the words "profits or gains brought into charge by virtue of this Act" as including all annual income charged with the tax under any of the schedules, and not as confined to profits charged under Schedule D. This is, I think, the natural meaning of the words, but it is made clear by the terms of section 104, enabling the commissioners to grant a certificate of the tax having been paid, and making such certificate a condition precedent to the deduction where the annual payment is made out of profits and gains "charged by virtue of this Act at the rate and according to the rules specified in Schedule D." Then follows a proviso in these terms:

"Provided always that no such certificate shall be required where such payments are to be made out of the profits or gains arising from lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritages as before mentioned, or of any office or employment of profit, or out of any annuity, pension, stipend, or any dividend or share in such public annuities as are herein mentioned, but such deductions may be made without having obtained any certificate."

Your lordships will observe, in passing, the bearing which the language of these sections has upon one of the arguments addressed to us, of which more hereafter. It is not open to doubt, and was not disputed, that sections 60 and 102 alike mean that the person paying the yearly interest may deduct and retain the amount of the tax for his own benefit, and the scheme of the Act is so far clear and is in favour of the taxpayer. It was, no doubt, considered that the real income of an owner of incumbered property, or of property charged (say) with an annuity under a will, is the annual income of the property, less the interest on the incumbrance or the annuity, and the mortgagee or annuitant and the owner of the property are, in a sense, entitled between them to the income, and therefore the Crown receiving the tax on the whole income, in the first instance, from the owner, has no further claim against the mortgagee or annuitant on whose account the owner is deemed to have paid as well as on his own; or, in other words, the Crown under this Act cannot demand the tax twice over on the same income.

The only other section I need refer to is section 40 of the Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c 34), by which persons liable to the payment of any yearly interest or other annual payment, either as a charge on any property or as a personal debt or obligation, are empowered to deduct the income tax thereout.

I now turn to the section to be construed, which is in pari materia with and complementary to the earlier enactments. The words are:

"Upon payment of any interest of moneys or annuities charged with income tax under Schedule D, and not payable or not wholly payable out of profits or gains brought into charge to such tax, the person by or through whom such interest or annuities shall be paid shall deduct thereout the rate of income tax in force at the time of such payment, and shall forthwith render an account to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue of the amount so deducted, or of the amount deducted out of so much of the interest or annuities as is not paid out of profits or gains brought into charge, as the case may be, and such amount shall be a debt due from such person to Her Majesty and recoverable as such accordingly."

I confess I should have thought the meaning of these words sufficiently plain when read with the earlier enactments. Their general effect is to make it compulsory on the person paying taxable interest of money (not payable out of income already taxed) to deduct the tax and account for it to the Crown (as in such a case he would be bound to do) instead of leaving the deduction to his option, as was done by section 40 of the Act of 1853. But the singular thing is that the learned Attorney-General and his junior, while they tell us that this is a mere collecting section for improvement of the machinery of collecting the tax, and not a charging section, nevertheless give a construction to the words which seriously and materially increases the burden on the subject, and enables the Crown in the present case, and other similar cases, to claim payment of the tax twice over. They say that the words "brought into charge to such tax" mean "to income tax under Schedule D," and the section therefore applies to all interest charged upon or payable out of income not within that schedule. In other words, the effect (they say) of the section is to deprive the subject of the benefit of rule 10 of section 60 and section 102 of the Act of 1842. The incumbered owner of land or of property or income within Schedule C and E must deduct the tax from his incumbrancer's interest, but pay it over to the Crown, instead of retaining it for his own benefit as previously he was entitled to do. One wonders why it has taken ten years or more to develop this view of section 24 of the Act of 1888, which, if correct, must be immensely beneficial to the Crown.

In my opinion, this construction of the section is entirely wrong. Grammatically I think it wrong. I think that the words "charged with income tax under Schedule D" mean "charged under Schedule D with income tax," and the words, "such tax" mean the tax which is called in the Act "income tax." It is said that the tax imposed on property within Schedule A is not strictly an income tax, because it is levied on the annual value of property and not on the profits received by the owner. This, no doubt, is so, and if one were writing a treatise on taxation it would be proper to refer to this distinction. But the question is, what do the words "income tax" mean in the language of the Legislature and in this Act? I believe the expression is not used in either of the principal Acts of 1842 and 1853, but by the Short Titles Act, 1892, these statutes have received the title of the Income Tax Acts of 1842 and 1853. The first instance of the words being used by the Legislature of which I am aware is in the title of another Act of 1853, relating to deduction in respect of life insurance. But in an Act of 1856, for relieving Scotch landlords in respect of public burdens not borne by landlords in England, "income tax" is the expression used for describing the tax levied under Schedule A. And not to weary your lordships, the words may be found in all the subsequent Acts (which have been passed almost yearly) as describing the tax which is levied under all the five schedules without distinction. In this Act of 1888, section 24 is one of a group of sections collected under the heading of "Income Tax." By section 23 it is enacted that there shall be charged, collected, and paid the following duties of income tax under all the five schedules. I come to the conclusion that the expression "income tax," in the language of the Legislature, is a generic description of the tax which is levied under all the schedules alike, and is so used in section 24.

Again, it is said (if I understood Mr. Danckwerts rightly) that the expression "profits and gains" has a technical, or almost technical, meaning, as descriptive only of the taxable subjects comprised in Schedule D. No doubt from the nature of the case the word "gains" is more frequently, though not exclusively, used in Schedule D. But unluckily for the argument, the word "profits" is the word selected by the Legislature for describing generally the subjects of taxation under the Income Tax Acts. The title to, as well the Act of 1842 as that of 1853 is "An Act for granting to Her Majesty duties on profits arising from property, professions, trades, and offices." I have already drawn attention to the language of section 102, and to the use of the words "profits or gains arising from lands, tenements, hereditaments, and heritages" in section 104 of the Act of 1842. The truth is that the income tax is intended to be a tax upon a person's income or annual profits, and although (for conceivable, and no doubt good reasons) it is imposed in respect of the annual value of land, that arrangement is but the means or machinery devised by the Legislature for getting at the profits. Comparing sections 102 and 104 of the Act of 1842 with this section, I think the words "profits or gains brought into charge to such tax" are intended to be, and are the exact equivalent of the words "profits or gains brought into charge by virtue of this Act" in section 102. I am therefore of opinion that the words "profits or gains" are apt words, and the words chosen by the Legislature for describing not only the taxable subjects under Schedule D, but also those comprised in Schedules A and B and the other schedules; and I hold that the London County Council are entitled to retain for their own benefit so much of the deduction made by them from the interest paid by them to their mortgagees in respect of income tax as is equal to the income tax paid by them on their real estate under Schedule A, or, which comes to the same thing, to account to the Crown only for the deducted income tax on so much of the interest as is not paid out of their income which has already been taxed.

On the second point I find it difficult to express myself with becoming respect. The contention is that as the interest on their Consolidated Stock is charged on the whole of the lands, rents, and property belonging to the council and on their rates, such interest ought for the benefit of the Crown to be apportioned rateably over all the subjects of the charge, and only a rateable proportion deemed to be paid out of their income from rents or from interest receivable by them from their own debtors. The proposition has the merit of novelty. Admittedly there is no authority for it. The attention of your lordships was not called to any statutory enactment directing any such procedure, or to any principle of law which prescribes it. On the contrary, the general principle of payment in due course of administration is to pay annual charges in the first place out of annual income. It is not required by the Income Tax Acts in order to raise the right of deduction and retention that the interest or annual payment shall be exclusively charged upon or payable out of profits or gains brought into charge. It is enough if the interest is charged upon or payable out of the taxable income, though there may be other subjects of charge. But the mortgagor cannot, of course, retain against the Crown more income tax than he has paid. One of the learned judges in the Court of Appeal seems to have thought the case might be different if the county council had made some appropriation of their funds, though it is difficult to see how any account-keeping by the debtor could alter the rights of the Crown. If such appropriation be wanted, I find it in the regulations approved by the Treasury under the statutory powers for the division of the account of the Consolidated Loans Fund into an income account and a capital account.

I am of opinion that the judgment appealed from should be reversed, and that the information should be dismissed with costs, and the respondent should also pay the costs of the appellants in the Court of Appeal and in this House.

Lords BRAMPTON and ROBERTSON concurred.

Lord LINDLEY.—The main question raised by this appeal turns on the true construction of section 24, sub-section 3, of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 8). This enactment has no special reference to the London County Council, but is a general enactment applicable to that body, inasmuch as they have to pay interest to the holders of their Consolidated Stock.

The language of the enactment is such that, if it had to be construed by itself, I should feel some difficulty in putting upon it any other interpretation than that which has been put upon it by the court of first instance and by the Court of Appeal, and which is contended for by the Crown. In other words, I should read "such tax" in section 24, sub-section 3, as applying to income tax under Schedule D, and not as applying to income tax generally. But the enactment in question cannot be read by itself. Its object is simply to cure a defect in prior enactments, not to remodel them. Section 24, sub-section 3, must be read with them, and, so far as its language permits, it must be so construed as to accomplish its special object and produce with them results which are in conformity with the principles on which they are framed, and with the scheme of taxation contained in their provisions. The construction to which I have alluded appears to me to be quite inconsistent with those principles and with such scheme. It introduces anomalies which are startling and irrational, and which there is no reason to suppose that the Legislature ever contemplated. The judgments of Lord Macnaghten and Lord Davey, which I have had the advantage of reading, have made this so clear, that it is quite unnecessary for me to say more upon this point. The language of section 24, sub-section 3, is by no means so plain and free from ambiguity as to justify a construction which leads to such results; and if authority is wanted to shew that the Income Tax Acts must be treated as a whole, such authority will be found in the decision of this House in Colquhoun v. Brooks, 38 W. R. 289, 14 App. Cas. 493. The courts below have not, in my opinion, given sufficient weight to those sections in the earlier Acts to which our attention was called by the appellants, and which have been so fully commented upon by the noble lords who have preceded me.

I also agree with what they have said on the subordinate question of apportionment.

For the reasons given by them, I have come to the conclusion that the judgments appealed from cannot be supported, and that the appeal should therefore be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for appellants, W. A. Blaxland.

Solicitor of Inland Revenue, for respondent.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Rigby, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) — July 5, 12.

In re BAKER.
Ex parte LUPTON. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Lease—Assignment—Mortgage by sub-demise — Bankrupt assignee — Disclaimer — Vesting order—Exclusion—Application by lessor—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 55, sub-section 6.

Where the trustee in bankruptcy of an assignee of a lease has disclaimed the lease which the bankrupt had mortgaged by a sub-demise, the original lessor is, under section 55 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, entitled, notwithstanding the solvency of the original lessee, to apply to the court for an order vesting the property in the mortgagee subject to the same liabilities as the bankrupt was subject to under the original lease at the date when the bankruptcy petition was filed, and if the mortgagee declines to accept such an order he will be excluded from all interest in and security upon the property.

This was an appeal from a decision of Mr. Registrar Giffard.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It appeared that on the 23rd of November, 1889, Mrs. Schlösser leased a house in Gerrard-street, Leicester-square, to Vincenzo Columbati for twenty-one years from the 25th of March, 1889, at a yearly rent of £100, and subject to the lessee's covenants.

On the 10th of February, 1890, Columbati died intestate. His widow was his administratrix, and on the 16th of October, 1890, she, in consideration of £200, assigned the house for the residue then unexpired of the term, and also the goodwill of his business, to Fernando Cima.

In January, 1892, Cima assigned the house for the then residue of the term and the goodwill to Richard Baker.

On the 22nd of February, 1899, Baker mortgaged the house by sub-demise for the residue unexpired of the term, less the last day thereof, to Isabella Lewis, widow.

Baker afterwards made a second mortgage of the house to Messrs. Nicholson

On the 4th of January, 1900, Mrs. Lewis died.

In February, 1901, Baker was adjudicated a bankrupt.

On the 13th of May, 1901, the trustee in the bankruptcy executed a disclaimer of the lease.

On the 18th of June, 1901, the registrar, on the application of Mrs. Schlösser, the original lessor, made an order that, unless Messrs. Nicholson should within fourteen days elect to accept and apply for an order vesting in them the leasehold house and making them subject to the same liabilities as the bankrupt was subject to under the lease in respect of the premises at the date of the bankruptcy petition, they should be excluded from all interest in and security upon the premises; and, further, that, if Messrs. Nicholson should not elect to accept such order as aforesaid within the fourteen days, then, unless the executors of Mrs. Lewis should within seven days from the expiration of the fourteen days elect to accept and apply for an order vesting in them the leasehold premises and making them subject to the same liabilities as the bankrupt was subject to under the lease in respect of the premises at the date of the bankruptcy petition, they should be excluded from all interest in and security upon the said premises.

The order was made without notice to Columbati's administratrix or to Cima.

The administratrix could not be found.

The executors of Mrs. Lewis appealed.

Cooper Willis, K.C., and Muir Mackenzie, for the appellants, contended that as there was still someone liable on the covenants—namely, the original lessee or his representatives, the lessor was not entitled to the order. Such an order had never been made where there was a barrier of two solvent persons between the lessor and the bankrupt.

They relied upon some observations of Cave, J., in In re Cock, Ex parte Shilson, 36 W. R. 187, 20 Q. B. D. 343.

Wace, for the lessor.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 12.—RIGBY, L.J., expressed his agreement with the decision of the learned registrar.

COLLINS, L.J., after stating the facts and reading the order of the registrar, said that the effect of the order was to put the mortgagees to the option of accepting the property subject to the liabilities of the bankrupt under the lease, or of having their interests in the property determined. The executors of the first mortgagee appealed, and they said that by reason of the fact that the original lessee and an assignee of the lease intervened between the lessor and the bankrupt and continued liable to the lessor, and that the lessee (as it was suggested, though there was no evidence about it) was solvent, section 55 did not apply, and, though the mortgagee might be compelled at the instance of the intervening persons to accept the option which had been imposed on him, he could not be compelled to do so at the instance of the lessor. In his lordship's opinion the question had been already decided by two cases to which he would refer to presently. His lordship then read the clauses of section 55. That section had been the subject of discussion and decision. In In re Cock it was held by the late Cave, J., and the present Master of the Rolls that the lessor was, within the meaning of sub-section 6, a person interested in the property, and was entitled to put the machinery of that sub-section in motion, and to apply for an order under it. Another step a long way forward was also taken in In re Cock, for it was held that, though the lessor might not be in a position himself to ask for a vesting order, still he might put the machinery in motion for the purpose of ascertaining whether a sub-lessee would accept the property subject to the bankrupt's liabilities in respect of it, or give up his interest in it. That step in advance was taken in In re Cock, and the view of the Divisional Court there was confirmed by the Court of Appeal in In re Finley, 37 W. R. 6, 21 Q. B. D. 475. It was contended that, though this was the position of the lessor, the decision did not apply when the original lessee remained liable to him upon the covenants in the lease, notwithstanding that he had assigned it. But, it having been decided that the lessor could put the machinery in motion, it seemed to his lordship that there was nothing in this point. The lessor still retained an interest in the property notwithstanding the assignment, and the decision was that a person who retained an interest might put the machinery in motion, even though he could not obtain a vesting order himself. This was made clear by the decision of the Court of Appeal in In re Morgan, 37 W. R. 344, 22 Q. B. D. 592, the facts of which were nearly identical with those of the present case, with this difference, that there the application for the order was made by the original lessee. Exactly the same objection might have been raised there as had been raised here, for the lessee there had an assignee from whom he was entitled to a continuing indemnity against liability to the lessor, just as here the lessor had the liability of the original lessee. The lessee was (as the lessor was here) in the same position as before the bankruptcy. He had a solvent person who was bound to indemnify him. And, notwithstanding this, the court on the lessee's application made an order similar to that made in the present case. Bowen, L.J., made the following observations: "Various persons are entitled under the section to apply for an order vesting the property in themselves or in someone else. The application may be made by any person either claiming any interest in the property or under any liability in respect of it which is not discharged by the Act. It is obvious that in the case of a lease there may be many persons who claim to be interested in the property, and many others who, even if they have no interest in it, have come under some liability in respect of it. All these persons have a right to compete for a vesting order if they desire it. Primâ facie the court would not make an order vesting the property in one out of the class who have a right to apply, and who may possibly be injured by an order vesting the property in someone else, without giving the other members of the class an opportunity of being heard. But it is obvious that, in the case of a lease for a long term, if you were to insist on a rigid rule that every member of the class must be served, the expense would be enormous, and in the result it would be barren of any fruit, for the great majority of the class would not care a straw about the matter. Sub-section 6 of section 55 says that the court may make the order 'on hearing such persons as it thinks fit.' The registrar is entitled to deal with the matter broadly, and in a businesslike way, and if he sees that the interests of any person are likely to be really affected by the order he may say that that person must be served with notice. If, on the other hand, he thinks that the interest of any person is merely technical, he may deal with the matter in a broader way, and proceed without requiring such a person to be served. The applicant has to submit himself to the discretion of the registrar. If he omits to serve some person who in the interests of justice ought to have an opportunity of being heard on the application, he exposes himself to the risk of having to bear the costs resulting from his improvidence. Up to the time when the matter comes before the registrar the applicant is left free, but then the registrar must exercise his discretion as to the persons who ought to be served." And the Lord Justice proposed an order in the following terms, which the court adopted: "A vesting order in the terms of the notice of motion. The applicant to have his costs in the court below. No costs to be given of the appeal. The order is not to be drawn up for a month. Notice is to be given forthwith by the applicant's solicitors to the lessor and to Evans (the assignee of the lease), or, if he is dead, to his legal personal representative, if there be any. An affidavit of service of the notice, or of the facts which excuse it, is to be lodged with the registrar within fourteen days. Liberty will be reserved to the lessor and to Evans, or his personal representative, to apply to this court to rescind or vary the order at any time before this day month." So that, in that case, the order was made, although the assignee of the lease had not been served with notice. The result of these two cases governed the present case. This application having been made by one of a class who were entitled to apply, there remained only the question whether the proper persons had been served with notice. No one ought to be finally excluded until it had been ascertained whether he had more than a merely technical interest in the matter. In the present case the original lessee had a shadowy interest, but his rights were in no way affected by the registrar's order, which merely put the two mortgagees to their election. If the lessor should desire to obtain an order vesting the property in himself, he would have to institute other proceedings for the purpose. Some observations made by Cave, J., in In re Cock, 20 Q. B. D., at p. 348, had been relied upon, but in his lordship's opinion they did not apply to the matter now in hand. The learned judge was not then dealing with the question who was entitled to put the machinery in motion, but with the question of obtaining a vesting order. When once you had the right person making the application, there remained only the question of serving the right person with notice. In his lordship's opinion the learned registrar's decision was right, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

ROMER, L.J., agreed. It was clear from the words of section 55, and from the authorities, that the lessor was a person claiming an interest in the property within the meaning of the section, and was, therefore, entitled to make the application. He was not the less so because the original lessee remained liable upon the covenants in the lease. On this application clearly the first person entitled to a vesting order was the mortgagee by sub-demise, and the court had rightly given him the option. The court was not bound to go on and make a further order vesting the property in the event of the mortgagees declining to take it. The practice was to make such an order as had been made in the present case. It was a matter of discretion whether the registrar should require any other person to be served. No doubt the court might have insisted on having the lessee before it, but it was not bound to do so. The mortgagee was in no way prejudiced by the order, nor was the lessee who was not present when it was made. The mortgagee was not concerned with the rights and liabilities of the lessee, and if it should turn out that the lessee was a solvent person, his lordship did not see why he should not apply for an order vesting the property in him. So much for the technical objections. On the substance of the case there was still less to be said for the mortgagee. He claimed only through the assignee of the lease, and had only such rights as the assignee had. It would be absurd to suppose that the mortgagee could hold the property without paying the rent and performing the covenants. Nor could his lordship see that the mortgagee had any right to claim any further delay, or to wait until the landlord should re-enter or take proceedings against the lessee upon his covenants. The appeal failed both in form and substance.

Appeal dismissed. Leave to appeal to House of Lords refused.

Solicitors, Nash, Field, & Co.; Boyce & Son.

From K. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, M.R., and Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ.) July 8.

DICKSEE v. HOSKINS. (a.)

Metropolis—Building—Public-house—Separation of part used for trade from part used as dwelling-house—Fire-resisting materials—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), s. 74, sub-section 2.

On the hearing of an objection by a district surveyor that the erection of a proposed beerhouse without the use of fire-resisting materials would be in contravention of section 74, sub-section 2, of the London Building Act, 1894, the magistrate found as a fact that part of the building was intended to be used for the purposes of the trade of a beerhouse, and that part was intended to be used as a dwelling-house for the licensed occupier, but he held that the case was governed by Carritt v. Godson, [1899] 2 Q. B. 193, 47 W. R. Dig. 126, and he accordingly overruled the objection.

Held (reversing the decision of the King's Bench Division, ante, p. 523), that on the finding of the magistrate the objection must be held to be good.

Appeal from the decision of a Divisional Court (Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance, J.) on a special case stated by a metropolitan police magistrate, ante, p. 523.

On the hearing of an appeal under section 150 of the London Building Act, 1894, it appeared that a builder proposed to erect a building to be used as a beerhouse, and that the district surveyor objected that the proposed erection would be in contravention of section 74, sub-section 2, which enacts as follows: "In every building exceeding ten squares in area used in part for purposes of trade or manufacture and in part as a dwelling-house, the part used for purposes of trade or manufacture shall be separated from the part used as a dwelling-house by walls and floors constructed of fire-resisting materials, and all passages, staircases, and other means of approach to the part used as a dwelling-house shall be constructed throughout of fire-resisting materials." The facts of the case are fully set out ante, p. 523.

The magistrate found as a fact that part of the building was intended to be used for the purposes of the trade of a beerhouse, and that part was intended to be used as a dwelling-house for the licensed occupier; but he held that the case was governed by the decision in Carritt v. Godson, [1899] 2 Q.B. 193, 47 W. R. Dig. 126, and that, in accordance with that authority, the erection of the proposed building without the use of fire-resisting materials would not be in contravention of the Act, and he stated a special case for the opinion of the King's Bench Division.

The Divisional Court affirmed the decision of the magistrate.

The district surveyor appealed.

Avory, K.C., and H. W. Rowsell, for the appellant.

Danckwerts, K.C., and Craies, for the respondent.

A. L. SMITH, M.R.—In this case the magistrate has found as a fact that the proposed building is intended to be used in part for the purposes of trade and in part as a dwelling-house. I do not agree with that finding, but I am bound by it. It seems to me that the magistrate was inconsistent in arriving at that finding and in holding at the same time that the case was governed by Carritt v. Godson. In that case the judges were of opinion that the building there in question was not "used in part for the purposes of trade or manufacture, and in part as a dwelling-house." Here we have an express finding that the building is to be so used. I am of opinion that we must accept that finding, and it then follows that the appeal must be allowed.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS and STIRLING, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the appellant, W. A. Blaxland.

Solicitor for the respondent, P. G. Gates.

From Q. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, M.R., and Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ.) July 1.

ANTONIADA v. SMITH.
H. W. SMITH, Claimant. (a.)

Bill of sale—Registration—Absolute bill of sale—Non-renewal of registration—Bill of sale given by grantee of first bill of sale—Subsequent execution against grantor of first bill of sale—Apparent possession—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), ss. 8, 11.

In 1893 the defendant, by an absolute bill of sale, assigned the furniture in the house in which he resided, and of which he was the tenant, to a person who also resided in the same house. This bill of sale was duly registered, but the registration was not renewed. In November, 1900, the grantee gave a bill of sale of the furniture to the claimant to secure an advance, and this bill of sale was duly registered. Subsequently the furniture, which had remained at the same house where the defendant and the grantee of the first bill of sale resided, was seized in execution of a judgment recovered by the plaintiff against the defendant, and was claimed by the claimant under his bill of sale. Upon an interpleader issue,

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that, as there was no execution creditor of the defendant in existence at the time when the bill of sale to the claimant was given, so as to avoid the first bill of sale under section 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, the claimant's title to the furniture was valid.

Appeal from the judgment of the Divisional Court (Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance, J.).

On the 14th of October, 1893, the defendant by an absolute bill of sale assigned the furniture in a house, where he resided and of which he was tenant, to his mother-in-law, Mrs. Melland, who also resided with him in the house. This bill of sale was duly registered but the registration was not renewed.

On the 8th of March, 1894, Mrs. Melland gave a bill of sale over the furniture by way of mortgage, and this bill of sale was duly registered and re-registered.

On the 14th of November, 1900, this bill of sale was paid off, and Mrs. Melland gave a fresh bill of sale of the furniture to the claimant as security for an advance. This bill of sale was duly registered.

Subsequently the furniture, which had remained in the same house all the time where the defendant and Mrs. Melland were residing, was seized under a fi. fa. in execution of a judgment recovered by the plaintiff against the defendant, and was claimed by the claimant under his bill of sale.

An interpleader issue was tried in the Croydon County Court, when the judge gave judgment for the claimant, and the Divisional Court affirmed his judgment.

The plaintiff by leave appealed.

Cababé, for the plaintiff.—The bill of sale given to Mrs. Melland, not having been re-registered as required by section 11 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, her title to the goods was defective, and the bill of sale was void as against the plaintiff, the execution creditor, under section 8 of the Act. Her bill of sale being void, she could give no better title to the goods than she herself had: Karet v. Kosher Meat Association, 25 W. R. 691, 2 Q. B. D. 361. She had a defeasible title to the goods. The claimant, who derived his title through her, has no better title than she had, and therefore as against the execution creditor the claimant's title is bad, the furniture being in the apparent possession of the defendant, the execution debtor, within the meaning of section 4 of the Act. In Cookson v. Swire, 33 W. R. 181, 9 App. Cas. 653, the original bill of sale was a spent document, and had been put an end to. In the present case the bill of sale to Mrs. Melland was the basis of her title to the furniture, and was in no way a spent document. The plaintiff is therefore entitled to succeed.

Le Riche, for the claimant.—Section 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878—which applies to this case because the bill of sale given to Mrs. Melland was an absolute one—does not avoid the bill of sale ab initio for want of registration, but only avoids it as against a trustee in bankruptcy or execution creditor of the grantor when the goods remain in his apparent possession. At the time when Mrs. Melland gave the bill of sale to the claimant there was no trustee in bankruptcy or execution creditor of the defendant, and therefore she had a good title to the goods, and could transfer a good title to the claimant: Cookson v. Swire. He also contended, alternatively, that, as Mrs. Melland lived in the house where the furniture was, she was in possession of it, and therefore it was not in apparent possession of the defendant.

Cababé replied.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—In my opinion the judgment of the Divisional Court is right. In November, 1900, Mrs. Melland was the holder of an absolute bill of sale over the furniture given to her by her son-in-law, the defendant. It is admitted that that bill of sale, being an absolute one, is governed by the Act of 1878. That bill was duly registered when it was given, and under the Act it should have been re-registered within five years, which was not done. Then came a bill of sale given by Mrs. Melland, intermediate between the above-mentioned bill of sale and the one given by her to the claimant. That intermediate bill of sale is of no importance in the case except to connect the transactions together. Mrs. Melland, being minded to pay off this intermediate bill of sale, applied to the claimant to advance the money necessary for the purpose, and the claimant did so. The bill of sale was accordingly paid off, and in November, 1900, Mrs. Melland gave a bill of sale over the furniture to the claimant as security for the advance. That bill of sale, being one given by way of security, was governed by the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, and it was duly registered. Subsequently the plaintiffs issued execution upon a judgment recovered against the defendant, and the furniture was taken under the execution. The claimant thereupon claimed the furniture under the bill of sale to him of November, 1900. Primâ facie that is a valid claim. It is objected that the claim is not a good one, because the claimant has to trace his title through a bill of sale given by the defendant to Mrs. Melland, which bill of sale was not re-registered as required by section 11 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878. It seems to me that that objection to the claimant's title to the furniture is not a sound one. Though the bill of sale given to Mrs. Melland was not re-registered at the end of five years—namely, in October, 1898, still when she gave the bill of sale to the claimant in November, 1900, there was at that time no trustee in bankruptcy or execution creditor of the defendant against whom the bill of sale given by the defendant would have been void, and who could have claimed the furniture comprised therein. It must be remembered that section 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, does not render the bill of sale void ipso facto for want of registration, but only avoids it as against (so far as material) the trustee in bankruptcy or execution creditor of the grantor, if the goods are in his possession or apparent possession. In these circumstances it seems to me that the decision of the House of Lords in Cookson v. Swire, covers the present case. There the bill of sale was defective, as in this case, for want of renewal of registration. In that case the grantee of a bill of sale given in 1873, the registration of which had not been renewed, demanded payment, and on default took possession of the goods and sold them to a purchaser, who, not being able to pay for them, gave the vendor a bill of sale over them which was duly registered. The goods having been afterwards seized under a fi. fa. against the grantor of the bill of sale in 1873, it was held that, the sale by the grantee of that bill of sale being an absolute and bonâ fide transfer of the property, that bill of sale was spent and satisfied, there being no trustee in bankruptcy or execution creditor of the grantor who at that time could have intervened and claimed the goods. In my opinion that case covers the present case. That conclusion is fortified when we remember that under the Act of 1878 there is no need to register a bill of sale at all unless the goods comprised therein are in the possession, or apparent possession, of the grantor. At the time of the execution in this case can it be said that the goods were in the apparent possession of the defendant? There are two answers to such a suggestion. First, if the execution creditor desired to rely on such analyzation, he should have asked for a finding from the county court judge upon it. He has not got any finding that the goods at the time of the execution were in the apparent possession of the defendant. In the next place, it would be quite useless to send the case down for a new trial upon the ground that the omission to ask for such a finding was an oversight. So far as the evidence goes there is nothing to dispossess the actual possession of Mrs. Melland, which, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, I should infer from the fact that she was living in the house where the furniture was, where, no doubt, the judgment debtor was also living. It would require cogent evidence to show that in such circumstances the furniture was in the apparent possession of the judgment debtor. There is no such evidence in the present case. From the definition of "apparent possession" in section 4 of the Act of 1878 it would, to my mind, be difficult to prove apparent possession in the grantor where the grantee has taken more than mere formal possession. In these circumstances it would be useless to send the case down for a new trial upon this point. The appeal must therefore be dismissed.

A. L. SMITH, M.R.—I agree.

STIRLING, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I only wish to add a word with reference to the case of Karet v. Kosher Meat Supply Association, which is dealt with by Lord Selborne in Cookson v. Swire. In Karet's case there was no registered bill of sale when the goods comprised therein were seized in execution. Lord Selborne said (9 App. Cas., at p. 663): "It is not sufficient to say that the same thing might have happened if it had been an absolute transfer by bill of sale. I assume that it might have been, and I agree that the argument probably would have been the same. If the subsequent transferee in that case, as in this case, leaves the goods in the apparent possession of the person who is the grantor of the original bill of sale, and himself does not register his own title, if his title is by an absolute bill of sale, or if he grants a title to somebody else, whether absolute or conditional, and if that person does not register it, then he in the one case, and his assignee in the other, will be liable, no doubt, to have his title defeated by a subsequent execution; not because the person to whom the first bill of sale was given has not registered it, but because the person who has got the second bill of sale has not registered it, and leaves it in a position of danger." In the present case the claimant, who is the assignee from Mrs. Melland, has duly registered his bill of sale.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, W. H. Lane.

Solicitor for the claimant, Arthur Price.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Byrne, J. — June 6.

In re HARVEY.
HARVEY v. HARVEY. (a.)

Settlement—Fines and recoveries—Estate tail in personalty — Tenant for life — Disentailing deed — Capital of personal estate to be invested in the purchase of real estate after death of tenant for life—Real estate to be held to the uses of settlement—Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), ss. 1, 71.

A tenant in tail may, with the consent of the tenant for life under the settlement, disentail an estate tail in personalty whereof the income is directed to be paid to a person still living, and the capital after his death, is directed to be invested in real estate to be settled to the uses of the settlement.

Fordham v. Fordham, 13 W. R. 197, 34 Beav. 59, followed.

This was a summons to determine the effect of a disentailing deed upon a residuary personal estate directed to be laid out in the purchase of land.

The plaintiff was Sir Charles Harvey, Bart., and the defendants were Charles Robert Lambart, eldest son of the said Sir C. Harvey, Edward Harvey and Roger Kerrison, and Herbert Haynes Twining and Edward Kerrison.

The facts of the case were as follows:

General Sir Robert John Harvey, Knight, deceased, grandfather of the plaintiff, by his will, dated the 22nd day of January, 1852, gave and devised all and singular his freehold messuages, farms, lands, tenements, and hereditaments situate in the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk and elsewhere in the Kingdom of Great Britain unto Samuel Twining and Roger Allday Kerrison and their heirs, to the use of his first and eldest son, Robert John Harvey Harvey, and his assigns during his life without impeachment of waste, with remainder to the use of his grandson, Robert Lambart Sutton Harvey, the eldest son of the said Robert John Harvey Harvey, and his assigns for his life, with remainder to the use of his first and other sons in tail male, with remainder to the use of the second and every other son of the said R. J. H. Harvey, severally and successively according to their respective seniorities in tail male; and in default of such issue to the use of the testator's second son, John Harvey, and his assigns during his life, and after the decease of the said John Harvey to the use of the first and every son of his body severally and successively according to their respective seniorities in tail male; and in default of such issue to the use of the testator's third son, the defendant Edward Kerrison Harvey, and his assigns during his life, with remainder to the use of the first and every other son of his body severally and successively according to their respective seniorities in tail male; and in default of all such issue to the use of the testator's daughters and the daughters of his several sons as therein mentioned. And the said testator gave and bequeathed all the rest and residue of his personal estate and effects (subject to the payment of his just debts, funeral expenses, the charges of proving and executing his said will, and to the payment of the legacies and annuities thereinbefore bequeathed) to the said Samuel Twining and Roger Allday Kerrison, their executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust to convert the same into money and to invest the moneys to arise from such conversion and to pay the annual income of the whole of his said residuary estate unto or for the benefit of the testator's sons John Harvey and the defendant Edward Kerrison Harvey, in equal shares during their joint lives, and upon the decease of either of his said sons, to pay the whole of the said annual produce unto the survivor of them during his life, and upon the death of such survivor upon trust to convert all his residuary personal estate into money, and lay out and invest the moneys arising from such sale and conversion in the purchase of freehold lands, tenements, and hereditaments to be conveyed and assured unto the said Samuel Twining and Roger Allday Kerrison and their heirs to the uses and upon and for the trusts thereinbefore limited and expressed of and concerning his real estate.

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The testator added a codicil to his will dated the 31st of May, 1855, and revoked the trusts of one moiety of the annual income in favour of John Harvey and any widow that he might leave, and declared that the whole of his residuary personal estate should be paid to the said E. K Harvey for life, and after his death, subject to the payment of an annuity to his widow, the whole of his residuary personal estate should remain and be upon the trusts in the said will mentioned concerning the same.

The testator died on the 18th of June, 1860, and his will and codicil were duly proved on the 21st of February, 1861, by the said S. Twining and R. A. Kerrison. The testator's widow died in 1869, and R. L. S. Harvey died on the 4th of September, 1864, an infant, and without having been married, leaving the plaintiff Sir Charles Harvey, then Charles Harvey, the second son of the said R. J. H. Harvey, surviving. R. J. H. Harvey was created a baronet. By an indenture, being a disentailing assurance, bearing date the 14th of July, 1870, and made between the said Sir R. J. H. Harvey of the one part, and the plaintiff of the second part, and L. E. H. Harvey and E. H. Stracey of the third part, the said plaintiff, with the consent of the said R. C. H. Harvey as protector of the settlement, barred the estate tail in all the freehold hereditaments devised by the said will. And it was thereby also witnessed that the said Sir R. J. H. Harvey thereby assigned and the said Chas. Harvey (with the consent of the said R. J. H. Harvey as protector of the settlement) thereby assigned and disposed of unto the said L. E. Harvey and E. H. G. Stracey all and singular the moneys to arise on the death of the defendant the said G. K. Harvey from the conversion and getting in of the residuary personal estate of the said testator and all and every other sum of money subject to be laid out then or thereafter in the purchase of lands or lands to be settled so that the said R. J. H. Harvey would have therein an estate for life with remainder to the said Chas. Harvey in tail male or tail general, and the stocks, funds, and securities in or upon which such sums and sum of money were or might be invested, to hold the same unto the said L. E. Harvey and E. H. G. Stracey and his executors, administrators, and assigns freed and absolutely discharged from the estate tail of the said Charles Harvey and all other remainders, upon such trusts, and with and subject to such provisoes, agreements, and declarations as the said Sir R. J. H. Harvey and Charles Harvey should jointly appoint. The disentailing assurance was duly enrolled.

By an indenture of even date with the indenture last mentioned, and made between the same parties after reciting that a doubt had arisen whether under the Act for the abolition of fines and recoveries the said disentailing assurance would operate so as to bar the entail in the said moneys, so that the said R. J. H. Harvey would have an estate for life with remainder to the said Charles Harvey in tail male, by reason of the said E. K. Harvey being then alive, the said Sir R. J. H. Harvey and Charles Harvey covenanted with the trustees that within one calendar month after the death of the said E. K. Harvey they would execute and do every such assurance and thing for the further or more perfectly barring the entail of the said Charles Harvey and all remainders over in the said residuary moneys subject to be invested in the purchase of land.

By another indenture of the same date, under the power limited to them by the disentailing assurance above recited, Sir R. J. H. Harvey and Charles Harvey appointed the lands and hereditaments devised as aforesaid to the use of Sir R. J. H. Harvey for his life, and after his death to the use of Charles Harvey for life, and after his decease to the use that if Jane Anne, Lady Harvey, the wife of the plaintiff, should survive the said Sir R. J. H. Harvey and Charles Harvey, that she should receive a rent-charge as therein provided, and subject to a lease for securing such rent-charge and portions for the younger children of Charles Harvey, to the use of the first and other sons of Charles Harvey as therein mentioned in tail male. And the indenture provided as therein mentioned for sale and exchange of lands, with power for investing the moneys arising on such sale or exchange in the purchase of freehold or copyhold lands and for settling the same upon the uses and trusts aforesaid. And the said Sir R. J. H. Harvey and Charles Harvey appointed that the moneys to arise on the death of E. K. Harvey from the conversion of the residuary estate of the testator and all and every the sums and sum of money subject to be laid out then or thereafter in the purchase of lands and hereditaments to be settled so that had not the said disentailing deed of even date therewith been executed, Sir R. J. H. Harvey would have taken therein an estate for life with remainder to Charles Harvey in tail, and the securities upon which such sum or sums of money were or might be invested, should, upon the execution of that indenture, be held upon the trusts and subject to the powers thereinbefore declared concerning the moneys to arise under the power of sale in respect of any of the hereditaments thereinbefore appointed, and the stocks, funds, and securities upon which such moneys were thereinbefore authorized to be invested.

Sir R. J. H. Harvey died on the 19th of July, 1870, and the said Jane Anne, Lady Harvey, died on the 13th of December, 1891.

The point then arose whether the disentailing deed could effectually disentail the personal estate during the lifetime of the said E. K. Harvey.

Levett, K.C., and Martelli, for the applicant.—The point turns upon the construction of section 71 of the Fines and Recoveries Act. The expression money subject to be invested in the purchase of land, in section 1 of the Act is there defined as including money whether raised or to be raised, and whether the amount thereof be or be not ascertained, and shall extend to stocks and funds, and real and other securities, the produce of which is directed to be invested in the purchase of lands. It must follow from this that "money" as used in section 1 is not confined to money presently to be laid out in the purchase of lands. It also includes moneys which may hereafter be laid out in the purchase of land. The case is governed by Fordham v. Fordham, 13 W. R. 197, 34 Beav. 59.

Cozens-Hardy for the defendant, C. R. L. Harvey; and Dauney, for E. K. Harvey and his eldest son. —The word money in section 71 means money presently to be invested in the purchase of lands, and not moneys hereafter to be laid out in such purchase. The section cannot apply to lands not to be purchased until after the death of E. K. Harvey.

Paterson, for the trustees.

BYRNE, J.—In this case the short question raised is, whether a certain disentailing deed is effectual to bar an estate tail in certain lands to be purchased with certain moneys subject to a trust after the death of a person who was at the date of the disentailing deed still alive to be laid out in the purchase of lands. Under the will there was a strict settlement of certain real estate. About that no question arises; the deed executed was effectual to bar that estate tail. Then the testator deals with his personal estate, and he gives that subject to the payment of his debts and legacies and annuities to trustees [his lordship read the portion of the will and continued:] Now the disentailing deed was executed, as I have said, during the lifetime of Edward Kerrison Harvey. It was executed by the tenant in tail with the consent of the person who, if Edward Kerrison Harvey had died, and the money had been laid out in the purchase of land, would have been tenant for life of the land so purchased. The whole question argued before me is as to whether that was effectual, having regard to the fact that this money was not immediately subject to be invested in the purchase of land, but only subject to be invested in the purchase of land after the death of Edward Kerrison Harvey. Now the sections of the Fines and Recoveries Act which have been referred to are first of all the interpretation clause, section 1, when amongst other definitions the definition of money subject to be laid out in land is given; and it is there defined to include money whether raised or to be raised, and whether the amount thereof be or be not ascertained, "and shall extend to stock and funds and rent and other securities, the produce of which is directed to be invested in the purchase of land." The 71st section provides, so far as is material, "that money subject to be invested in the purchase of land, to be settled so that any person, if the lands were purchased, would have an estate tail therein, shall for all purposes of this Act be treated as the lands to be purchased, and be considered subject to the same estates as the lands to be purchased would, if purchased, have been actually subject to." Then passing over certain words the section continues, "and shall in the case of money subject to be invested in the purchase of land to be settled as aforesaid apply to such money in the same manner as if such money was directed to be laid out in the purchase of freehold lands, and such lands were actually purchased and settled." Mr. Dauney argued the point very neatly. He said the whole question is whether the words in the 71st section refer to moneys presently subject to be laid out in the purchase of land, or whether they mean subject presently or at any future time to be laid out in the purchase of land. First, it is to be observed that the words in the Act are perfectly general. There is this further fact that I may mention, that under section 15 of the Act there is a provision for disentailing estates tail, whether in possession, remainder, contingency, or otherwise, so that the Act is not contemplating merely the disentailing of estates in possession.

Now in the words of this section, independently of authority, I should have come to the conclusion that it would be too narrow a reading to say that these words mean presently subject to be laid out in the purchase of land. But I think that the case is really covered by the case of Fordham v. Fordham, to which I have been referred. The circumstances in the two cases are not exactly the same; but still I think that that case is an authority which governs the present one, although the words are somewhat different. In that case the testator gave his freeholds, copyholds, and leaseholds to trustees, and he directed them to enfranchise the copyholds within twenty years. And as to freeholds, copyholds, and leaseholds, he declared his will to be that his trustees should "enter into the possession and receipt of the rents and profits of the same estates, and should until the expiration of twenty-one years after his decease manage and pay the expenses and improvement, and invest the surplus in the purchase of freeholds, and in the meantime invest and accumulate the same, which accumulations are to be subject to the trusts hereby declared of the fund from which the same should have proceeded." The testator continued as follows: "I declare my will to be that from and after the expiration of twenty-one years from my decease, my trustees shall stand seised of and interested in all my said freehold estate, and all the freehold estates as to which my said copyhold estates shall be converted by enfranchisement, and the freehold estates hereinbefore directed to be purchased by my trustees upon the trusts following, that is to say, upon trust for Frederick Nash Fordham, of Royston, in the county of Hertford, Banker, during his life, without impeachment of waste, with remainder upon trust for the sons of the said Frederick Nash Fordham successively according to seniority in tail male" with remainders over. The testator died in 1855. Frederick Nash Fordham had one son, who attained twenty-one the 11th of November, 1863, and on the following day he, with the concurrence of his father, joined in disentailing amongst other things all the moneys which, under the trusts of the will, was subject to be invested in the purchase of land, including money invested or to be invested, and whether the amount thereof was or was not ascertained. On behalf of the trustees, Mr. Archibald Smith argued that inasmuch as before the passing of the Act money could not have been disentailed before received, the Statute 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, did not alter the law in that respect, and he referred to section 71, which enables a tenant in tail to acquire the absolute interest "in money subject to be invested in the purchase of lands to be settled," and said that the meaning of the word "money" was governed by the interpretation clause, section 1, which applied to money in hand, and did not include money which might thereafter be received. So that the precise point taken in the present case was taken by Mr. Archibald Smith in arguing that case. Lord Romilly, M.R., said: "The plaintiffs are clearly entitled to have the rents of the present year paid to them, and it is quite unnecessary to invest them in land. The same thing will happen in 1865, and in every succeeding year, and during the whole remaining period of twenty years they will, from time to time, be absolutely entitled to have the annual rents paid to them. I am of opinion that the words of the statute are clear, and that they enable the tenant in tail to acquire an absolute right to any money subject to be invested in the purchase of lands, to be settled including money received, or to be received, and the rents of this and of every succeeding year. As the plaintiffs would be entitled to have the rents paid to them every year, and there is no possibility of investing them in land, nobody else has any interest in them, and they are entitled to an immediate conveyance. If they were entitled to an immediate conveyance, that would only be upon the footing that the disentailing deed was effectual not merely to bar the entail in the moneys already received and liable to be invested in land, but in respect of moneys thereinafter to be received and then to be invested in land."

I think that this case really is an authority which governs the present case in principle, although, as I have said, the words are somewhat different. I have not been referred to any authority suggesting that Fordham v. Fordham is not good law, and it is treated in Davidson's Precedents, 3rd ed., Vol. 3, Part 2, p. 1302, as a binding authority. I must therefore treat it as being so, and I am of opinion it governs this case. The declaration will be that according to the true construction of the will of the testator, and in the events which have happened, the above-mentioned disentailing assurance of the 14th of July, 1870, was effectual to bar the entail in the moneys upon the death of Edward Kerrison Harvey directed to be laid out in the purchase of land.

Solicitors, Illiffe, Henley, & Sweet, for Preston & Son, Norwich; Blake, Haseldine, Child, & Crailsheim, for Bensley & Bollingbroke, Norwich; Collyer-Bristow, Russell, Hill, Curtis, & Dods, for Mills & Reeve, Norwich.

Chan. Div. }
Buckley, J. } July 5, 6.

BRADSHAW v. WIDDRINGTON. (a.)

Limitation Statutes—Mortgage—Payment of interest by person liable to the mortgagor to pay—Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), s. 8.

The payment to the mortgagee of interest due upon the mortgage debt by a person who, as between himself and the mortgagor, is bound to make the payment, is a sufficient payment within section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, to prevent time running against the mortgagee under the statute.

Action.

The question to be decided in this case was whether a certain mortgage made in 1879 had become extinguished under the Statutes of Limitation or had been kept alive by the payment of interest by a person only bound to pay it as between himself and the mortgagor.

On the 1st of August, 1879, James E. Bradshaw mortgaged his estate called "Fair Oak" to J. J. Moss to secure the repayment of a sum of £5,171 14s. 6d. and interest at 4 per cent.

Moss was the surviving trustee of the will of Sir Edward Cust, and the mortgage money was part of the trust estate. Moss died, and was succeeded in the trust by the defendant's trustees, and he and they were called in the case the "Cust trustees."

James E. Bradshaw borrowed the money for his son William Bradshaw, to whom it was immediately paid over.

On the same day William Bradshaw executed in favour of his father a bond to secure the repayment to him of the amount lent — that is to say, the principal money due under the mortgage and interest at 4 per cent.

Cartmell Harrison, of the firm of Birch, Ingram, & Harrison, acted as solicitor for all parties, and the deeds were left in his keeping.

In the books of the firm, until 1885, William Bradshaw was treated as paying the interest on the mortgage to his father, J. E. Bradshaw, and the Cust trustees as receiving it, although J. E. Bradshaw, in his account, was not treated as receiving it from his son. After 1885, and down to 1892, in his account William Bradshaw was treated as paying the interest direct to the Cust trustees.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

William Bradshaw was not called as a witness to explain the transaction, and upon the materials before him his lordship concluded that as between his father and himself William Bradshaw was liable to pay the interest, and that there was a special arrangement between them that the son, having had the money, should keep down the interest upon it.

In September, 1887, James E. Bradshaw died, leaving William Bradshaw and Harrison his executors.

In October, 1892, William Bradshaw paid Harrison the mortgage money of £5,171 14s. 6d., but Harrison did not then or subsequently pay it to the Cust trustees.

It appeared in the books of the firm as a credit on the account of William Bradshaw.

In the account of the Cust trustees in their books there was the extraordinary position of affairs that the trustees were treated as having received this money, and they continued also to be treated as receiving from time to time the interest due upon it.

His lordship supposed that what in point of fact happened was that Harrison misappropriated the money, and therefore had to continue paying the interest.

The interest was in fact paid to the Cust trustees, or the tenant for life under the Cust settlement, down to 1898 or 1899.

In November, 1899, Harrison committed suicide.

At that time Colonel J. C. Bradshaw was the owner of Fair Oak. He had had part of it conveyed to him by his father in 1884 in exchange for other land which he gave his father, and he had purchased the remainder from the trustees of his father's estate in November, 1887.

In both cases he bought without knowing of the Cust mortgage, and in both cases the property was expressed to be conveyed free from incumbrances, and consequently as between himself and his father and his father's trustees, the latter were bound to discharge the sum due under the mortgage and the interest.

Harrison acted as his solicitor in these purchases as well as the solicitor of his father and the trustees, and the deeds still remained in his hands.

Upon the death of Harrison the existence of the mortgage was discovered.

The Cust trustees, no longer receiving their interest, gave notice to Colonel Bradshaw to pay off the mortgage, and that in default they would sell the property.

Thereupon Colonel Bradshaw brought this action against them asking for a declaration that their right to the mortgage was extinguished, and for an injunction to prevent them selling the property.

The trustees counterclaimed for payment of the mortgage money, or foreclosure or sale.

H. Terrell, K.C., and Kenneth Wood, for the plaintiff.—If payments of the interest upon the mortgage were made by William Bradshaw, these would not prevent the time under the statute from running. He was not the agent of his father, the mortgagor, for the purpose. But even if he were, that agency would be determined by the death of the father in 1887. Nor was he a person bound to pay this interest. He was only bound to pay interest upon the bond, not upon the mortgage. But even if he were bound as between himself and his father to pay the interest, that is not sufficient. He must be bound as between himself and the mortgagee: Chinnery v. Evans, 13 W. R. 20, 11 H. L Cas. 115; Harlock v. Ashberry, 30 W. R. 327, 19 Ch. D. 539; In re Sands and Thompson, 31 W. R 397, 22 Ch. D. 614; Newbould v. Smith, 33 W. R. 690, 34 W. R. 690, 29 Ch. D. 882, 33 Ch. D. 127.

Birrell, K.C., and G. Henderson, for the defendant William Bradshaw, used the same arguments.

Astbury, K.C., and Bryan Farrer, for the defendants.—A payment by a person liable to pay as between himself and the mortgagor is sufficient to take the case out of the statute: In re Frisby, 38 W. R. 65, 43 Ch. D. 106; Lewin v. Wilson, 11 App. Cas. 639, 35 W. R. Dig. 122. Here William Bradshaw was bound to pay the interest on the mortgage, and consequently the rights of the mortgagees have never been barred.

BUCKLEY, J.—The question is, which of two innocent parties is to suffer—Colonel Bradshaw, who purchased the estate without knowing of this mortgage, or the Cust trustees, who advanced their money and had their interest till 1898 or 1899? It turns upon the proper effect of section 8 of the Real Property Act, 1874, and whether the interest received was paid by the person by whom it was payable or his agent. The principle of all the Statutes of Limitation is that to take a case out of the statutes the payment must be made by a person liable as an acknowledgment of right of the person to whom it is paid, and what I have to look to, I think, is to see whether the payment here has been made by a person bound to pay it, and whether by that expression, "by a person bound to pay it," I must find that he is a person bound between himself and the mortgagee to pay it, or whether it is enough if it be paid by a person who is bound to pay it as between himself and the mortgagor. Now, apart from authority, it seems to me that all principle and common sense leads me to the conclusion that it means a person bound to pay as between himself and the mortgagor. You have to see whether the mortgagor has made an admission. That is the basis of it all. If the mortgagor has himself paid, or if he has bound somebody else towards him to pay it, and that person has paid it, in either case it appears to me the mortgagor has made an admission, and when you look at the authorities it appears to me that they have the same effect. Not that I have been able to put my hand on a case in which that exact point has arisen, but the principle appears in the language used by the learned judges. In Chinnery v. Evans, where the payment was made by a receiver of estates in Ireland who had been appointed on a petition presented by the mortgagee, Lord Cranworth, after saying that a payment by a person who is not a mere stranger to the mortgagor will do for the purpose, says, 11 H. L. Cas. at p. 139: "But the payments in this case were not payments by a stranger; for though a receiver appointed under the Irish statute is an officer of the court, yet he is certainly no stranger to the mortgagor, but a person paying for him, and on his account, what he is bound to pay." In Harlock v. Ashberry, where a mortgagee had obtained payment of rent from a tenant and the question was whether money which he thus got from the tenant, was a payment for the purpose of excluding the statute, it was held it was not because it was not got from the mortgagor or from any person bound toward the mortgagor to pay the mortgagee, but from a tenant, being obtained by the mortgagee entering into possession of the property. In delivering judgment Sir George Jessel, after reading the passage from Chinnery v. Evans which I have just read, goes on to say (p. 546): "Therefore on principle and on authority I think that the payment to take the case out of the statute must be a payment by a person who is bound to pay the principal or interest of the mortgage money, and this is not such a payment." I think that Sir George Jessel meant a payment by a person who is bound as between himself and the mortgagor to pay the interest upon the mortgage money. Then Brett, J., 19 Ch. D. at p. 547, says: "Then the question arises whether payment of rent by a tenant to a mortgagee who has exercised the right to demand the rent is a payment of principal or interest within that section. I come to the conclusion that it is not, for three reasons," and the third reason is this, "But even if it could be held to be a payment of principal or interest, it is not a payment at all by the mortgagor or any agent of the mortgagor, or by any person bound to make payment of principal or interest on his behalf, and I think that a payment of principal or interest to be a payment within this section must be made by the mortgagor or his agent, or at least by a person bound or entitled to make a payment of principal or interest for the mortgagor, as was the receiver in the case of Chinnery v. Evans." I think that the Lord Justice means there the same thing by "bound."

It seems to me, therefore, the language of those judgments is in favour of the view which I take upon the principle—namely, that the person bound to pay and whose payment is material for the purposes of the statute is not a person bound as between himself and the mortgagee, but a person bound as between himself and the mortgagor.

I will only add to those passages one from the case of Lewin v. Wilson, where Lord Hobhouse in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, and after quoting Chinnery v. Evans and Harlock v. Ashberry, says, 11 App. Cas. at p. 644: "Their lordships have not been referred to any case where it has been decided that payment made by some person concerned to answer the debt has been held to be insufficient to keep a right alive against the party charged in the suit merely because he was not that party or his agent." There is no such authority to be found as far as I know. Here, I agree, the payment was not made by the mortgagor, James Edward Bradshaw. Whether it was made by his agent or not is another matter. For the present purpose I am assuming that William was not his agent. Still he was, as between himself and his father, the person who was bound to pay, and his payment, made in pursuance of his contractual obligations towards his father, was his father's admission of liability.

Another ground has been put forward which is very ingenious, and upon which I ought to say a word. James Edward Bradshaw, the mortgagor, died in September, 1887, and, as I have said, William Bradshaw and Cartmell Harrison were his executors. As from 1887 William Bradshaw continues to pay the interest in this sense. Harrison as his agent charged his account with it, and Harrison in fact was paying it to the Cust trustees or the Cust beneficiaries. After 1887, William Bradshaw, the person thus making the payment, was the person liable to pay as mortgagor in the sense that he was legal personal representative of the mortgagor, and Harrison, the other person to whom William was making the payment, or who was making the payment for William, was the other executor. So that as William had paid the money to Harrison, or rather to himself and Harrison as co-executors, and they had paid it on to the Cust trustees or beneficiaries, it is said that that was a payment by James Edward Bradshaw, the mortgagor. It appears to me there is something in that contention.

There is one other thing which I ought to mention. It is quite plain that Colonel Bradshaw, for whom one feels some sympathy and who sustains a loss which must fall upon him for the reason that he had the misfortune to employ as his solicitor the person who had the deeds of this property, and who had them, and properly had them, whether the estate was free from incumbrances or whether it was not free from incumbrances. If it was free from incumbrances the solicitor had them, and properly had them, for James Edward Bradshaw, the father, if it was not free from incumbrances he had them, and properly had them, for the Cust trustees, the mortgagees; and when the father purported to convey free from incumbrances to Colonel Bradshaw, Harrison would keep them, and properly keep them, because his client Colonel John Charles Bradshaw was entitled to them. If Colonel Bradshaw had employed another solicitor and had asked for the deeds, they would not have been forthcoming unless Harrison had committed a fraud, because he could not have handed the deeds which he held for the Cust trustees as mortgagees to a purchaser from the mortgagor, the owner of the equity of redemption, and the matter would have come out. Colonel Bradshaw in fact never got the deeds. I do not think he is to be blamed for want of prudence in the matter; he never saw the deeds and the deeds remained with Harrison in some one of the many characters which he filled. But Colonel Bradshaw is, I think, guilty of what in the eyes of this court is negligence, in the sense that he relied upon a solicitor who did not get the deeds as he ought to have got them on behalf of his client, and who having regard to the multitudinous character of his agency as solicitor would have had the deeds already in his possession for another client I feel, therefore, less compunction in visiting the loss upon Colonel Bradshaw.

Judgment for the defendants on their counterclaim.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs and William Bradshaw, Hunter & Haynes.

Solicitors for the defendants, the trustees, Nicholl, Manisty, & Co.

Chan. Div. }
Wright, J. } June 19.

In re SEPTIMUS PARSONAGE & CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Contempt—Company—Winding up—Creditor's petition—Fraudulent circular—Resolution to wind up voluntarily—Attempt to mislead the court—Contempt of court.

Where, after a creditor's petition for the compulsory winding up of a company has been presented, a circular is issued at the instigation of the directors by a shareholder asking for proxies to be used by him in order to obtain an investigation into the conduct of the directors, and such proxies are intended to be, and are in fact, used in support of the directors and a resolution for voluntary winding up, those responsible for the circular and such action are guilty of a contempt of court, in that they have attempted to mislead the court by representing that a voluntary winding up is already in existence, with the view of inducing the court not to make an order for compulsory winding up.

This was a motion, made by the special direction of the judge, on behalf of the official receiver, that Messrs. Septimus Parsonage and J. V. Criper, directors of the company, and T. R. Grace, an employé of the company, might be committed for contempt of court, in that, whereas a petition was pending for the compulsory winding up of the company, they conspired together to obtain, by misrepresentation to the shareholders thereof and other improper means, the passing of a resolution of the company for the voluntary winding up thereof, with intent to mislead the court as to the real views of such shareholders and prevent a compulsory winding up order being made.

(a.) Reported by W. MORRIS CARTER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A petition for the compulsory winding up of the company was presented on the 21st of March, 1901, by the assignee of a claim for costs of a solicitor. On the following day a board meeting was held, at which four directors, including Parsonage, Criper, and H. T. Gould, were present, and it was then decided to call a meeting of the company to pass a resolution for a voluntary winding up. Later in the day Gould told Parsonage that he had come to the conclusion that it would be improper for the directors to call the meeting, and that he should oppose it; at the same time he intimated that he disapproved of Parsonage's conduct as a director. Thereupon the latter consulted Criper, and proposed to send a circular to the shareholders, to which course Criper apparently agreed. It was alleged that the circular had been submitted to, and approved by, the late solicitor to the company, but it was not shewn that he knew on whose behalf it was issued, or did more than approve its form. Grace, who was in the company's employment at thirty-two shillings a week, and who held 200 preference shares which had been given him by Parsonage, was then sent for by the latter or by Criper and was at length induced to sign the circular bearing his address at Southend, in which, after referring to the notice sent by the directors convening an extraordinary general meeting with a view to voluntary liquidation, he stated that as a large shareholder in the company he was dissatisfied with the conduct of the directors and was at his own expense about to make a thorough investigation into the affairs of the company with the object of ascertaining the truth with regard to the circumstances of the company and the conduct of its affairs, and he asked the shareholders to support him in his action, and, if they were unable to attend the meeting in person, to send proxies (forms of which he enclosed) to enable him to vote for them in support of the inquiry.

This circular was printed on the instructions of Parsonage or Criper and sent to the shareholders by Grace from Southend, and in reply he received proxies representing 60,000 shares.

The directors in addition held a considerable number of other proxies and together with Grace were able to command a clear majority.

The meeting was held on the 1st of April.

A resolution for voluntary winding up was moved by Parsonage and seconded by Criper; an amendment was moved by a shareholder for the appointment of a committee of investigation, but was declared to be lost on a show of hands. Grace alleged that he voted for it but he did not use his proxies or demand a poll. An amendment was then moved for compulsory winding up and seconded by Gould, and on a show of hands was apparently carried, but on a poll being demanded the proxies held by Grace and the directors were used (in spite of protest) in favour of a voluntary winding up, a resolution for which was passed. On the 4th of April another form of circular was sent to Grace with instructions for getting it printed. Grace had it printed and sent it from Southend; it purported to describe what took place at the meeting and explained Grace's action there and expressed the hope that he had acted in accordance with the wishes of those who had given him proxies, and asked the latter to return a form (which was enclosed) expressing their opinion of the way in which he had used their proxies. An order was subsequently made for the winding up of the company.

Sir R. Finlay, A.G., and R. J. Parker, for the official receiver, in support of the motion.—It is clear that if in the course of judicial proceedings attempts are made to mislead the court that is a contempt of court. In this case the existence or non-existence of a voluntary winding up was of importance in determining whether a compulsory winding-up order should be made; the object of sending out the first circular was to enable a voluntary winding-up resolution to be passed by fraudulent means, in order to influence the court not to make a compulsory winding-up order. Some allowance must be made for Grace having regard to his position.

Shee, K.C., and Edmonds, said the defendants did not intend to mislead the court; they were not thinking of the court, their object was to defeat Gould. The issuing of circulars is an everyday occurrence in company matters, and was here employed, not to deceive the court, but merely to checkmate Gould and to assist Parsonage by obtaining a voluntary winding up.

WRIGHT, J.—As regards the three persons who are before me, Parsonage, Criper, and Grace, there is no question at all that a fraud of the grossest kind has been committed, and the only question is how far that ought to be regarded as a fraud upon the court, or an attempt to interfere with the action of the court. Grace was a man of straw put forward by Parsonage and Criper to issue a false circular from Southend. Why was the circular posted from Southend except for the purpose of committing a fraud? At the meeting of the shareholders Grace obeyed Parsonage and Criper, and all the proxies which were given to be used against the directors were used in their favour and in support of a resolution for a voluntary winding up. The effect was that the shareholders whose proxies had been obtained were deprived of their power to vote. It was certainly the grossest of frauds on the shareholders, and amounted to obtaining their proxies by false pretences.

Now, so far there is no doubt, and the real and only question is how far I ought to consider that this fraud was directed against the court. I cannot think that Mr. Parsonage and Mr. Criper acted so ignorantly as not to know why they wanted a voluntary liquidation when there was a creditor's petition pending for a compulsory liquidation. I think I must give them credit for knowing perfectly well that if they passed this resolution for a voluntary liquidation it would destroy the power of the court to make the compulsory winding-up order, unless on proof, which it is sometimes not very easy to obtain, that the creditor would be prejudiced by the continuance of the voluntary winding up. It seems to me an obvious inference that all that was done by these people was done for the purpose of defeating the creditor's petition, and that what they wanted to avoid was a compulsory winding up. Mr. Parsonage, Mr. Criper, and Mr. Grace go there with 60,000 proxies, as well as using their own, in favour of a voluntary liquidation, obviously with the knowledge that that would defeat the compulsory winding up; and also why they wanted a voluntary liquidation was that there was already a winding-up petition before the court. I think I should be failing in my duty if I did not consider that the inference ought to be drawn that the intention was to do what was the obvious consequence, and the importance of which in the eyes of these persons may be measured by the frauds to which they were willing to condescend in order to accomplish them. Where there is a real interference with the jurisdiction of the court, which is probably a better phrase than contempt of court, the court has no option but to act, however unwilling it is to deal with matters affecting the liberty of the subject. If a case of the kind I have stated is made out, the court has no option, and therefore under the circumstances of this case it is my duty to commit Mr. Parsonage to prison for six weeks. Mr. Criper, I think, is in some respects less less guilty than Mr. Parsonage, because I do not think he was so much the originator of the matter as Mr. Parsonage, although he took a considerable part in it himself. He will be committed for four weeks. As for Mr. Grace I gladly give effect to the recommendation of the Attorney-General. I am not able to pass his case over, but it is useless making an order upon a man of straw to pay costs; that is quite idle. It is better to treat him with complete mercy than to put an ineffectual penalty upon him of that kind. I think, therefore, no order ought to be made as to Mr. Grace.

As regards Mr. Parsonage and Mr. Criper, they will be committed for the terms I have mentioned, and they must pay the costs of the motion.

Motion allowed.

Solicitors, The Solicitor to the Board of Trade; Mason, Son, & Turnbull.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance and Phillimore, JJ.) — May 13.

GOULDER v. ROOK.
BENT v. ORMEROD. (a.)

Adulteration—Food and drugs—Beer containing arsenic—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), ss. 3, 5, 6.

Beer, containing arsenic to such an extent as to render the same injurious to health, was sold to a purchaser. The arsenic had been unknowingly mixed with the beer by the brewer in the course of the manufacture. The vendor of the beer was summoned under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. The justices who heard the summons found that the beer was not of the nature, substance and quality of the article demanded by the purchaser.

Held, that there was evidence in support of the finding, and that the vendor ought to be convicted.

These two cases, which involved the same point under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, were argued together.

Goulder v. Rook was a case stated by the stipendiary magistrate of Manchester.

An information was preferred by the respondent, an inspector under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, against the appellant, charging her that she did sell to the prejudice of the purchaser a certain article of food, to wit, beer which was not of the nature, substance and quality of the article demanded by such purchaser, the same containing arsenious acid.

The appellant was a retailer of beer.

A sample of beer taken by the respondent contained arsenious acid to the extent of not less than one-eighth of a grain per gallon.

The case stated that the appellant did not mix the arsenic in the beer herself and did not know of its existence in the beer, nor could she be expected to know of or suspect the existence of such an admixture; that the arsenic was an ingredient injurious to health, and the quantity of arsenic in the beer was such as to render the same injurious to health, but did not form one of the constituents of beer; and that the arsenic had been unknowingly mixed with the beer by the brewer through having been improperly introduced in the manufacture of some substance used in brewing.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The magistrate found that the beer sold by the appellant was not of the nature, substance and quality of the article demanded by the purchaser and convicted her.

Section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, enacts as follows: "No person shall sell to the prejudice of the purchaser any article of food or any drug which is not of the nature, substance and quality of the article demanded by such purchaser. . . ."

Section 3 enacts that "No person shall mix, colour, stain, or powder any article of food with any ingredient or material so as to render the article injurious to health, with intent that the same may be sold in that state, and no person shall sell any such article so mixed, coloured, stained or powdered. . . ."

Section 5 provides that "No person shall be liable to be convicted under either of the two last foregoing sections of this Act in respect of the sale of any article of food, or of any drug, if he shows to the satisfaction of the justice or court before whom he is charged that he did not know of the article of food or drug sold by him being so mixed, coloured, stained, or powdered, as in either of those sections mentioned, and that he could not with reasonable diligence have obtained that knowledge."

Fletcher Moulton, K.C. (Montague Lush with him), for the appellant.—The proceedings have been wrongly taken under section 6. They ought to have been taken, if at all, under section 3. The reason why they were not taken under the latter section was, that by section 5 it is made a defence to a sale within section 3 that the accused did not know of the article being mixed, &c., as in section 3 mentioned, and there was no such provision with regard to section 6. No offence under section 6 has been committed, the article sold being really beer into which, through no fault of the appellant and without her knowledge, the arsenic has been introduced. Section 6 does not apply to such accidental contamination, but was directed against deliberate fraudulent trade adulteration.

Lawson Walton, K.C. (Byrne with him), for the respondent.—Section 3 does not apply. That section applies to cases of deliberate mixing with a trade object; whereas, what took place here was that certain sulphuric acid was used in the manufacture of the glucose from which the beer was made, and there had been an omission to remove the arsenic from the sulphuric acid. The proceedings were rightly taken under section 6, because the beer sold was not of the "quality" of the beer demanded. The word quality has reference to the wholesomeness of the article demanded: see Betts v. Armstead, 36 W. R. 720, 20 Q. B. D., 771, and Parker v. Alder, 47 W. R. 142, [1899] 1 Q. B. 20.

Moulton, K.C., replied.

Bent v. Ormerod was a case stated by justices of Preston.

The facts were similar to those in Goulder v. Rook, and the proceedings were taken under the same section.

The case was thus stated:

"Arsenic does not form one of the constituents of beer, and the quantity of arsenic in the beer was such as to render the same injurious to health. No evidence was given as to the constituent parts of pure beer, but it was admitted by the respondent, and we find, as a fact, that pure beer does not contain the quantity of arsenic contained in the sample sold to the inspector. The respondent did not mix the arsenic in the beer and did not know of its existence in the beer, nor could he with reasonable diligence have obtained that knowledge. The arsenic had been introduced into the beer by the brewer using glucose or invert sugar, a substance often used in brewing, which improperly contained arsenic. The brewer did not know when he used it that the glucose or invert sugar was contaminated with arsenic.

In this case the justices found that the beer sold by the respondent was not of the nature, substance and quality of the article demanded, in that there had been mixed with it an ingredient prejudicial to health, but they dismissed the summons on the ground that the proceedings ought to have been taken under section 3.

Joseph Walton, K.C. (Pickford, E. Sutton, and F. Mellor with him), for the appellant.—The facts that the beer sold was injurious to health and that proceedings could have been taken under section 3 did not make the sale of it any the less an offence within section 6. The overlapping of the two sections is no answer: see Dickins v. Randerson, [1901] 1 Q. B. 437. Sub-section 1 of section 6, which provides that "an offence shall not be deemed to have been committed under the section where any matter or ingredient not injurious to health has been added to the food or drug because the same is required for the production or preparation thereof . . ." shows that the sale of articles injurious to health was contemplated by the section.

Montague Lush (Fletcher Moulton, K.C., with him), for the respondents.—In order to support proceedings under section 6 it is necessary to show the substitution in the article demanded of some inferior substance. It is trade adulteration which is aimed at by the section, and where you have an adulterated article sold as the genuine one there you have a case within the purview of the section. The word "quality" has no reference to wholesomeness; it simply refers to cases where articles are usually distinguished in the trade as "first quality," "second quality" and so forth. If it were true to say that the mixture of some injurious substance with an article of food or a drug altered the "quality" of the article, then you could always proceed under section 6, and section 3 would be unnecessary.

Joseph Walton, K.C., replied.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—I am of opinion that the conviction in Goulder v. Rook should be supported, and that the case of Bent v. Ormerod, in which there has been a dismissal of the charge, should go back to the justices for conviction. I think a great deal of the difficulty disappears if the language of section 6 is considered by itself for a moment. I quite agree that if it is plain that one group of sections deals with one class of offence, and another group of sections deals with another class of offence, the consideration and comparison of the language of the two groups of sections affords very material assistance. On the other hand, it has not been disputed that sections which create separate offences may overlap, and it may very well be that some facts afford grounds for prosecuting under more than one section. There are numerous instances of that in our criminal statutes, but I think that in proceedings under section 6 the question is whether or not a person has sold an article of food or a drug which is not of the nature, substance and quality of the article demanded by the purchaser. In my opinion, section 6 starts at the sale, if I may use the expression, and ends at the sale. There is no need to consider how that which makes the article otherwise than of the nature, substance and quality of the article demanded has got into it, but the question is whether in fact it is there. I think it would be cutting the section down unwisely, and cutting it down without sufficient direction in the statute, if we were to hold that it was needful to enter into an examination of the stage at which, or the precise process by which, that which makes the article different has found its place in the article which is being sold. Now, applying that test, the magistrate in Goulder v. Rook has found as a fact that the beer sold by the appellant was not of the nature, substance and quality of the beer demanded by the purchaser. He has found as a fact, or rather the certificate shows, that arsenious acid to the extent of not less than one-eight of a grain per gallon was there, and he finds "that arsenic was an ingredient injurious to health, and that the quantity of arsenic in the beer was such as to render the same injurious to health, but that it did not form one of the constituents of beer." I read those words as meaning that arsenic does not form one of the constituent parts of beer in any substantial degree under ordinary circumstances. It is plain that if I am right in the view I have expressed as to the primâ facie meaning of section 6, since the magistrate has found as a fact that this article was not of the nature, substance and quality of that demanded by the purchaser, then, if there is any evidence which supports that conclusion, the conviction must stand. I have already indicated that the magistrate had before him a case in which a dangerous foreign body is present to the extent of one-eighth of a grain per gallon, which is injurious to health, then it seems to me that if he has drawn the conclusion that the beer sold was not of the nature, substance and quality of the article demanded, it is not possible for us to say that he was wrong. It has been suggested that if what is in the article is the result of some ingredient put into it in the course of its manufacture which in fact makes it injurious to health, that it can only be a "mixing" under section 3, and that the offence can only fall within the terms of that section. The penalty is very much more severe under section 3, and knowledge is made of the essence of the offence—that is to say, the defendant can show there is no offence if he proves that he did not know, and had no means of knowing, that injurious ingredients had been mixed with the article. Under section 6 the penalty is less, and it has been expressly decided in two or three cases that the knowledge of the person charged is immaterial—that is to say, however innocent, however little he may have known, yet he may be convicted under section 6.

In the second case that was argued before us—that is to say, Bent v. Ormerod—the finding of the magistrates was the same, although the summons was dismissed. They found as a fact that the beer sold by the respondent "was not of the nature, substance and quality of the article demanded by the purchaser, in that there had been mixed with it an ingredient prejudicial to the health of the purchaser." It was proved there was arsenic in the sample to the extent of one-ninth of a grain per gallon at the least; and it is also stated in the case that arsenic does not form one of the constituents of beer, and that the quantity of arsenic in the beer was such as to render the same injurious to health.

Under these circumstances, I come to the conclusion that there was evidence on which the magistrates could find as a fact that there was an article sold different in nature, substance and quality from that demanded, and therefore that the conviction in Goulder v. Rook ought to stand, and that in Bent v. Ormerod the case must be remitted to the magistrates with the expression of our opinion that there should be a conviction.

I only desire to add that I must not be understood to suggest that every accidental introduction of deleterious matter in an article sold for food of necessity makes it different in nature, substance and quality from the article demanded. It is for the magistrates in each case to find whether in fact the article supplied is of the nature, substance and quality of the article demanded.

LAWRANCE and PHILLIMORE, JJ., concurred.

Judgment accordingly.

Solicitors for the appellants, in Goulder v. Rook, and for the respondents in Bent v. Ormerod; Grundy, Kershaw, Samson & Co., for Grundy, Kershaw, Samson & Co., Manchester.

Solicitors for the respondents in Goulder v. Rook; T. Hudson, Manchester, and for the appellant in Bent v. Ormerod; Snow, Fox, & Higginson, for Harcourt E. Clare, Preston.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance, J.) — May 9.

DIERKEN v. PHILPOT. (a.)

County court—Practice—Jurisdiction to remit action—Claim on writ for over £100—Abandonment of excess—Jurisdiction of county court judge to proceed with trial—Prohibition—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 65.

In an action commenced in the High Court in which the claim is for more than £100, but which claim is reduced to £100 by abandonment of the excess over £100 after action brought, there is no jurisdiction under section 65 of the County Courts Act, 1888, to remit the action for trial in the county court except by consent of the parties.

Where, however, the plaintiff has reduced the claim to £100 by abandonment of the excess and the master at chambers has made an order remitting the action, and the defendant has failed to appeal against such order, the county court judge has jurisdiction to try the action though the order should not have been made, and the High Court under such circumstances will not subsequently grant a prohibition.

This was an appeal by the plaintiff from an order made by Day, J., in chambers, directing that a writ of prohibition should issue to the judge of the Westminster County Court, Lumley-Smith, K.C., prohibiting him from proceeding in the matter of the action.

The grounds of appeal were (1) That the county court judge was not acting without, or in excess of, his jurisdiction in hearing and determining the action, but was bound to hear and determine it; (2) that the defendant had by his laches, acquiescence, or neglect, debarred himself from claiming the issue of the writ of prohibition.

The action was brought by Dierken against Philpot to recover the sum of £116 in respect of arrears of salary, the writ being dated the 25th of June, 1900.

On the 5th of November, 1900, the plaintiff made an application before a master in chambers for an order that the action should be tried in the county court, stating that he had abandoned his claim for the excess over £100, and an order under section 65 of the County Courts Act, 1888, was made by the master remitting the case to the Westminster County Court.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The defendant never appealed against this order, and the action in due course came on for trial in the county court, when the defendant objected to the master's order on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to make it.

The county court judge overruled the objection, holding that he was bound by the order to hear the case, and he proceeded to try the action, and the plaintiff recovered the amount of his claim.

On the 26th of March, 1901, the defendant applied for a writ of prohibition to the county court judge, and Day, J., at chambers, ordered a writ to issue.

This was the order the plaintiff now appealed from.

C. H. Lindon, for the appellant.—The first question is whether a master can remit an action to the county court that is brought to recover more than £100 if the excess over the £100 is abandoned by the plaintiff. In the present case the plaintiff reduced the amount "by payment . . . or otherwise to a sum not exceeding one hundred pounds," and therefore the case comes within section 65 of the County Courts Act, 1888. Hodgson v. Bell, 38 W. R. 325, 24 Q. B. D. 525, is against this contention so far as it says a payment within section 65 must be a payment before action, but the present case is distinguishable in that here the plaintiff went before the master and abandoned the excess, whereas in the case cited the sum was reduced by payment. The abandonment shows that the plaintiff did not desire to recover more than £100. The abandonment, moreover, was not objected to by the defendant, and he took no steps to appeal from the master's order remitting the action. The defendant's right to a writ of prohibition is therefore precluded. The defendant having let the action go to the county court, the judge there is bound by the master's order and cannot inquire into the circumstances under which it was made nor into the master's jurisdiction: Blades v. Lawrance, 22 W. R. 643, L. R. 9 Q. B. 374. In the case of Reg. v. Marylebone County Court Judge, 50 L. T. Rep. 97, Day, J., says: "There can be no doubt that when an order of the court, good on the face of it, is addressed to any person whatsoever, that person is bound to obey it, and cannot question the jurisdiction of the court to make the order." The present case is distinguishable from Farquharson v. Morgan, 42 W. R. 306, [1894] 1 Q. B. 552, inasmuch as in that case there was a total absence of jurisdiction apparent on the face of the proceedings. In the case of Marsden v. Wardle, 2 W. R. 455, 3 El. & Bl. 695, Coleridge, J., says: "There is reason for refusing a writ of prohibition after judgment, because, if a party chooses to wait and take his chance of judgment being in his favour before he makes any objection, he cannot complain afterwards." So in the present case laches on the part of the defendant prevent him now from obtaining a writ of prohibition.

Lewis Thomas, for the respondent.—The master had no jurisdiction to make the order: Hodgson v. Bell and Reg. v. Judge of City of London Court, [1891] 2 Q. B. 71, 39 W. R. Dig. 65. There had been no laches on the part of the defendant, as at all stages of the proceedings he had objected to the master's order. The county court judge knew it was a remitted action, and must have seen that the writ was issued for more than £100; and he should have known that, except by consent, he had no jurisdiction to try the case. Where an excess of jurisdiction is once shown a writ of prohibition must issue, vide Willes, J., in Lord Mayor of London v. Cox and others, 16 W. R. 44, L. R. 2 H. L. 239.

Lindon replied.

Lord ALVERSTONE, C.J.—This is a case of some difficulty, but on the whole I have come to the conclusion that the writ of prohibition ought not to issue. In my opinion the master ought not to have made the order remitting the action. In Hodgson v. Bell it was decided that where an action is brought in the High Court in which the claim indorsed on the writ, though it originally exceeded £100, had been reduced to a sum not exceeding £100 by a payment made by the defendant to the plaintiff, there is no jurisdiction under section 65 of the County Courts Act, 1888, to order the trial of the action in the county court. Nor in the present case, where there has been an abandonment of the excess over £100 by the plaintiff after action brought, is there any jurisdiction to make such an order; and if the point had been taken before the master it would have been his duty to decline to make the order. But if the parties had consented the order could have been made, as such consent would have given the master jurisdiction. The defendant had the right to appeal against the master's order, and he should have done so, but he let the time go by and did not do so. It is now too late for him to raise the point by way of prohibition, and I do not think we ought to grant a writ after the master's order has gone to the county court judge. By not appealing at the proper time and then raising the point by way of prohibition the defendant had put both the county court judge and the plaintiff into an awkward position and necessitated the trial of a kind of preliminary action. It was argued that it must have been apparent on the face of the proceedings that there had been an excess of jurisdiction, and that therefore a writ should issue. I agree that if it so appears a writ will go, but I do not think in the present case there was an excess of jurisdiction on the part of the county court judge. The judge ought not to be compelled to inquire, in the case of remitted actions, whether or not the writ in the action exceeded the sum of £100; it would be putting an excessive burden upon him to hold that it was his duty to decide in the first instance whether he should or should not obey an order of the High Court, apparently good on the face of it, remitting an action to him for trial, and against which order there had been no appeal and the time for appeal had expired. We have a discretion in matters of prohibition, which discretion I think we should in this case exercise by discharging the writ granted by Day, J., who, we think, ought not to have granted it.

LAWRANCE, J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for appellant, G. B. Howard & Fenner.

Solicitors for respondent, Robert Todd.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). June 24.

RAINE v. JOBSON & CO. (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Dock—"Factory"—"Undertakers"—Repair of ship—Factory and Workshop Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 37), s. 23—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.

The appellant's husband was at work on a vessel which was being repaired by the respondents in a dry dock hired by them for the purpose. In the course of his employment, when crossing from the vessel by a plank to the side of the dock the plank tilted, and he was thrown into the dock and killed.

Held (reversing the decision of the Court of Appeal), that the dock was, by section 7, sub-section 2, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, a "factory," and that the respondents as occupiers thereof were liable to pay compensation.

Appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (A. L. Smith, M.R., and Collins, L.J.).

The respondents carried on business as ship repairers at West Hartlepool, and their works adjoined the docks belonging to the North-Eastern Railway Co., but they had no dock of their own.

When they were about to repair a vessel, and it was necessary to have the vessel in a dry dock, they hired a dry dock from the North-Eastern Railway Co., as was done on the present occasion.

The dry dock was provided with dock gates, a steam crane, pumping machinery, and a blacksmith's shop, all the property of the North-Eastern Railway Co.

On the 29th of January, 1900, the repondents were in exclusive occupation of the dry dock for the purpose of examining and cleaning the bottom of a damaged steamship, and for such occupation they paid the North-Eastern Railway Co.

The water had been pumped out of the dock and the vessel duly shored up by the respondents' workmen.

While the process of examining and cleaning the vessel was going on, the appellant's husband, a labourer in the employment of the respondents, at their works, and then at work on the vessel, was directed to go ashore for some paraffin; and whilst he was walking along a plank connecting the vessel with the side of the dock the plank tilted and he fell to the bottom of the dock, sustaining injuries from which he died.

It was held by the county court judge, and the Court of Appeal held, that the deceased at the time of the accident was not employed on, in, or about a factory within the meaning of the Act.

R. J. Simey and H. A. Johnston, for the appellant.

Ruegg, K.C., and E. Shortt, for the respondents.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—I am of opinion that this judgment ought to be reversed. It appears to me that some difficulty has arisen from the artificial mode in which the Legislature has applied various sections of various Acts as ancillary to the Workmen's Compensation Act. I quite agree that it would appear from that Act of Parliament that it was not within the contemplation of that statute to deal with the relation between shipowners and sailors when engaged in their ordinary occupation of sailing upon the seas, or to bring them within that statute at all. But although I quite agree that that is the true view of what this Act of Parliament has done, it seems to me a most extraordinary consequence of that omission to suppose that thereupon everything that is done in or upon or near a ship is to be excluded from the operation of the Act of Parliament. It would be to my mind a most unreasonable and extraordinary extension of that immunity given to persons interested in seafaring adventure to suppose, because the accident happened in or upon a ship, that therefore it is to be excluded from the operation of the Act of Parliament generally. I know of no such principle; and therefore one must examine and see what the facts are that we are dealing with as regards the accident which is the subject-matter of this inquiry.

The respondents are a firm, part of whose business consists of repairing ships, and for the purpose of their business they hired a dock. I do not care for what purpose they hired it. For my own part, whether there was a ship in it or not, if they were engaged in some performance for which they required the use of a dry dock, and if in the course of that employment a workman was injured, they would, to my mind, under these Acts of Parliament, be clearly within these Acts and liable to pay compensation. The question of fact whether it happened on a ship or not appears to me an absolutely irrelevant inquiry. The fact that it was, or it is assumed that it was, on a ship is, as I said, irrelevant. It is perfectly immaterial whether it was on a ship or a landing-stage, or a staging, or what not. The respondents were the persons who were at that time the hirers of the dock—a dry dock. The performance intended to be pursued was that a ship was put into the dry dock in order to be cleaned and repaired. It is obvious that for the purpose of cleaning and repairing a ship the external part of that ship must be protected from water; and a dry dock is the appropriate machinery for effecting that object. This man appears to have been an ordinary labourer employed for the purpose of doing anything that was required to be done. In order to fetch something that was intended to be used for the purpose of the work, he was sent from the ship to the land upon a gangway. When he put his foot upon the gangway the gangway slipped, and he was precipitated for a distance of forty-eight feet down and killed. Assuming a dock to be within the statute—and as to that we had a very frank and proper admission that this dock is under the Act a "factory" within the meaning of the Act—here is a man killed by an accident in a "factory," the factory being a dock, and the accident happened in the course of his employment, while he was so employed in the dock by the persons who had hired the dock for the purpose of their trade.

I am not able at present to follow the train of reasoning by which the respondents sought to suggest that because the wooden structure which was inside the dock, and to which the work was being applied, was a ship, which, when floated into the sea, would be capable of being treated as a separate entity, and would be free from the operation of the Act generally—that is to convey to the dock in which the ship is placed the immunity which the ship itself would possess if sailing upon the high seas. Why that should be so I am wholly unable to understand. The place or the thing that is being used, the dry dock, is not at sea; it forms no part of that subject-matter to which this artificial immunity is given by the statute, but it is an ordinary piece of machinery intended for the purpose of repairing ships, of which machinery these defendants are in occupation, I should say, but at all events have the use of it in and about it. Therefore it seems to me that every element required by the statute is satisfied by the facts which are proved in this case. Therefore I am of opinion that this judgment should be reversed; and I move your lordships accordingly.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I am of the same opinion. The respondents, Messrs. Jobson & Co., are ship repairers at Hartlepool. They have a place of business there which in their evidence they call a "manufactory for the repair of ships," but I do not think it can be described as "a factory which is a shipbuilding yard," to use the expression which occurs in section 7, sub-section 3, of the Act. Having no water frontage they have no means of launching a vessel, nor have they any place of their own into which they can take a vessel for repair. When employed to repair a vessel which requires to be dry-docked, they hire a dock from the North-Eastern Railway Co., who seem to own all the dock accommodation in Hartlepool. That is what was done in the present case. Messrs. Jobson & Co. hired a dry dock, and were cleaning or repairing a vessel in it. A workman employed by them on this job—a labourer, but none the less a workman—met with personal injury by an accident. He slipped off a sort of gangway, fell into the dock, and was killed. Why is that not a case for compensation under the Act? If you translate the account of the accident from ordinary language into the phraseology of the statute, it seems to come under the very words of the enactment. The dock was a "factory" because it was a "dock" "to which some provision of the Factory Acts is applied by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895." Messrs. Jobson were "undertakers" because they had at the time the "actual use and occupation of the dock." The accident happened to a workman in "the dock," and it was an accident "arising out of and in the course of" his employment. I agree with counsel for the respondents that it is difficult, if not impossible, to reconcile the case of Merrill v. Wilson, ante, p. 161, [1901] 1 Q. B. 35, with Flowers v. Chambers, 47 W. R. 513, [1899] 1 Q. B. 142. Of the two I prefer the later case.

I think the decision under appeal must be reversed.

Lord SHAND.—I am of the same opinion. It cannot be disputed—indeed, it has not been disputed—that the dock in question is a "factory" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, s. 7. That statute provides that a "factory" in the Act "has the same meaning as in the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 to 1891," and "includes any dock to which any provision of the Factory Acts is applied by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895." Various provisions of these Factory Acts have been shown to be applied by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, and there is therefore no question that this dry dock is a "factory."

It only remains to ascertain whether the defendants were "undertakers" as defined by section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act. That section provides that the Act shall apply to employment by the "undertakers" on or in or about a factory, and that in the case of a factory the undertaker means "the occupier thereof within the meaning" (again) "of the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 to 1895." I am not able to perceive any ground upon which I can say that these defendants, the employers of the deceased workman, were not occupiers in the use of that factory. They had taken the dock in order to put the ship into it in order to execute work on her. The work upon which they were engaged was the cleaning and repairing of the bottom of the ship; and in order to perform this work the use and occupation of the dock for the time was necessary for them. They were thus in terms of the statute "undertakers" within the meaning of the Act, upon whom the responsibility to their servants for injury by accidents was imposed by the statute. The case is entirely different from that of a ship at sea, where the seaman who is injured is incurring only the ordinary maritime risks of men engaged in navigation. It is a case of shipbuilders or repairers who were in the use and occupation of a dock or factory, as defined in the statute, having servants working for them, one of whom sustained an accident with the fatal result described in the evidence. I cannot see any ground upon which it can be held that the employers and their workmen were not within the purview and terms of the statute.

Lord BRAMPTON.—I also am of opinion that the decision of the Court of Appeal ought to be reversed, and for the reasons which have been so fully stated by the Lord Chancellor in the judgment he has delivered; but I should like to make one observation of my own with reference to the last point which was so ingeniously and so lengthily argued before us, that it was not the dock but only the berth which was hired. The point was never raised at the trial, and I think it ought not to have been raised here, and our time has been occupied unnecessarily in discussing it.

Lord LINDLEY.—I shall confine myself to saying that I do not see how to get out of the language of the two sections—section 7 of the Act of 1897 coupled with section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895. I have tried, but I cannot do it. Therefore I agree that the appeal ought to be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the appellant, Charles H. Dodd, for J. J. Dodd, West Hartlepool.

Solicitors for the respondents, William Hurd & Son.

Court of Appeal.

From K. B. Div. (Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ.) — August 2.

ALDERTON v. J. & J. W. PALLISER. (a.)

County court—Practice—Prohibition—Judgment debtor outside district—Affidavit on application for judgment summons—Waiver—County Court Rules, 1889, ord. 25, r. 14a, App. Form 52a.

The requirements of ord. 25, r. 14a, of the County Court Rules, 1889, as to the form of an affidavit on an application for leave to issue a judgment summons against a debtor who does not dwell or carry on business and is not employed within the district of the court in which the judgment was obtained, cannot be waived by the debtor.

Appeal from the refusal of Bucknill, J., at chambers to grant a writ of prohibition directed to the judge of the Penrith County Court restraining further proceedings on a judgment summons and order of commitment made by the county court judge against the two defendants, the applicants for the writ.

The plaintiff, who carried on business at Plumpton, in the county of Cumberland, had supplied goods to the two defendants, who resided and carried on business in the city of Bradford as Palliser & Son.

On the 25th of May, 1900, the plaintiff obtained a judgment against the defendants in the county court of Cumberland, held at Penrith, for £15 17s. 4d. in respect of goods supplied, and a sum of 10s. only had been paid on this judgment.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The plaintiff proceeded to enforce the judgment by means of a judgment summons issued out of the Penrith County Court, and for that purpose, as the defendants neither dwelt nor carried on business nor were employed within the district of the court, it was necessary to obtain the leave of the judge before such summons could be issued.

The County Court Rules, 1889, ord. 25, provide: "Rule 14*a*.—Where a debtor does not dwell or carry on business and is not employed within the district of the court in which the judgment was obtained, the summons shall not be issued from that court without leave of the judge. The application for leave shall be made upon affidavit according to the form in the appendix, and leave shall not be granted unless the judge is satisfied that the evidence offered by such affidavit, if uncontradicted, would justify the making of an order of commitment against the debtor. If the leave be granted a copy of the affidavit shall be lodged with the registrar and annexed to the judgment summons and served therewith."

The plaintiff obtained leave and issued a judgment summons against the defendants in the Penrith County Court, upon which summons the defendants were (on the 7th of December, 1900) ordered to pay the balance of the judgment debt and costs amounting to £16 11s. 4d. by instalments of £2 every twenty-eight days. Nothing had been paid by the defendants on this order.

The plaintiff again applied on the 1st of March, 1901, to the judge of the county court at Penrith for leave to issue a judgment summons in respect of the instalments then in arrear, and upon an affidavit made by the plaintiff on the 1st of March leave to issue the judgment summons was granted by the judge.

This affidavit of the plaintiff, after setting out the formal paragraphs 1 and 2 of the prescribed form, stated: (3) The defendant John Palliser now lives at Joseph-street, Bradford, and the said J. W. Palliser resides at Greengill-street, Bradford; (4) the defendants carry on business as game and rabbit salesmen in Great James-street Market, Bradford, and are doing a good business on their own account. On the 7th of March, 1901, a judgment summons—returnable on the 15th of April—was issued out of the county court against each defendant. When the judgment summons came before the judge on the 15th of April, a letter from the defendants' solicitor was put in stating that both defendants were undischarged bankrupts and were in extremely poor circumstances, and the learned judge adjourned the hearing until the 10th of May in order to give the defendants time to file a joint affidavit. When the case again came before him, he on the 10th of May made a commitment order on the judgment summonses for the imprisonment of both defendants for twenty-eight days unless they paid £6 5*s*. 6d. into court within six weeks.

A summons was then taken out by the defendants for a writ of prohibition restraining all further proceedings on the judgment summons and commitment order against each defendant upon the ground that the leave of the court was necessary for the issue of the judgment summons; that such leave could only be given by the judge upon an affidavit in the prescribed form; that the plaintiff's affidavit of the 1st of March on which the judge granted leave was not in the prescribed form and was insufficient and defective in that there was no statement contained therein as to the apparent yearly rent or value of the house or shop in which each defendant lived, and that there was no statement showing that their business was profitable or that either of the defendants had the means to pay; and there was no statement as to whether the defendants were married or not and whether they respectively had any children. The defendants also stated in their affidavit that the reason they did not attend the hearing of the judgment summons was that neither of them could pay the railway fares and could not afford to be represented.

In reply the plaintiff stated that the defendants had waived any objection they might have raised to the jurisdiction of the county court by the statements made in their affidavit applying to the court to make an order not exceeding 2s. a month as being under the circumstances the "utmost they could possibly pay."

Bucknill, J., at chambers refused to grant a writ of prohibition on the ground that the defect in the jurisdiction of the county court judge had been waived by the defendants.

The Divisional Court (Ridley and Bigham, JJ.) held that the defect could and had been waived by the defendants, and affirmed the decision of Bucknill, J.

The defendants appealed.

Lowenthal, for the defendants.—The Divisional Court were in error when they held that a defect in jurisdiction apparent on the face of the proceedings could be waived: McIntosh v. Simpkins, ante, p. 241, [1901] 1 Q. B. 487. Where the court is only made cognizant of the defect by evidence such a defect can be waived: see Farquharson v. Morgan, 42 W. R. 306, [1894] 1 Q. B. 552, and a dictum of Collins, L.J., in McIntosh v. Simpkins.

W. Whateley, for the plaintiff.—Where the inferior court could under circumstances have jurisdiction there can be no waiver. That, I submit, is the distinction to be drawn between the cases where the waiver has been held to be good or bad. In this case, as the county court judge had jurisdiction, and there has only been an irregularity in the proceedings which could be waived and has been waived, the order for prohibition was rightly made: Jones v. James, 19 L. J. Q. B. 257; Jones v. Owen, 5 Dowl. & L. 669; Mouflet v. Washburn, 54 L. T. Rep. 16, 34 W. R. Dig. 51; Moore v. Gamgee, 38 W. R. 669, 25 Q. B. D. 244.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., said: It cannot be denied that, according to the decision of this court in McIntosh v. Simpkins, an affidavit substantially in the form required by section 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869, and the County Court Rules, 1889, is a statutory condition precedent to the jurisdiction of the county court. That being so, the next question is whether the absence of this preliminary statutory condition appeared on the face of the proceedings. In my opinion it clearly did. Its absence was apparent on the face of the affidavit, which was certainly part of the proceedings, because, before the county court judge could make the order, he was bound by the statute to have the affidavit before him. It must, therefore, be taken that whatever appeared or did not appear on the affidavit appeared or did not appear on the face of the proceedings. Therefore, the statutory condition precedent to the jurisdiction is wanting, and its want appeared on the face of the proceedings. Is there any reason why the writ of prohibition should not issue? It was said that the want of jurisdiction had been waived. I will assume, for the purposes of the case, that there had been a waiver, though I do not in any way say that in fact there has been a waiver. In my opinion a party could not waive the want of jurisdiction appearing on the face of the proceedings. Farquharson v. Morgan is a clear authority for that proposition. I think it is impossible to say after the decision in McIntosh v.

Simpkins, that total absence of jurisdiction did not appear on the face of the proceedings. The cases which have been relied upon by the respondents' counsel are all cases of an irregularity in the course of the proceedings, and the proceedings were not void ab initio. I think it right to add that those who were familiar with the proceedings in county courts and who knew the class of persons affected by those proceedings knew quite well that, if a judgment were issued against a person residing out of the district when it might turn out that it was not right to summon him to the court, great hardship might be inflicted on him by compelling him to go to the court and state his objections to the issue of the summons. For that reason the Legislature has thought it right to say that certain matters must be laid before the county court judge before he issues the summons, and it is made a condition precedent to his jurisdiction that this should be done. This was not a matter of mere technicality, but was a matter of substance and of merit. The court must see that the conditions precedent to the exercise of coercive jurisdiction had been fulfilled. I entirely agree with Lord Davey in Farquharson v. Morgan, where he said that "the parties cannot by agreement confer upon any court or judge a coercive jurisdiction which the court or judge does not by law possess." The appeal is therefore allowed, and the writ of prohibition must issue.

STIRLING, L.J., in concurring, said he entirely agreed as to the great care that should be used to see that in dealing with the liberty of the subject all the conditions precedent had been strictly observed before an order out of the jurisdiction of the court should be issued. This was not a mere technical objection that the defendants had raised. It would be easy to give cases where a great hardship might be imposed on a defendant if the practice were relaxed and the court allowed such orders to be made. A defendant might constantly be required to attend at a court that was a long distance away, and thus be put to considerable expense and loss of time in defending himself against the order.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, I. Goldman, for A. V. Hammond, Bradford; Bower, Cotton, & Bower, for Scott & Allen, Penrith.

From Chan. Div. (Rigby, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) — Aug. 2.

In re MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY. WILLMOT v. GARDNER. (a.)

Contract—Interest—Tradesman's account—Notification that interest would be charged—Implied agreement by customer to pay interest.

During a period of ten years a tradesman had delivered to a customer, since deceased, a yearly account in which it was stated that interest would be charged on all sums due for more than three years. The customer never objected to the charge, and had from time to time made payments on account generally.

Held, that there was an implied agreement to pay interest.

This was an appeal from a decision of Cozens-Hardy, J.

The action was for the administration of the estate of a testator. A claim was carried in by a firm of tailors whom the testator had employed for a sum of £3,318 5s. 3d., of which £2,162 9s. 3d. was for goods supplied and £1,155 16s. was for interest on overdue accounts.

During a period of ten years the claimants had delivered to the testator a yearly account in which they had charged him with interest on sums which had been due from him for three years and longer. He had never objected to the charge of interest, and he had from time to time made payments to the claimants on account generally. This was the only evidence of any agreement by him to pay interest.

Cozens-Hardy, J., was inclined to think that this course of dealing was evidence of an agreement by the testator to pay interest as charged, but his lordship was of opinion that by reason of the decision in In re Edwards, Williams v. Trench, 61 L. J. Ch. 22, 40 W. R. Dig. 102, he was bound to hold that an agreement to pay interest was not proved, and he accordingly rejected the claim for interest.

The claimants appealed.

Rawlins, K.C., and R. J. Parker, for the claimants.

Eve, K.C., and Ashworth James, for the executors.

RIGBY, L.J.—I think there is evidence of an agreement to pay interest on the terms on which it was actually charged—that is to say, not immediately, but after the lapse of three years from the time it became due, and that the claimants are entitled to recover.

COLLINS, L.J.—It is true that the claim is against the estate of a deceased person, but I do not think that that is really material in the sense that the question of a person being dead generally is material in these cases. It is not a question of something that he is said to have said or done as to which there is no evidence at all except the evidence of one living person against the deceased. This is a case where the evidence is the acts and admissions of the deceased himself. There are facts as to which there is no dispute. The fact that the bills were sent in, the fact that on those bills the claim for interest was made, and the fact that payments were made thereupon, all stand outside controversy altogether, and that being the case what is that evidence of? That is for a jury, and it could not be withdrawn from a jury. It seems to me that the reasonable inference from that is that the deceased dealt with these people on the footing that he was to pay interest after three years.

ROMER, L.J., agreed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Maude & Tunnicliffe; Farrer & Co.

From Chan. Div. (Rigby, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) — Aug. 2.

HILDESHEIMER v. FAULKNER. (a.)

Copyright—Penalties—Number of offences—"Sum not exceeding £10"—Minimum sum—25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, s. 6.

The copyright in certain pictures was infringed by the distribution of over a million copies. Upon a summons to fix the amount of the penalties payable under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, s. 6, which fixes the penalty for each offence at a "sum not exceeding £10,"

Held, that each copy constituted a separate offence, but that the court was not bound to fix a penalty for each offence but could give an aggregate sum for all, even though that sum if divided by the number of offences would give for each offence a fraction of a farthing.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (48 W. R 682). reversed.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

This was an appeal from a decision of Kekewich, J. (reported 48 W. R. 682).

The action was brought to restrain the defendants from infringing the plaintiff's copyright in twelve pictures used in connection with packets of cigarettes.

On the 22nd of May, 1900, an injunction was granted restraining the defendants from selling or distributing prints of the twelve pictures other than those made by the plaintiff, and an inquiry was directed to be made in chambers how many copies of the pictures printed by certain other named persons for the defendants had been put in circulation by them.

The master by his certificate found that 1,012,600 copies of the pictures printed for the defendants by the persons named had been put in circulation by the defendants.

By section 6 of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, "If any person, not being the proprietor for the time being of copyright in any painting . . . shall, without the consent of such proprietor, repeat, copy, colourably imitate, or otherwise multiply for sale, or knowing that such repetition, copy, or other imitation has been unlawfully made, shall sell . . . any copy . . . of the work . . . such person for every such offence shall forfeit a sum not exceeding £10."

The plaintiff took out a summons for the determination of the amount of the penalty to be paid by the defendants.

The questions were: (1) Whether the order for the printing of a million copies constituted a million offences or only one offence; (2) whether, if each copy constituted a separate offence, the penalty should be fixed at one farthing for each copy put in circulation, which would amount in the whole to £1,054 15s. 10d., or whether it should be fixed at some smaller fraction of a penny for each copy.

It was stated that the cost of producing a million copies of the pictures was only about £100.

Kekewich, J., held that the plaintiff was entitled to a penalty for each copy circulated, and that he was bound to fix the penalty at not less than a farthing for each copy. His lordship stayed execution pending an appeal on the terms of the defendants paying £200 to the plaintiff and paying the rest of the amount into court.

The defendants appealed.

Warmington, K.C., and A. J. Walter, for the defendants, argued that the order given by the defendants for a million copies constituted only one offence and that the court was not bound to impose a penalty of at least a farthing for each copy circulated. The court might give a lump sum and was not to apportion a certain sum to each offence.

Warrington, K.C., C. A. Russell, K.C., and Hildesheimer, for the plaintiff, contended that on the true construction of the section a definite sum was to be forfeited for each offence, and that sum must be represented by some existing coin of the realm. The case must be treated as if there were a million actions, one for each offence. This was in accordance with the view of the majority of the Irish Court of Appeal in Green v. The Irish Independent Co., [1899] 1 Ir. Rep. 386.

RIGBY, L.J., said it had been agreed that if the court considered that the plaintiff was not entitled to the amount given by the learned judge he was to retain the sum of £200, which had been already paid to him. In his lordship's opinion the court was not bound to fix a sum made up of the separate sums which would have been recovered if there had had been a separate action for each offence. There was no such necessity. In his opinion £200 was a proper sum to give, and it was not necessary to go through the operation of adding up all the sums which would have been given if there had been a separate action in respect of each offence.

COLLINS, L.J., was of the same opinion. The defendants were technically within section 6, and they had become liable for penalties in respect of a million copies of the pictures. It was admitted that there were a million offences and that a million penalties had been incurred. The question was: At what rate were the penalties to be fixed? Section 6 spoke of a "sum" not exceeding £10. The penalty must be between £10 and something else. It was said that the something else must be a "sum," and that a "sum" could not be that which had no equivalent in the coinage of the realm; and the learned judge had given effect to that contention, and had held that he was bound to assess the penalty at not less than a farthing for each offence, though his own view was, if he felt at liberty to follow it, that the aggregate amount of the penalties ought not to exceed £200. But he held that he was bound by authority to assess the penalty at not less than a farthing for each offence. Was there then anything in section 6 which compelled the court to do that which would be a great injustice? The late Lord Esher in Tuck & Sons v. Priester, 36 W. R. 93, 19 Q. B. D. 629, at p. 638, said, with reference to section 6: "We must be very careful in construing that section, because it imposes a penalty. If there is a reasonable interpretation which will avoid the penalty in any particular case we must adopt that construction. If there are two reasonable constructions we must give the more lenient one. That is the settled rule for the construction of penal sections." In the present case the action was brought, not in respect of one infringement, but in respect of a million; there was one judgment and one sum was recovered, though it was assessed with reference to each offence. There was no question of levying more than one sum, and there was no necessity for the purpose of levying execution to assess any particular sum in respect of each offence. As was pointed out by FitzGibbon, L.J., in Green v. The Irish Independent Co., at p. 392, the only reason for fixing a farthing as the minimum of damages is "because execution cannot be issued for less." But when there was no necessity to issue execution for that sum, what necessity was there for fixing the penalty at a sum which was represented by a coin? His lordship could see no reason why in such a case the penalty should be limited with reference to a coin. In the present case the execution could be only for the aggregate sum, and his lordship could see nothing in the statute to prevent the court from giving an aggregate sum. The decision of the Irish Court did not bind this court, though this court would treat it with the greatest respect. But in that case FitzGibbon, L.J., dissented from the majority, and took the view which he, Collins, L.J., was now taking, and he preferred the reasoning of FitzGibbon, L.J., to that of the other two judges. It was suggested, though this was not pressed by the appellants' counsel, that there was only one offence in the present case. So to hold would involve overruling the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench in Ex parte Beal, 16 W. R. 852, L. R. 3 Q. B. 387, which had stood for a number of years, and it could not be overruled now, even if it were not, as his lordship thought it was, a right decision. In two other cases decided respectively by Charles, J., and Wright, J., the point now taken appeared not to have been raised. Now that it had been raised his lordship, for the reasons given by FitzGibbon, L.J., was of opinion that the court was not bound to fix the penalty at a farthing for each offence. He could see no reason in the words of the statute or in common sense for so doing. The court was not limited by the standard of coinage existing from time to time. His lordship thought that judgment ought to be reversed. In deciding as he did Kekewich, J., felt himself bound by a decision which did not bind this court.

ROMER, L.J., agreed. He should have been sorry if this court had felt bound to affirm the decision of the court below, especially as the court would then really have been doing that which the learned judge would not have wished to do, had he not thought that he was bound by authority to do it. If the plaintiff was right, the Act would lead to great hardship. The court might be bound to award a sum which would obviously be far in excess of what ought to be given; and the judgment would be doing that which the Act had carefully avoided doing—namely, fixing a minimum penalty, when the Act had only fixed a maximum. And, moreover, the sum to be awarded would fluctuate according to the coinage of the country for the time being. These reasons showed that, if the court was not bound to do so, it ought not to put such a construction on the Act. His lordship thought the court was not bound to do that. He agreed that the Legislature did regard each unauthorized copy as constituting a separate offence, and he agreed also that the sum awarded ought to be one which was recognizable and would form the proper subject of execution. But why was the court bound to fix a sum beyond what it thought just when the action was brought to recover penalities for a number of infringements? So long as the judgment was for a sum for which execution could be levied, was there anything which bound the court to give for each offence an amount represented by a recognized coin, and not less than one farthing? His lordship could not think that this was the right construction of section 6. The section did not fix a minimum and did not speak of any coin; it only said, "a sum not exceeding £10." His lordship could see no reason why, when the action was brought for a number of offences, a sum should not be given which, when divided by a number of offences, would give for each a fraction of the lowest coin of the realm. It was said that the court had no power to do this, because when the action was brought for a million offences it must be treated as if there had been a million actions. His lordship declined so to treat it. And, even if it were so treated, it by no means followed that the court would be bound to give a million judgments. So long as the judgment was in proper form his lordship could see no reason why it should not be for one aggregate sum, even though that sum, if divided by the number of offences, would give for each offence something which was not recognized as a coin of the realm. But his lordship was by no means satisfied that a farthing was the least coin recognized in this country.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Cartwright & Cunningham; Rehders & Higgs.

From K. B. Div. (Rigby, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) — June 26; July 15.

CAMPBELL DAVYS v. LLOYD. (a.)

Nuisance—Non-feasance—Highway—Abatement—Right of private individual to abate.

Even if the right to abate a nuisance by an individual for purposes of passage exists in the case of a nuisance arising by non-feasance, it does not justify an individual in entering and erecting a permanent structure on another person's land, inasmuch as the right of the public upon a highway is that of going and coming only, and the right of abatement in an individual is merely ancillary thereto. Nor is an individual in such a case justified in his action by the fact that the local authority have the right to enter to abate the nuisance but have failed to do so, for the default of the local authority cannot extend the burden imposed on the land.

This was an appeal from a decision of Bucknill, J.

The plaintiff was the owner of a piece of land in the parish of Llanwrtyd, in the county of Brecon, lying between the River Irfon and the high road leading from Llanwrtyd to Abergweryn and of the moiety of the bed of the River Irfon adjoining the said piece of land.

The defendant Lloyd was the owner of certain lands abutting on the River Irfon opposite the plaintiff's piece of land.

There was a highway across the plaintiff's land and the river by means of a ford, on to the defendants' land, and at one time there had also been a footbridge for passengers across the river.

This bridge had been destroyed for many years prior to the year 1898, in which year the defendants re-erected it.

The plaintiff caused that part of it which was on his land to be removed.

The defendants subsequently re-erected it, whereupon the plaintiff brought the present action for trespass.

The defendants pleaded "not possessed" and that there was a highway over the locus in quo by means of a footbridge, and that the defendants, having occasion to use the highway, entered upon the locus in quo and did the acts complained of without unnecessary damage for the purpose of repairing the highway.

The jury found the issue on "not possessed" for the plaintiff and the other issue for the defendants.

Bucknill, J., accordingly directed judgment to be entered for the defendants.

The plaintiff appealed.

Eady, K.C., and Sankey, for the appellant.—The right to repair is co-relative with the obligation to repair, and where there is no obligation there is no right: Reg. v. Inhabitants of Southampton, 18 Q. B. 841; Coke's Institutes, vol. 2, p. 697; Sutcliffe v. Surveyors of the Highways of Sowerby, 8 W. R. 40; Regina v. Wilson, 18 Q. B. 348. A member of the public who repairs a highway is a mere trespasser: Eyre v. New Forest Highway Board, 56 J. P. 517; Robertson v. Mayor of Bristol, 48 W. R. 498, [1900] 2 Q. B. 198. A man as a member of the public has no right to put up a bridge at all or to replace a bridge, and his remedy is to take proceedings against the persons liable to replace the bridge.

S. T. Evans, K.C., and John Lloyd, for the respondents.—This is a public nuisance and may be abated by the persons who are prejudiced by it without their being compelled to take proceedings to remedy it: Vyner's Abridgment, vol. 2, p. 282, vol. 16, p. 20; Hawkins' Pleas of the Crown, vol. 1, p. 692; The Practical Register (Lilly), 2nd ed., vol. 2, p. 306; Wood's Institutes, p. 443; Mayor of Colchester v. Brook, 7 Q. B. 339. [COLLINS, L.J., referred to Dimes v. Petley, 15 Q. B. 276.] Dawes v. Hawkins, 8 C. B. N. S. 848, 9 W. R. Dig. 85. It is settled law that a man can abate a nuisance and there is no distinction between different kinds of nuisance.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Eady, K.C., in reply, cited Hubert v. Groves, 1 Esp. 148; Winterbottom v. Lord Derby, L. R. 2 Ex. 316, 15 W. R. C. L Dig. 93; Earl of Lonsdale v. Nelson, 2 B. & C. 302; Lemmon v. Webb, [1895] A. C. 1, 43 W. R. Dig. 125; Hawkins' Pleas of the Crown, vol. 1, p. 711; Coke's Institutes, vol. 2, p. 697.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 15.—COLLINS, L.J.—This was an action of trespass by erecting a bridge over the plaintiff's land consisting of one moiety of the bed of the River Irfon, in Wales. The defendants' pleas were "not possessed," and that there was a highway over the locus in quo by means of a footbridge, and the defendants, having occasion to use the said way, entered upon the locus in quo, and because the bridge had been destroyed erected and laid a footbridge across the river, and necessarily did the acts complained of, without unnecessary damage, for the purpose of using the said highway. The jury found the issue on "not possessed" for the plaintiff, and the other issue for the defendants. On an appeal by the plaintiff to this court, the finding for the defendants was impeached on various grounds, and in addition it was contended that, even accepting the findings, the defendants were entitled to judgment. We decided to determine this point first, as, if the defendants are right upon it, it disposes of the action. It was contended for the plaintiff that, assuming it to be the fact that a highway for foot-passengers by means of a footbridge across the river existed, the fact that that bridge had been destroyed gave no right to the defendants to come upon the plaintiff's land and erect a new one. I think this contention is well founded. Though there was evidence that a bridge had once existed at the place in question, and the jury found that there was a highway over it, it was proved that for many years before 1898 that bridge had ceased to exist. In that year the defendants had erected a footbridge in the place where it now is, and the plaintiff had caused that part of it which passed over his land to be removed. The defendants had subsequently re-erected it in the present form across the plaintiff's land, and this action was brought. There was no proof of any right in, or obligation on, the defendants to repair the bridge, neither was there any proof of any such obligation on the plaintiff. The only right which the defendants set up is that which is averred in the plea. The defendants do not contend that they are in any better position than any other member of the public who, having occasion to use the way, finds there is no bridge where one once existed. The question is, therefore, whether in such circumstances a member of the public who wishes to cross is entitled, not merely by some temporary makeshift serving the particular occasion to get across, but to build a permanent structure on the plaintiff's land for that purpose. Mr. Evans, for the defendant, contended that it was simply a case of abating a nuisance from which he suffered a special inconvenience, such as was held to be justifiable as long ago as Cro. Car. 185, where a passenger was held entitled not only to open but to throw down a gate placed across a highway. But there is a broad difference between removing an obstruction, which has been wrongfully placed in the highway, and making good by a permanent structure the result of mere non-feasance on the part of those charged with the duty of repairing, and I doubt whether such an operation could properly fall under the term "abatement." Even if the right to "abate" can be said to exist at all in the case of a nuisance arising from mere non-feasance, as to which see the argument of Parke, J., and the judgment of Best, J., in Earl of Lonsdale v. Nelson I do not think the cases which establish the right to abate by an individual for the purpose of passage would extend to protect such acts as were done by the defendants in this case. If this were the law, every individual who was obstructed in his desire to cross would be equally entitled to erect a permanent structure of his own design, although the obligation to repair and the incidental right to determine the method might be in other persons, who, moreover, might be reached by indictment. The right of abatement by individuals is not regarded with favour by the law. In the words of Lord Hale: "But because this many times occasions tumults and disorders the best way to reform public nuisances is by the ordinary course of justice." See this cited in Earl of Lonsdale v. Nelson: "If," says Lord Campbell in Dimes v. Petley, 15 Q. B. 276, at p. 283, "there be a nuisance in a public highway, a private individual cannot of his own authority abate it, unless it does him a special injury, and he can only interfere with it as far as is necessary to exercise his right of passing along the highway; and, without considering whether he must show that the abatement of the nuisance was absolutely necessary to enable him to pass, we clearly think that he cannot justify doing any damage to the property of the person who has improperly placed the nuisance in the highway, if avoiding it he might have passed on with reasonable convenience." Again in Mayor of Colchester v. Brooke, 7 Q. B. 339, at p. 377, Lord Denman, in delivering the judgment of the court, says: "A public nuisance becomes a private one to him who is specially, and in some particular way, inconvenienced thereby, as in the case of a gate across a highway which prevents a traveller from passing, and which he may therefore throw down, but the ordinary remedy for a public nuisance is itself public, that of indictment, and each individual who is only injured as one of the public can no more abate than he can bring an action." It may be that, even in the case of the gate, an action could not have been maintained (see Winterbottom v. Lord Derby, and that therefore there may, in the case of positive nuisance, be a right to abate where there is no cause of action, there being insufficient special damage. But the difference between public nuisances arising by commission and those arising by omission is in the view of the law radical, since in the latter case, however clear and special the damage to the individual, he can maintain no action. See in the case of a highway, Hawkins' P. C. 707, citing Cowper, 687, a rule which has been followed in many recent cases: see Cowley v. Newmarket Local Board, [1892] A. C. 345, 41 W. R. Dig. 85. There would be nothing anomalous, therefore, if the rule were that the right to abate a nuisance to a highway does not apply to nuisances due to nonfeasance by the repairing authority, and it is remarkable that no instance apparently can be found in the books of abatement in such a case, unless indeed that which Best, J., described as an exception in Earl of Lonsdale v. Nelson may be so called. An obstruction may be abated by removing it, but in the case which we have before us considerable constructive work would be necessary to place the road in proper condition so as completely to get rid of the nuisance, and I doubt whether, if "abatement" can be said to include this, the right to abate in such a sense could be held to exist in the case of a nuisance by nonfeasance which has resulted in the obliteration of part of a highway. This is by no means inconsistent with the right to deal with a difficulty in crossing on some particular occasion by putting down a plank or a stepping-stone, for to do this might well be a reasonable incident of the right of passage, and would throw no additional burden on the dedicating owner. But, however this may be, the right, if it exists, could not, I think, be extended to cover such acts as those admittedly done by the defendants in this case. It must always be borne in mind that the right of the public upon a highway is that of going and coming only, and the right of "abatement" in an individual is only ancillary thereto. The dedicating owner, therefore, is not bound to accept a greater burden, and may complain if it is imposed upon him. I think the appeal should be allowed, and judgment entered for the plaintiff, with an injunction in the terms which will be stated by Romer, L.J.

ROMER, L.J.—The point involved in this appeal is a short one. I will assume for the purposes of the appeal that there was formerly a bridge over the River Irfon at or near the place where the bridge now in dispute was erected by the defendants, and that there was a public right of way over that old bridge, as found by the jury. But it is admitted by the defendants that the plaintiff was under no obligation to repair or replace the old bridge, and that they themselves were under no such personal obligation. It is contended by the defendants that the obligation to repair the old bridge, and to replace it when necessary, is in some local authority, and that consequently that local authority had the right to repair and replace. But admitting this contention to be true for the purposes of the point we have now to decide, it is clear, as pointed out by Wills, J., in Eyre v. New Forest Highway Board, that, where there is no obligation to repair, there can be (in the absence of any special power given) no right to repair. Although, therefore, the local authority may have the right to come upon the plaintiff's land for the purpose of re-erecting a bridge, the defendants have no such right to do so by virtue of any general right of repairing and replacing the bridge. And it is not established here that what the defendants did in entering upon the plaintiff's land and erecting a new bridge was by the authority and on behalf of the local authority, so that their act can be regarded as the act of the local authority. And, seeing that the plaintiff was under no obligation to repair or replace the bridge, he cannot be prejudiced by any default on the part of the local authority. The default of the local authority cannot extend the burden placed upon the plaintiff's land, and give to other persons a right to go on that land which could not have existed if the local authority had not been guilty of default. But then the defendants say that, though they may have had no right to enter upon the plaintiff's land by virtue of any general right of repairing or replacing, they had, by virtue of the public right of way, and as members of the public, a right to come to the place in question and try and pass over the river, and that, finding a legal nuisance existing by reason of the fact that the old bridge had been allowed to decay and disappear, they had a right to abate the nuisance by re-erecting the bridge. This is a very far-reaching contention on the part of the defendants, and, if well founded, might lead to strange results. For instance, a local authority, bound and entitled to repair, a bridge which falls suddenly into need of extensive repair, or is swept away by a flood, and properly taking advice as to the best means of repairing or re-erecting the bridge, might find itself forestalled by the impatience of some member of the public who wanted to pass over, and some repairs executed or new bridge put up of which the local authority wholly disapproves. It cannot be that in such a case the first member of the public who happens to come to the bridge to pass over has a right to do extensive works, if he chooses to bear the expense. And, if the works necessitate an entry on land of a private owner not part of the highway, it appears to me that it cannot be that any member of the public has a right to go on that land for the purpose of repairing or replacing the bridge. I think that there must be some limitation of the alleged right of abating such a legal nuisance as that I am now considering. In Earl of Lonsdale v. Nelson, Best, J., said that there was no decided case which sanctions the abatement by an individual of nuisances of omission, except that of cutting the branches of trees which overhang a public road, on the private property of the person who cuts them. This authority has been observed upon by Lord Davey in Lemmon v. Webb. But, whether or not Best, J., was justified in stating or suggesting that there was such a general rule as he indicated, or whether or not to such a rule, if it exists, there may not be other exceptions than the cutting of trees, I do not think we need decide in this case. For I think that where the question concerns a substantial structure, such as the bridge erected in this case, and when the abatement of the nuisance cannot be effected in ordinary course by the individual going upon and passing along the highway in the way in which he has the right as a member of the public, and where he has (as in the case before us) in order to erect the structure to go and remain and do work upon land, in a manner not justified by the mere exercise of the public right of way, and the land belongs to a person who is not guilty of causing the nuisance, then he cannot justify the entry on the land and the erection of the structure as against the owner of the land by alleging that he was abating a nuisance. I think, therefore, that in this case the defendants were not justified in entering upon the plaintiff's land and erecting their bridge upon it, and that consequently their act was wrongful as against the plaintiff, and entitled him to remove the bridge so far as it was erected on his land. I agree in thinking that the appeal should succeed, and that, notwithstanding the findings of the jury, the judgment for the defendants must be set aside. There must be an injunction restraining the defendants, their agents and servants, from preventing the plaintiff from removing from his land the bridge erected by them. The plaintiff should get the costs of the appeal. He will also get the general costs of the action, except the costs of the issue as to the right of way, which will be paid by him, with set-off.

RIGBY, L.J., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Riddell, Vaizey, & Smith; J. B. Somerville, for A. G. Vaughan, Builth.

From K. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, M.R., and Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ.) — July 2.

TURNER v. SAWDON & CO. (a.)

Master and servant—Contract of employment—Salesman—Refusal of master to provide work—Readiness to pay salary—Extent of master's obligation.

By an agreement in writing the defendants agreed to engage and employ the plaintiff as their representative salesman for four years and to pay him a salary of £250 a year, and the plaintiff agreed to devote his time to the service of the defendants. The defendants, considering that they had ground to complain of the plaintiff's conduct, ceased to avail themselves of his services during the term of four years, but offered to pay him his full salary.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain an action against the defendants for breach of the contract to employ him.

Application for judgment or a new trial in an action tried before Kennedy, J., and a jury at Leeds assizes.

The plaintiff was a commercial traveller. The defendants carried on business as cotton warp agents at Bradford.

On the 29th of March, 1898, the plaintiff being then in the employment of the defendants, an agreement in writing was entered into between the plaintiff and the defendants, which contained the following material clauses: (1) "The said G. E. Sawdon & Co. agree to continue to engage and employ the said Ernest Turner as their servant and representative salesman from the 1st of March, 1898, for a period of four years ending the 28th of February, 1902." (2) "The said G. E. Sawdon & Co. further agree to remunerate the said Ernest Turner for his services by a payment to him of a salary of £250 a year, to be paid in monthly instalments." (3) "The said Ernest Turner agrees to devote the whole of his time to the business of the said G. E. Sawdon & Co., to faithfully serve them as heretofore in soliciting orders and generally in aiding to conduct the business, and not to divulge to any competitor or other person any of the business secrets of the said G. E. Sawdon & Co. whilst in their service, and to carefully obey their directions from time to time, and will keep, protect, and promote the success of the said business as far as he can."

The plaintiff alleged a breach of the above agreement on the part of the defendants, and brought this action to recover damages.

The evidence showed that the plaintiff continued to perform his duties under the agreement until the 31st of December, 1900, when a letter was handed to him enclosing his salary, and stating that the firm had decided that he should take a month's holiday, receiving his pay all the same, and that he would not be expected to do any more business on behalf of the firm; that he returned on the following day and was requested to leave; and that on the 2nd of January, 1901, circulars were issued by the defendants to customers stating that the plaintiff had no authority to transact any business on their behalf.

Under these circumstances the plaintiff refused to receive any further salary, and claimed the right to treat the defendants as having repudiated the contract.

The defendants contended that, as they were ready and willing to pay the plaintiff his full salary, he could not maintain this action. They asserted that their reason for not giving him any more work was that he had not complied with their orders and directions, and had interfered in the business contrary to his duty, and had commenced carrying on business on his own account in competition with the defendants.

The jury found that the plaintiff was ready and willing to continue to carry out his part of the agreement, that the defendants' conduct was a breach of the contract, and that it was a substantial breach, and they assessed damages at £125.

On further consideration Kennedy, J., gave judgment for the plaintiff for £125.

The defendants applied for judgment or, in the alternative, for a new trial.

Tindal Atkinson, K.C., and Beverley, for the defendants.—The question is, What, on the true construction of the agreement, is the obligation imposed upon the defendants? Reading the agreement as a whole, the only obligation on the defendants is to pay the plaintiff a salary of £250 a year for four years. The plaintiff contends that there is a further obligation to give him actual work. The case of Emmens v. Elderton, 4 H. L. Cas. 624, is a clear authority against that contention. The case of Turner v. Goldsmith, 39 W. R. 547, [1891] 1 Q. B. 544, is distinguishable from this case. There the plaintiff was to be paid by commission; here the plaintiff is only to be paid a salary, and he is not being deprived of any part of his salary. The question, being one of the construction of a written document, ought to have been decided by the judge, and the case ought not to have been left to the jury at all.

Scott Fox, K.C., and W. J. Waugh, for the plaintiff.—The obligation to "engage and employ" the plaintiff is separate and distinct from the obligation to pay him salary. If the word "employ" is ambiguous, the question as to its meaning in this case was rightly left to the jury. If not, it ought to be construed according to its natural and primary meaning. It imports an obligation to give work, if it is possible. The plaintiff is entitled to enjoy the advantage of being able to go on the market as the defendants' representative. The plaintiff was justified in treating the refusal to employ him as a repudiation of the contract.

They referred to Smith v. Thompson, 8 C. B. 44, and Bunning v. The Lyric Theatre, 71 L. T. Rep. 396, 10 Times L. R. 583, 43 W. R. Dig. 48.

A. L. SMITH, M.R.—This is an action for breach of contract which was tried before Kennedy, J., and a jury. It has given rise to some complication, chiefly because the learned judge left the question of the construction of the agreement to the jury. The agreement does not contain any doubtful term such as could properly have been left to the jury, and in my opinion it was clearly for the judge to construe it. Kennedy, J., did not put his own construction on the contract, and it is now necessary for us to say what in our opinion is the true construction of it. I do not say that the meaning of the agreement quite clear, but I have come to the conclusion that the result of the trial was not right. The contract itself is an ordinary enough contract, but the action which has been brought on it seems to me to be extraordinary. It is brought by a man against his master. It is not brought to recover wages, and it could not be so brought, for it is clear that the master has always been ready and willing to pay the man the full wages contracted for. The plaintiff's case is that, though his master offered him his full wages, yet the master is under a further obligation—viz., an obligation during the period of the contract to find him continuous employment, or at any rate some sort of employment, and to keep him at work. I never heard of such an action before and I can only say that it is a novelty to me that, where a master is ready to pay his servant every penny of his wages and every pennyworth of the consideration contracted for in the contract of employment, but says that he does not require his services any further, the servant can then sue the master for damages for not employing him. Kennedy, J., had never heard of such an action either, but he left the whole case to the jury, and the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff and assessed the damages at £125. The present case is not like the case of Turner v. Goldsmith, where wages were to be paid by commission. In that case no doubt there was an obligation on the master to provide work so that commission might be earned. Here the master agreed to continue to engage and employ the servant for a term of four years as his salesman and to pay him at the rate of £250 a year. The master said in effect, "I will retain you for four years, and will pay you £250 a year." The obligation on the master was to pay the servant £250 a year during the term of four years, but, in my opinion, it was within the province of the master to say at any time that he did not require his services any further. The master considered that he had ground to complain of the servant's conduct, and said that, though he would not dismiss him, but would go on paying him his wages, yet he would not provide him any further with work. Where is the obligation on the master to supply the servant with work? It is said that the contract is to continue to engage and employ the plaintiff, and the reason given for the plaintiff's contention that his master is bound, according to his undertaking, to give him work is this, that if he does not keep his hand in as a salesman, he will not be such a useful salesman as he would otherwise be. But where is any such undertaking to be found in the contract? That argument converts this contract of hiring and employment into a contract to teach a trade or to show the employed person the way in which a trade is carried on. In my opinion there is no obligation on the master to teach a trade, and no obligation to provide the plaintiff with work. Neither can I see what the plaintiff's damages are. The plaintiff was bound by his contract to give his whole time to the service of the defendant. The defendant now says that he does not require the plaintiff's time. It is clear that the plaintiff has lost nothing, for he is offered his full wages and he has the whole of his time too. It is argued that he has lost the opportunity of learning his trade. But, as I have already said, I cannot find that that was part of the contract. In my opinion it would not be right to stretch the meaning of the word "employ" as contended for by the plaintiff. In my opinion the true meaning of the agreement is that it was a retainer, and it was not a bargain to employ the plaintiff continuously de die in diem during the term. I therefore think that the judgment of the learned judge was wrong. The case certainly ought not to have been left to the jury, and the verdict must be set aside. I think that the proper order for the court now to make is that judgment should be entered for the defendants.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I entirely agree. Taking the case as it was put forward by the plaintiff, I think there was nothing to leave to the jury at all. The action was brought for breach of a contract of employment. At the trial the plaintiff treated the case as one of repudiation of the contract by the master, and it was dealt with as a case of wrongful dismissal. The plaintiff claimed to be entitled to damages based on the loss which he had sustained through being deprived of the advantages of his situation, and that not the less because his master was prepared to pay him his full wages. Assuming that to have been the state of the case, I think there ought to have been a nonsuit. Let us look at the contract. In my opinion the first clause is a retainer. It is argued that the words "engage and employ" ought of necessity to be construed as imposing on the master a wider obligation than would usually arise out of the relation of master and servant. But the case of Emmens v. Elderton is conclusive authority against that proposition. And in my opinion there is nothing in this particular contract which ought to lead the court to construe the words in question as importing any obligation other than that ordinarily incurred by a master towards a servant. The second clause of the contract fixes the plaintiff's remuneration. The third clause fixes the duties to be performed by the plaintiff in return for his remuneration. I cannot find in the contract any obligation on the defendants to provide work for the plaintiff, or even to give him a reasonable share of such work as the defendants may have to give. The case of Turner v. Goldsmith is distinguishable from this case, inasmuch as there the remuneration of the employed person was to be by way of commission. The case of Bunning v. Lyric Theatre also seems to me to be distinguishable; for there was much in that case to show that the opportunity of appearing before the public as the defendants' musical director was part of the consideration which was bargained for by the plaintiff. On the question of the construction of the contract I think that the plaintiff has no cause of action.

STIRLING, L.J.—I feel more doubt as to the meaning of this agreement than my learned brothers. It is an agreement of a simple character, but it seems to me to give rise to a question of some difficulty. The defendants agree to continue to engage and employ the plaintiff as their representative salesman for four years, and to remunerate him by a salary of £250 a year, and the plaintiff agrees to devote his time to the defendants' service. There is therefore an express agreement to engage and employ as a representative salesman. What is the meaning of the word "employ" in this agreement? It is perfectly clear, and, if authority is needed, the case of Emmens v. Elderton is sufficient authority for the proposition, that the word "employ" is capable of one or other of two meanings. It may mean to retain in service, or it may mean to give actual work to the person employed. In some cases it is quite clear which of the two meanings must be intended. If a medical man was employed to attend a family for a fixed yearly payment, it is obvious that the head of the family would not be under any obligation to find him actual employment. On the other hand, there is the case of the employment of an actor by the manager of a theatre, as in Fechter v. Montgomery, 33 Beav. 22, where the actor's object is to obtain opportunities of displaying his ability and talents. In such a case the obligation to employ amounts to an obligation to give such opportunities. Again, the employment of a person who is to be remunerated by payment of a commission, as in Turner v. Goldsmith, imports an obligation on the master to give actual work to the person so employed. The question, what is the proper meaning of the word "employment," really depends on the nature of the contract in each particular case. I feel the force of the argument which has been put forward by the plaintiff's counsel. It is said that it is essential to the plaintiff as a representative salesman that he should be in contact with buyers and sellers on the market and that he should be allowed opportunities of being on the market continually. That is an element which seems to show some approximation to the case of the actor rather than to that of the medical man. But there are other elements in the case which seem to my learned brethren to preponderate, and I do not differ from them in my judgment, and I am the more ready to agree because I do not see anything which entitles the plaintiff to the damages which have been awarded him. I have expressed my doubts, but I agree in the judgment of the court.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Wynne-Baxter & Keeble, for Beldon & Ackroyd, Bradford.

Solicitors for the defendants, Wrensted & Hind, for G. H. Blackburn, Bradford.

From K. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, M.R., and Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ.) June 24.

HIRST v. WEST RIDING UNION BANKING CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Frauds, Statutes of—False representation—Representation as to credit of another person—Company—Signature by agent—Statute of Frauds Amendment Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 14), s. 6.

A limited company incorporated under the Companies Acts comes within section 6 of 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, and is therefore not liable for a false representation signed by an agent of the company as to the credit of another person.

Application for judgment or a new trial in an action tried before Grantham, J., and a jury.

The action was brought to recover damages for an alleged misrepresentation as to the credit of certain customers of the defendants.

The representation was made by the manager of a branch of the defendants' bank in answer to an inquiry by the manager of the plaintiffs' bank as to the credit of the above-mentioned customers of the defendants. The representation was made within the scope of the manager's authority and in the interests of the defendants.

The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, and judgment was entered for him.

By 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 6, "No action shall be brought whereby to charge any person upon or by reason of any representation or assurance made or given concerning or relating to the character, conduct, credit, ability, trade, or dealing of any other person to the intent or purpose that such other person may obtain credit, money, or goods upon, unless such representation or assurance be made in writing signed by the party to be charged therewith."

Sir R. T. Reid, K.C. (Montague Lush and Compston with him), for the defendants.—A signature by an agent is not a sufficient compliance with 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 6: Swift v. Jewsbury, 22 W. R. 319, L. R. 9 Q. B. 301. The signature must be by the person sought to be charged for the representation. The signature of the manager was in no sense the signature of the bank.

He also referred to Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank, 15 W. R. 877, L. R. 2 Ex. 259; Clydesdale Bank v. Paton, [1896] A. C. 381, 44 W. R. Dig. 41.

Tindal Atkinson, K.C. (Longstaffe with him), for the plaintiff.—A limited company does not come within 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 6. Such a company cannot possible satisfy the requirements of that section. It cannot "sign" a document. Therefore the common law applies and the defendants are liable for the act of their agent: Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank. Section 19 of the Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), which provides that the word "person" in a statute includes a body corporate, is not retrospective.

Sir R. T. Reid, K.C., replied.

A. L. SMITH, M.R.—In my opinion the statute 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 6, applies to a limited company. The defendants therefore are not liable as they did not sign the representation.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I agree. In my opinion the defendants are protected by section 6 of 9 Geo. 4, c. 14.

STIRLING, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. In my judgment a limited company comes within the protection of section 6 of 9 Geo. 4, c. 14. The word "person" in that section seems to me to include a limited company. In Pharmaceutical Society v. London and Provincial Supply Association, 28 W. R. 957, 5 App. Cas. 857, at p. 868, Lord Blackburn, in discussing the meaning of the word "person" in an Act of Parliament, said: "I own I have no great doubt myself, for instance, that the word 'person' may very well include both a natural person, a human being, and an artificial person, a corporation. I think that in an Act of Parliament, unless there be something to the contrary, probably (but that I should not like to pledge myself to) it ought to be held to include both. . . . In which way it is used in any particular Act must depend upon the context and the subject-matter. . . . I am quite clear about this, that, whenever you see that the object of the Act requires that the word 'person' shall have the more extended or the less extended sense, then, whatever sense it requires, you should apply the word in that sense, and construe the Act accordingly." We must therefore look at the subject-matter and the context and see which sense is required. The meaning of section 6 is stated in short and clear terms by Lord Bramwell in Swift v. Jewsbury: "In my opinion the effect of the statute is this, that a man should not be liable for a fraudulent representation as to another person's means unless he puts it down in writing and acknowledges his responsibility for it by his own signature." The Legislature has thought that section 6 is a proper enactment for the protection of human beings. It is argued that the enactment is limited to persons who are capable of signing the document. In my opinion that is not so. It cannot be said that a person who is struck by disease and is rendered incapable of writing his signature is not within the protection of the section. He is, without doubt, a person requiring protection. Swift v. Jewsbury is an authority for the proposition that a partner in a firm may render himself liable by his signature, but cannot render his co-partners liable. I do not see why a corporation under the Companies Acts should not equally have the protection of the section. The action, therefore, cannot be maintained against the defendant bank.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co., for Ramsden, Sykes, & Ramsden, Huddersfield.

Solicitors for the defendants, A. M. Bradley, for Berry & Berry, Huddersfield.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.
Byrne, J. July 6.

LADY CARDIGAN v. CURZON-HOWE. (a.)

Settlement—Tenant for life—Equitable tenant in tail—Alternative gift in remainder—Contingent interest—Estates in defeasance of estate tail—Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), s. 15.

Testator by his will devised real estates to trustees on trust after providing for the management of the estates, &c., to pay surplus rents to testator's widow for her life. Testator directed that after the decease of his widow surplus rents should be accumulated for the purpose of paying off certain mortgages on the said estates, and further directed the trustees, after the determination of the period of accumulation and subject to his widow's life estate, to convey and assure the said real estates so that the same should stand limited to use of G. in tail male, but if G. should be dead to the use of the person who should be the first heir male of the body of G. in tail male, with remainder to the person who should be entitled to the title of Earl of C. in tail male, with remainder to testator's right heirs. By a codicil to his will testator, after reciting the devise to the said G., thereby revoked the said devise and gave and devised the said estates after the death of testator's widow to R. in tail male, with all the limitations as testator's will mentioned. The trusts for accumulations being treated by the court for the purpose of the application as at an end, and R., with the consent of testator's widow, having barred the estate tail in a fund in court representing the proceeds of the sale of part of the said estates, and assigned the same to trustees subject to widow's life interest,

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that R. took a vested estate tail in remainder expectant on the death of testator's widow, that subsequent estates had been barred by the disentailing assurance, and that the fund in court might be paid out to the assignees of testator's widow and R.

Petition.

This was a petition by Adeline Louisa Maria, Dowager Countess of Cardigan, and the Earl of Stradbroke, and Gerard B. Lawrence, trustees of an indenture of settlement dated the 19th of April, 1901, the Norwich Union Life Insurance Society, and E. C. Griffith, incumbrancers of the life interests of the said Lady Cardigan in the estates the subject-matter of the petition, for payment out of court to the said Lord Stradbroke and G. B. Lawrence of a sum of £100 000 New Consols, proceeds of the sale of certain settled estates.

The petition raised a point of construction on the will and second codicil of James Thomas Brudenell, late Earl of Cardigan.

The facts of the case were as follows: By his will bearing date the 24th day of May, 1866, Lord Cardigan appointed Earl Howe (then Viscount Curzon) the Honourable J. C. W. Vivian, and B. G. Bennett executors of his will, and after giving divers pecuniary legacies and life annuities and charging the said annuities on real estate in the county of Leicester and bequeathing a leasehold house, testator devised all his real and personal estates other than estates situate in the counties of Northampton, Leicester and York, to his trustees, being the same persons as his (testator's) executors, upon trust for sale and conversion and out of the proceeds to pay debts (except mortgages on estates, above excepted) and funeral and testamentary expenses and legacies and duties (as therein mentioned), and to apply the surplus, if any, towards paying the sums charged on testator's estates in the counties aforesaid as his trustees should think fit; and testator devised his freehold hereditaments and real estate in the said three counties unto and to the use of his said trustees upon trust to permit Lady Cardigan to inhabit and occupy rent free testator's mansion-house at Deene, with the gardens, deer park and appurtenances, and such of the adjoining farms and lands which she should think fit to occupy therewith, and during her life to manage and let all other the said hereditaments and premises, and to receive the rents and profits. And after the death of the said Lady Cardigan to manage and let the whole of the said premises and receive the rents thereof. And upon further trust by mortgaging, as therein mentioned, all or any part of the testator's said estates in the said three counties, except the mansion-house and such farms and lands as aforesaid, to raise such sums as, together with so much of the testator's personal estate and the produce of so much of the sale of testator's real estate as were theretofore made applicable for such purpose, should in the opinion of the trustees be sufficient to pay his debts (other than sums charged by way of mortgage on any of the testator's estates in the said three counties) and funeral and testamentary expenses debts and legacies and duties and annuities, and the costs of raising such sums by mortgage. And testator directed that his trustees do stand possessed of the said rents and profits in the first place to pay thereout all expenses of the management and outgoings of his said estates, and to pay thereout the interest of any mortgage charged thereon. And to pay the surplus of the said rents and profits to Lady Cardigan for her own use during her life. And after her death testator directed that his trustees should, during the lives of B. G. W. Bennett and W. J. G. Bennett and the survivor them, and during twenty years after the death of such survivor invest and accumulate the surplus of the rents and profits which should remain after paying thereout such expenses and interest as aforesaid, and apply such accumulations in or towards the payment of mortgage debts and charges charged or to be charged on testator's estates in the said three counties, and testator directed that upon the expiration or other determination of such period of accumulation (subject to Lady Cardigan's life interest) his trustees should convey and assure all his said estates in the said three counties, so that the same might stand limited, settled, and assured to the use of George William Thomas Bruce (in the said will described as George Thomas Bruce, Esq., the eldest son of George Bruce, Esq., and grandson of Lord Ernest Bruce) in tail male, and if the said George Thomas Bruce should be then dead, to the use of the person who should then be the first heir male of the body of the said George Thomas Bruce in tail, with remainder to the use of the person who for the time being should be entitled to the dignity and title of Earl of Cardigan in tail male, with remainder to the use of testator's right heirs for ever. And the said will contained divers powers of leasing, &c., exercisable with regard to the said estates by the trustees with the consent of Lady Cardigan and a power for the trustees while the estates should remain vested in them or on trust as aforesaid, but during Lady Cardigan's lifetime not without her consent by deed, to sell or exchange the said estates. And testator devised his copyhold estates to his trustees on trusts similar to those of his freehold estates.

The testator on the 21st of January, 1867, made a codicil to his will not materially affecting the point at issue in this case. The testator made a second codicil to his will bearing date to the 17th of October, 1867, in the following words: "This is a codicil to be added to and taken as part of the last will and testament of me, James Thomas Brudenell, Earl of Cardigan. Whereas I have in and by my last will and testament given and devised all my estates in the counties of Northampton, Leicester and York (after the death of Lady Cardigan) to George William Thomas, the eldest son of Lord Ernest Bruce in tail. Now I do hereby revoke and make void the said devise by me made to the said George William Thomas Bruce, and I do hereby give and devise my said estates in the counties of Northampton, Leicester and York, after the death of Lady Cardigan, to my godson Robert Thomas Bruce, fourth son of Lord Ernest Bruce in tail male, with all the limitations as in my said will mentioned. And in all other respects I ratify and confirm my said will, except as revoked by this codicil dated the 17th day of October, 1867."

The testator died on the 27th of March, 1868, and his will was proved on the 23rd of June, 1868.

On the 27th of January, 1869, the Countess of Cardigan filed a bill of complaint against the trustees for administration of testator's estate, and the usual accounts and inquiries were directed, and it was certified that the estates were subject to certain mortgages.

By an order made in 1869 the trustees were permitted to raise the sum of £6,300 on mortgage of testator's estate in the said three counties. Divers portions of the real estate were sold from time to time by the trustees or by Lady Cardigan as tenant for life under the Settled Land Acts, and the proceeds of the sales were paid to the credit of the action and invested in the purchase of £3 per cent. Consolidated Annuities or £2 15s. per cent. Consolidated Stock or otherwise. And out of the funds so paid into court the incumbrances upon such parts of the said estates as remained unsold had been discharged.

Lady Cardigan had created several mortgages on her life interest under the said will. R. T. Bruce in the codicil mentioned had also charged his interest therein by his marriage settlement and otherwise.

At the time of the death of testator his cousin and heir-at-law, George William Frederick, Marquis of Ailesbury, succeeded him in the title Earl of Cardigan. The said Lord Ailesbury died on the 6th of January, 1878, whereupon Lord Ernest Bruce succeeded as Marquis of Ailesbury and Earl of Cardigan, and the said Robert Thomas Brudenell Bruce in the said will called Robert Thomas Bruce acquired the courtesy title of Lord R. T. B. Bruce. The last-named Lord Ailesbury died on the 18th of October, 1886, and the said George William T. Bruce succeeded to the Ailesbury and Cardigan titles. He died without having had issue on the 10th of April, 1894. Lord H. A. B. Bruce then succeeded to the said titles.

By an indenture bearing date the 10th of February, 1901, and made between the said Lady Cardigan and the said Lord R. T. B. Bruce, and duly enrolled as a disentailing assurance, the said Lady Cardigan and the said Lord R. T. B. Bruce with the consent of the said Lady Cardigan as protector of the settlement, purported to bar the estate in all that sum of £100,000 £2 15s. per cent. Consolidated Stock then standing in court to the credit of the cause of Lady Cardigan v. Curzon-Howe, being part of the sum of £111,340 13s., or any other sum of like stock standing in court and representing capital moneys arising under the Settled Land Acts from the sale of the said estates.

By an indenture bearing date the 19th of April, 1901, the said Lady Cardigan and Lord R. T. B. Bruce appointed the fund to the said Lord Stradbroke and G. B. Lawrence, subject to Lady Cardigan's life interest on the trusts therein mentioned but not here material.

The petitioners claimed that the disentailing assurance was valid, and that the trustees of the said indenture were entitled to have the fund paid out to them. Lady Robert Bruce, the wife of Lord R. T. B. Bruce, the mortgagees of her interest under the will, and the mortgagees of Lady Cardigan's life interest consented to the application.

Rowden, K.C., and Cyprian Williams, for Lady Cardigan and the trustees of the indenture.—The joint effect of the will and codicil is to give Lord Robert Bruce an equitable estate tail vested in remainder expectant on the death of Lady Cardigan, and not subject to any contingency. The effect of the codicil is to substitute Robert for George and to put Robert in the place of George: Milbank v. Vane, [1893] 3 Ch. 79, 41 W. R. Dig. 249. There is nothing in the direction to convey; but if the direction means anything, it means that effect shall be given to the estate tail given by the will and codicil to Lord Robert.

Levett, K.C., and Dighton Pollock, for Lord Robert Bruce, in support of the application.—The gift to Lord Robert Bruce is an equitable estate subject to the life estate to Lady Cardigan and the trust for accumulation. It is not affected by the inaccurate reference in the codicil to the limitations contained in the will. There is nothing in the codicil to show that the gift to Lord Robert is in any way contingent.

Frobisher Mills, for Lady Robert Bruce.

A. Adams, for the mortgagees of Lady Cardigan.

Fellows, for the mortgagees of Lord R. Bruce.

Norton, K.C., and Hornell, for the Marquis of Ailesbury.—The estate limited to Lord Robert Bruce is not a vested estate tail. It is an estate tail contingent on his surviving Lady Cardigan. The aim of the testator was to create alternative estate tails one of which must take effect on the happening of the particular event—viz., the death of the Countess of Cardigan. The estate limited to the present Earl of Cardigan (Lord Ailesbury) is not an estate in defeasance of the prior estate of Lord Robert Bruce. It is, therefore, not an estate tail which can be barred under section 15 of the Fines and Recoveries Act. Accordingly the disentailing assurance established by Lady Cardigan and Lord R. Bruce is inoperative, and the trustees of the indenture are not entitled to receive the fund in court.

T. Carson, K.C., and Stallard, for the trustees of the will of Lord Cardigan.—The question is not one for the trustees of the will to argue, if the court is satisfied that the time has arrived to decide the point and that all necessary parties were before it.

[BYRNE, J., before giving judgment, stated that, in his opinion, the point was ripe for decision, as Lady Cardigan and Lord R. Bruce claimed that they had made a title to the fund in court. His lordship considered that all interests were sufficiently represented by the trustees of the will, but gave directions for the protection of any interest not sufficiently represented, and for payment of the duties.]

BYRNE, J.—The case falls to be argued upon the footing that the trust for accumulation can never arise, there being ample funds to discharge and satisfy the only remaining charge or charges, which funds are immediately available for the purpose. It appears to me that Robert Thomas Bruce is now entitled to a vested equitable estate tail in remainder expectant upon the decease of Lady Cardigan. I think that this estate is vested, because there is a present capacity in Robert to take, although it is uncertain whether it can ever take effect in possession. It is therefore not contingent. The next remainder, whether it be to the first heir male of the body of Robert in tail male (George Thomas having died without issue) or to the Earl of Cardigan, is contingent, being dependent upon the death of Robert in the lifetime of Lady Cardigan, and there being no present capacity in any person to take, Robert being alive. Robert having duly disentailed claims that the assignees of himself and Lady Cardigan are now absolutely entitled in fee simple subject only to Lady Cardigan's life interest. He claims first as having taken under a direct legal devise to him in the codicil, which, as I understood, he says supersedes the equitable estates given by the will to George and to the first heir male of George or Robert in a certain event. In my opinion, however, upon the true construction of the will and codicil the legal estate remains vested in the trustees and but for the disentailing assurance by Robert the equitable interests would now stand limited in trust for Lady Cardigan for life with vested remainder to Robert for an estate in tail male with contingent remainder in the event of Robert dying in the lifetime of Lady Cardigan in favour of the heir male of the body either of George or of Robert (which of them it is not now necessary to decide) with contingent remainder in favour of the Earl of Cardigan for the time being.

The next question is, What effect, if any, has the disentailing assurance had upon the contingent estates in remainder? This depends upon the true construction to be placed upon the 15th section of the Fines and Recoveries Act, which runs as follows: "After the 31st of December, 1833, every actual tenant in tail whether in possession, remainder, contingency, or otherwise shall have full power to dispose of, for an estate in fee simple absolute or for any less estate, the lands entailed as against all persons claiming the lands entailed by force of any estate tail which shall be vested in or might be claimed by, or which but for some previous act would have been vested in or might have been claimed by the person making the disposition at the time of his making the same, and also as against all persons including the King's Most Excellent Majesty, his heirs and successors, whose estates are to take effect after the determination or in defeasance of any such estate tail, saving always the rights of all persons in respect of estates prior to the estate tail in respect of which such disposition shall be made, and the rights of all other persons except those against such disposition is by this Act authorized to be made."

It appears to me that an actual tenant in tail in remainder has disentailed, and has thereby barred his own issue male claiming under the estate in tail male limited to him and his heirs male; he has also barred the contingent estates limited in remainder, if they are to be deemed estates to take effect after the determination or in defeasance of Lord Robert's estate in tail male, but not otherwise. It is argued that the limitation in favour of the heir male of George or Robert as the case may be is not one to take effect after the determination or in defeasance of Robert's estate tail, but is a limitation to take effect alternatively with the limitation in favour of Robert according to the event, and that consequently it is not barred. The point is new, so far as I know, but I think that the reasoning in support of the contention fails, because the Act does not say after the determination or in defeasance of any estate tail which shall fall into possession, but of any "such" estate tail, i.e., any estate tail in possession or remainder. I think that the estates in question are barred as being estates to take effect in a certain event after, if not in defeasance of the vested estate in tail male in remainder of Robert. Under these circumstances the money in court may be paid out subject to the directions I have already given as to any other interests not sufficiently represented and subject to providing for the duties.

Solicitors, G. B. Lawrence & Co.; A. R. & H. Steele; Merriman, Pike, & Merriman; Warren, Murton, & Miller; Hunter & Haynes; Burch, Whitehead, & Davidson; Rooper & Whateley.

K. B. Div.
(Kennedy and Phillimore, JJ.) May 8.

MARQUIS OF BRISTOL v. THE COMMISSIONERS OF INLAND REVENUE. (a.)

Inland revenue—Stamp duty—Family arrangement—Conveyance on sale—Consideration—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), ss. 54, 57.

By two deeds made between B. and H. (who was the heir to B.'s unsettled estates), after reciting that H. had undertaken the payment of a mortgage on the estates and that B. was indebted to H. in certain sums, it was witnessed that in pursuance of a family arrangement B. conveyed his unsettled estates to H. subject to the mortgages, and also certain specified chattels; but power was reserved to B. and H. to cancel, alter, or make void the family arrangement at any time.

Held, that the deeds were liable to ad valorem duty as being conveyances on sale.

Case stated by Commissioners of Inland Revenue under the Stamp Act, 1891, raising the question whether certain deeds executed by the Marquis of Bristol and embodying a family arrangement constituted a sale for the purposes of stamp duty.

On the 8th of December, 1899, three deeds were presented on behalf of the Marquis of Bristol, the appellant, to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, the respondents, under the provisions of section 12 of the Stamp Act, 1891, for their opinion as to the stamp duty with which the same were chargeable.

The three deeds constituted one transaction only, and two of them alone were the subject of this case.

On the 6th of December, 1899, the date when the transaction affected by the deeds was entered into, the appellant was entitled absolutely to certain freeholds and copyholds and to valuable personal chattels. The freeholds and copyholds were subject to certain mortgages, which had, by virtue of an instrument dated the 31st of December, 1898, been consolidated into one charge of £62,000.

The appellant was also tenant for life of certain other freeholds and copyholds, with remainder (in default of male issue born to him) to Captain Frederick Hervey, as to the freeholds in tail male, and, as to the copyholds, to uses corresponding thereto.

On the 6th of December, 1899, the appellant was indebted to Captain Hervey in the sum of £123,800 for moneys expended at the appellant's request.

The first deed, dated the 6th of December, 1899, was a deed of arrangement to which the mortgagees were parties, and it exonerated the appellant from payment of the mortgage debt of £62,000, and contained a covenant by Captain Hervey with the mortgagees for payment of the same. The second deed, also dated the 6th of December, 1899, was a conveyance or assurance by the appellant to Captain Hervey of the unsettled freeholds and copyholds subject to the mortgage of £62,000. By a third deed, dated the 7th of December, 1899, made between the appellant and Captain Hervey, after setting forth a certain family arrangement made between them, power being reserved to them by any deed or deeds executed by both of them to alter, cancel, or make void the arrangement in such manner and to such extent as they should think fit, in pursuance of such family arrangement, and, in consideration of the agreements by the appellant therein contained and the assignment after made, Captain Hervey released the appellant from the debt of £123,800. Further, the appellant assigned and conveyed to Captain Hervey certain valuable personal chattels absolutely.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The commissioners were of opinion that the second and third deeds—no question as to the assessment of duty upon the first deed arising—were conveyances on sale within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891, and that the sums of £62,000 and £123,800 were consideration for the sale, and were assessable to ad valorem duty. They also assessed the third deed to 10s. further duty in respect of the family arrangement to which no objection was made.

The marquis appealed.

Danckwerts, K.C., and W. B. Coltman, for the appellant.—This transaction was never intended to be a sale, but a family arrangement, and on the following authorities the documents are not chargeable with ad valorem duty: Foster v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 42 W. R. 259, [1894] 1 Q. B. 516; Denn v. Diamond, 4 B. & C. 243; Massy v. Nanney, 3 Bing. N. C. 478; Waring v. Ward, 7 Ves. 332; Attorney-General v. Hawkins, ante, p. 320, [1901] 1 Q. B. 285.

Sir R. B. Finlay, A.G., and S. A. T. Rowlatt, for the respondents.—The power of cancellation does not apply to the release of the appellant from the covenants in reference to the mortgage, that release being absolute. Therefore, although a family arrangement, the transaction is a sale, and the price is the mortgage for £62,000 to Captain Hervey, to whom at that time the marquis was indebted to the extent of £123,800.

The COURT gave judgment for the Crown, dismissing the appeal with costs.

KENNEDY, J.—In this case I am of opinion that the decision of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue is right. The Crown claims to treat the deeds as conveyances on sale within the meaning of the Stamp Act, and therefore its contention that the stamp must be calculated as if the consideration was £62,000 and £123,800 is a good contention. It was said as to the second deed that there was really no sale at all, and that a covenant by the donee to indemnify the donor would be implied in law from the fact of what had been done by the first deed. For myself, I cannot agree with this contention, as the three deeds must be treated as one arrangement; and while Captain Hervey took over the equity of redemption, entering into covenants in place of the marquis, he did, in fact, get a conveyance of the unsettled estates, subject to a mortgage of £62,000, in consideration of entering into a covenant to pay the £62,000. In my view of that transaction, it would be impossible to treat it as a family arrangement so as to exclude a conveyance on sale. There may very well be transactions which, in a sense, were family arrangements, but which also involve a conveyance on sale. If the machinery is really a sale for money, it matters not that the purpose of the parties did not necessarily involve a money gain to the one side or the other. If money is given for the conveyance, it matters not that the transaction is entered into because it would facilitate the relations of the parties or help to preserve the estate intact. The cancellation clause does not mean that there is not to be a conveyance on sale, but that the family arrangement might at any time be varied, while there was an absolute sale of the interests under the deed.

For these reasons I think the contention on behalf of the Crown is right, and that the deeds constituted a conveyance sale, and the documents accordingly are chargeable with an ad valorem stamp.

PHILLIMORE, J., delivered judgment to the same effect.

Solicitors, Coe & Co.; The Solicitor to the Inland Revenue.

K. B. Div. (Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance, J.) — April 23.

SNEATH (Appellant) v. TAYLOR (Respondent). (a.)

Adulteration—Food and drugs—Certificate of public analyst—Sufficiency of—Omission to insert weight of sample—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 18.

In a prosecution under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, for selling adulterated butter to the prejudice of the purchaser, the certificate of the analyst which was given in evidence omitted to state the weight of the sample supplied for the purpose of analysis.

Held, that the certificate was valid. The insertion of the weight in the certificate is only obligatory where it is shown that the weight of the sample is material and the accuracy of the analysis depends in any way upon the weight of the sample.

This was a case stated by justices of the peace in and for the parts of Kesteven, in the county of Lincoln, and acting in and for the petty sessional division of Sleaford.

On the 14th of January, 1901, an information preferred by William Taylor, the respondent, against Alfred Petchel Sneath, the appellant, charging that the said appellant on the 13th of November, 1900, did unlawfully sell to the prejudice of the said respondent, the purchaser, certain butter which was adulterated with 15 per cent. of margarine and was not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded by the purchaser, contrary to section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, was heard and determined by the said justices, who duly convicted the appellant.

The appellant was an assistant in the employ of Edward Allen & Sons, grocers carrying on business at Sleaford, and the respondent was an inspector under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875.

On the 13th of November, 1900, the respondent purchased from the appellant one pound of butter for the purpose of analysis.

The butter was divided into three parts, and one part thereof was submitted to the public analyst to be analyzed in accordance with the provisions of the said statute.

At the hearing of the information the certificate of the public analyst was produced by the respondent and tendered in evidence in support of the prosecution, but was objected to by the appellant on the ground that the weight of the sample of the butter received to be analyzed was not stated in the certificate, and therefore the certificate was not in the form required by section 18 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875.

The following is a copy of the material parts of the said certificate: "I . . . do hereby testify that I received on the 15th day of November, 1900, from Mr. W. Taylor a sample of butter (No. 94 S. K.) for analysis, and have analyzed the same and declare the result of my analysis to be as follows: I am of opinion that the said sample contained the parts as under—15 per cent. of margarine, 85 per cent. of butter . . ."

No evidence of adulteration was given in support of the prosecution other than the said certificate. A copy of this certificate was served with the summons.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the sample of butter could have been conveniently weighed. That the weight of the sample not being stated the certificate was not in the form required by section 18 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, and that it was invalid and inadmissible in evidence. It was further contended that as the certificate was not in the form required by section 18 of the said Act, the respondent had not complied with section 19 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 51), which provides that a copy of the analyst's certificate must be served with the summons.

It was contended on behalf of the respondent that the omission in the certificate of the weight of the sample was immaterial. That the certificate was in the form required by section 18 of the said Act of 1875, and that it was valid and admissible in evidence. It was also contended that the service with the summons of a copy of the certificate was a compliance with section 19 of the said Act of 1899.

The contention on behalf of the appellant that the butter could have been conveniently weighed was not contested on behalf of the respondent. There was no expert evidence that it could have been conveniently weighed, but there was uncontested evidence that there was approximately about a third of a pound of butter sent for analysis.

The justices held that the omission in the certificate of the weight of the sample was immaterial; that the certificate was in the form required by section 18 of the said Act of 1875, and that it was valid and admissible in evidence. They also held that the service of a copy of this certificate with the summons was a compliance with section 19 of the said Act of 1899.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether upon the above facts the justices were right in law in holding that the said certificate was in the form required by section 18 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, and that it was valid and admissible in evidence, and whether, having regard to the form of the certificate, they were right in holding that section 19 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, had been complied with.

Bonsey, for the appellant.—The certificate omitted to state the weight of the sample, and therefore was not in accordance with the form provided in the schedule to the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, section 18 of which Act says that certificate is to be given in the form set out in such schedule, which form provides for the statement of the weight of the sample received for the purpose of analysis, the words being: "I, the undersigned public analyst for . . . , do hereby certify that I received on the . . . day of . . . from . . . a sample of . . . for analysis which then weighed . . ." The certificate was therefore invalid and ought not to have been received in evidence. There was no evidence that the sample of butter could not have been conveniently weighed. There had also, therefore, been a noncompliance with section 19 of the Act of 1899, which, being a penal Act, must be construed strictly: Fortune v. Hanson, 44 W. R. 431, [1896] 1 Q. B. 202; Bridge v. Howard, 45 W. R. 78, [1897] 1 Q. B. 80; Peart v. Barstow, 44 J. P. 699.

W. H. Leese, for the respondent.—The certificate was not rendered invalid by the mere omission to state the weight of the sample received for the purpose of analysis. The weighing of the sample is in the discretion of the analyst. If the defendant in the prosecution is not satisfied with the certificate he can under section 21 of the Act of 1875 require the analyst to be called as a witness. [The court here stopped the learned counsel.]

Bonsey replied.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—The question raised in this case is whether the words "which then weighed" in the form of the analyst's certificate given in the schedule to the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, are obligatory, so that the certificate is invalid if they are omitted, or whether they are merely directory. It is very plain that where the weight of the sample is material the words must not be omitted and the weight must be filled in, but it is impossible to decide as a matter of law that when it is not shown to the justices that the weight of the sample is in any way material it is necessary to fill in the words. A certain latitude is of necessity given to the analyst, for a note at the foot of the form says, "When the article cannot be conveniently weighed this passage may be erased or the blank may be left unfilled." On behalf of the appellant it was contended that the words must be filled in unless the sample cannot be conveniently weighed, and that as butter, the article in question, can be conveniently weighed the weight ought to have been filled in in the certificate. In my opinion, if the accuracy of the analysis of the butter depended in any way upon the weight of the sample, and if the certificate did not give the necessary information to enable the court to judge of the accuracy of the analysis, I should have come to a very different conclusion to that which in fact I have come to in this case. The direction as to the insertion of the weight is intended to apply to ordinary cases, but I cannot say that the mere omission of the weight of the sample in the present case, having regard to the discretion given to the analyst, necessarily renders the certificate invalid. The appeal must therefore be dismissed.

LAWRANCE, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Truss & Enever, for Godson, Sleaford.

Solicitors for the respondent, Peacock & Goddard, for Phillips, Lincoln.

[THE END.]

THE

WEEKLY REPORTER DIGEST

OF ALL THE

CASES DECIDED IN THE SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE;

WITH

APPEALS TO THE HOUSE OF LORDS AND PRIVY COUNCIL;

FROM THE 24TH OF OCTOBER, 1900, TO THE 12TH OF AUGUST, 1901.

VOL. XLIX.

LONDON: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

1901.

A DIGEST

OF ALL THE

CASES DECIDED IN ENGLAND,

FROM

THE 24TH OF OCTOBER, 1900, TO THE 12TH OF AUGUST, 1901,

AS REPORTED IN

VOL. XLIX. OF THE WEEKLY REPORTER, 1900-1901;

AND IN

CERTAIN OTHER LEGAL REPORTS DURING THE SAME PERIOD,

TOGETHER ALSO WITH CERTAIN OTHER CASES REPORTED THEREIN DURING THE SAME PERIOD, BUT DECIDED PREVIOUSLY THERETO.

 In the following Digest the letters H.L. after a case indicate the House of Lords; P.C., the Privy Council; C.A., the Court of Appeal; LUN., Lunacy; CH.D., the Chancery Division; K.B.D., the King's Bench Division; Q.B.D., the Queen's Bench Division; BKCY., the King's Bench Division sitting in Bankruptcy; P.D. & AD.D., the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division; C.C.R., the Court for Crown Cases Reserved.

 This Digest will contain at the end thereof a Tabular Index of the Names of all Cases Reported up to the end of August, 1901, as well in this Volume (49) of the WEEKLY REPORTER as in certain other Contemporaneous Reports. In this Digest, figures following the name of a case denote the page in the WEEKLY REPORTER at which it will be found. Where the name of a case has no figures attached, the case is not reported in this Volume of the WEEKLY REPORTER; but the references to the case in other Reports are given in this Digest.

ACCUMULATION.—See Infant, 1; Will, 1-4.

ADMINISTRATION:—

1. Creditor administrator—Right of retainer—Form of administration bond—"Not unduly prefer."—An administrator may retain his own debt as against debts of equal degree, notwithstanding that the administration bond provides for a due course of administration "rateably and proportionably and according to the priority required by law, and not unduly preferring his own debt."

Nunn v. Barlow, 1 Sim. & St. 588. and Davies v. Parry, 47 W. R. 429, [1899] 1 Ch. 602, considered and followed.—BELHAM, RE, RICHARDES v. YATES (No. 2), C.A., 498; [1901] 2 Ch. 52; 70 L. J. Ch. 474; 84 L. T. 440.

2. Executor—Right of retainer.—An executor's right of retainer extends only to funds actually or constructively in his possession.

The insolvent estate of a deceased person, the subject of an old administration suit, became entitled to a fund in court to the credit of another suit. The fund was transferred to the credit of the administration suit, and outstanding costs paid out of it.

Held, that the present administrator of the deceased, a creditor, had no right of retainer against the balance in court.—PULMAN v. MEADOWS, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 233; 70 L. J. Ch. 99; 84 L. T. 26.

3. Insolvent estate—Voluntary settlement—Postponement of voluntary debts—Judicature Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 77), s. 10.—By virtue of section 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875, whatever rules are for the time being in force in bankruptcy with regard to debts provable are to apply in the administration of insolvent estates in the Chancery Division.

Consequently, voluntary creditors of a deceased insolvent are entitled to rank pari passu with creditors for valuable consideration, the old rule in Chancery, whereby their claims were postponed, being now abrogated.

Decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (ante, p. 56, [1900] 2 Ch. 676), confirmed.

In re Maggi, Winehouse v. Winehouse, 30 W. R. 729, 20 Ch. D. 545, overruled.—WHITAKER, RE, WHITAKER v. PALMER, C.A., 106; [1901] 1 Ch. 9; 70 L. J. Ch. 6; 83 L. T. 449.

4. Intestacy—Domicil—Person authorized to take out administration—Distribution.—The widow (who lived abroad) of an intestate authorized W. to take out lettters of administration of the intestate's estate in this country. W. got in all the estate, and after paying debts had a sum in hand.

Held, that W. was the proper person to distribute the estate among the next-of-kin.—RENDALL, RE, WOOD v. RENDALL, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 131; [1901] 1 Ch. 230; 70 L. J. Ch. 265; 83 L. T. 625.

5. Separate account—Rights of parties—Fund in court—Claims against separate accounts—Lien.—Where, upon an administration order made in presence of all interested parties, and declaring their rights in a fund, money is paid to various separate accounts, then, although it is open to the parties to the suit to show that they have claims enforceable against a separate fund which were not known or not existent when the fund was separated, still, until such step is taken, the separation must be considered as showing that the separated funds are free from claims by the other sharers in the estate.

Bonâ fide assignees of distinct shares are not liable to claims by the other sharers arising out of matters subsequent to the separation or latent at the time.—EDGAR v. PLOMLEY, P.C., 142; [1900] A. C. 431.

See also Executor, 1, 2; Trustee, 7.

ADMIRALTY.—See County Court, 1, 4; Ship, 1, 6.

ADULTERATION:—

1. Food and drugs—Beer containing arsenic—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), ss. 3, 5, 6.—Beer, containing arsenic to such an extent as to render the same injurious to health, was sold to a purchaser. The arsenic had been unknowingly mixed with the beer by the brewer in the course of the manufacture. The vendor of the beer was summoned under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. The justices who heard the summons found that the beer was not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded by the purchaser.

Held, that there was evidence in support of the finding and that the vendor ought to be convicted.—GOULDER v. ROOK BENT v. ORMEROD, K.B.D., 701; [1901] 2 K. B. 290; 70 L. J. K. B. 747; 84 L T. 719.

2. Food and drugs—British Pharmacopœia—Standard strength of drugs—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 6—Pharmacy Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 121), s. 15.—A purchaser went into a chemist's shop and asked to be supplied with "mercury ointment." Mercury ointment is one of the medicines contained in the British Pharmacopœia. The chemist supplied him with an ointment containing a less proportion of mercury than that prescribed by the formulary of the Pharmacopœia.

Held, that, although the purchaser did not refer to the Pharmacopœia, he must be taken to have demanded that the ointment should be compounded of the proportions therein prescribed, and that upon a complaint under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, the vendor was rightly convicted of having sold a drug not being of the quality demanded by the purchaser.

White v. Bywater, 19 Q. B. D. 582, followed.

Held, also, that the fact of the ointment being a compounded drug did not make the sale of it as above-mentioned any the less an offence within section 6.—DICKINS v. RANDERSON, Q.B.D.; [1901] 1 Q. B. 437; 70 L. J. K. B. 344; 84 L. T. 204.

3. Food and drugs—Certificate of analysis, sufficiency of—Arsenic in beer—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 18.—In two prosecutions under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, for selling beer not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded, certificates of analysts were tendered as evidence which, in the one case, stated that the samples submitted to them contained "arsenic," and, in the other, "a serious quantity of arsenic."

Held, that neither of the certificates were sufficient.—LEE v. BENT, BARLOW v. NOBLETT, K.B.D., 684; [1901] 2 K. B. 290; 70 L. J. K. B. 747; 84 L. T. 719.

4. Food and drugs—Certificate of public analyst—Sufficiency of—Omission to insert weight of sample—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 18.—In a prosecution under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, for selling adulterated butter to the prejudice of the purchaser, the certificate of the analyst which was given in evidence omitted to state the weight of the sample supplied for the purpose of analysis.

Held, that the certificate was valid. The insertion of the weight in the certificate is only obligatory where it is shown that the weight of the sample is material and the accuracy of the analysis depends in any way upon the weight of the sample.—SNEATH v. TAYLOR, K.B.D., 719; [1901] 2 K. B. 376.

5. Food and drugs—Milk—Sale on highway from vehicle or can—Name and address of vendor on vehicle or can.—The respondent's servant, who was going from house to house in a village supplying milk, went into a shop carrying a three-gallon milk-can, from which he supplied the shopkeeper with a pint of milk, and on going out went to a cart standing about twenty yards off, in which the can and other similar cans were carried. The respondent's name and address were on the cart, but not on the can.

Held, that section 9 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, required the person selling the milk to have his name and address upon the cart where the milk was sold from the cart, or upon the can where the milk was sold from the can, and that there should be a finding of fact whether in the circumstances of the above case the milk was sold from the cart or from the can.—CRABTREE v. SKELTON, K.B.D.; 70 L. J. K. B. 560.

6. Food and drugs—Milk—Warranty in writing—Defence.—The Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, does not require a specific warranty with each consignment of milk delivered under a contract; and a general warranty in writing that future deliveries of milk shall be "new, unadulterated, and with all its cream on," affords the retailer the protection of section 25 as a defence.—ELLIOT v. PILCHER, K B.D.; 70 L. J. K. B. 795.

7. Food and drugs—Purchase of several bottles for analysis—Division of samples—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 14.—An inspector purchased at the same time and place, for analysis, six bottles of camphorated oil, and divided the bottles into three lots of two bottles each without opening any of them. One lot he handed back to the vendor, one lot to the analyst, and one lot he retained himself.

Held, that the inspector had not complied with section 14 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, as each bottle was a separate "article" within that section, and should itself be divided into three parts.—MASON v. COWDRAY, Q.B.D., 28; [1900] 2 Q. B. 419; 69 L. J. Q. B. 667; 82 L. T. 802.

AGENT.—See Banker, 3; Contract, 14, 15; Frauds, Statutes of, 2; Principal and Agent, 1, 2, 3, 5, 6; Stock Exchange, 2, 3; Vendor and Purchaser, 15

ANIMAL:—

1 Dog—Dangerous and not under proper control—Order for destruction—Form of order—Conviction for disobedience—Dogs Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 56), s. 2.—The appellants obtained rules nisi for certiorari to quash two orders that had been made by justices for the destruction of two valuable dogs, on the ground (1) that the justices could under section 2 of the Dogs Act, 1871, only make an alternative order either to destroy or to keep under proper control the dog in question; (2) that the first order was bad in form, since there was no adjudication that the dogs were not under proper control; (3) that the second order was bad, as it wrongly cited the first order.

Held, discharging both rules, that an order for the destruction of a dangerous dog need not contain an adjudication by the justices that the dog was not under proper control, nor by section 2 of the Dogs Act, 1871, need the justices give the owner of the dog the option of keeping the animal under proper control before ordering its destruction.

Pickering v. Marsh, 22 W. R. 798, 43 L. J. M. C. 143, followed.—REX v. DYMOCK; REX v. MOGER, K.B.D., 618.

2. Slaughter of—"Brought to or delivered at such place for the purpose of being slaughtered"—Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 92), s. 8.—The respondent, a licensed horse slaughterer, purchased a mare for 10s., for working which the seller had been fined, and sent it by his servant to his premises licensed for the slaughter of such animals. He entered it in his statutory register " . . . bought . . . brown mare to kill for 10s." The mare was kept on those premises for nine days, and after being cautioned, the respondent had cut the hair from its neck.

Held, that the mare had been brought to the premises for the purpose of being slaughtered within section 8 of the Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849.—EDGAR v. SPAIN, K.B.D.; 84 L. T. 631.

ANNUITY.—See Will.

APPOINTMENT.—See Power, 1-7.

ARBITRATION:—

1. Arbitrator—Counsel—Disqualification—Bias.—Counsel habitually employed by the solicitors of one of the parties to an arbitration is not disqualified from acting as arbitrator merely on that account.—BRIGHT v. RIVER PLATE CONSTRUCTION CO., Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 132; [1900] 2 Ch. 835; 70 L. J. Ch. 59.

2. Award—Umpire functus officio—Power to remit—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), s. 10, sub-section 1.—An umpire made an award in an arbitration which was taken up by one of the parties. The award did not deal with all the questions submitted by the agreement of reference. The umpire thereupon made a second award, which he substituted for the first award.

Held (following Mordue v. Palmer, 19 W. R. 86, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 22), that, after making the first award, the umpire was functus officio, and that the second award was therefore bad; but that the court had power, under section 10, sub-section 1, of the Arbitration Act, 1889, to remit the case to the umpire for reconsideration.—STRINGER AND RILEY'S ARBITRATION, RE, Q.B.D., 111; [1901] 1 Q. B. 105; 70 L. J. Q. B. 19.

3. Costs—Practice—Agreement for purchase of gas undertaking—Price to be fixed by arbitration—Agreement to pay costs, charges, and expenses "to be taxed"—Taxation by master—Jurisdiction to review.—By an agreement, confirmed by a private Act, a district council agreed to purchase the undertaking of a gas company at a price to be fixed by arbitration, and it was provided that the agreement should be "deemed a 'submission' within the meaning of the Arbitration Act, 1889."

The council also agreed to pay "all the costs, charges, and expenses of the company preliminary and incidental to the negotiation for the sale and the said arbitration, the same to be taxed in case the parties differ."

An award was made which did not deal with costs. The costs were taxed by a master, who allowed costs upon a scale lower than the scale as between solicitor and client. A judge at chambers ordered a review of taxation.

Held, that there was jurisdiction to review the taxation of the master; and that the company was entitled to costs as between solicitor and client.—MALVERN URBAN COUNCIL v. MALVERN LINK GAS CO., C.A.; 83 L. T. 326.

See also Contract, 3.

BANKER:

1. Account current—Mortgage—Power of sale—Closing of account.—A customer mortgaged to his bankers a policy of assurance on his life to secure the amount owing by him to the bank from time to time in account current. The mortgage provided that the statutory power of sale should be exercisable by the bank if (inter alia) the customer made default in payment of the balance due on the account current for the space of one month after the account current had been closed. The customer got into difficulties, and, after some correspondence with the bank, wrote to the manager on the 9th of November, 1899, informing him that there had been a meeting of his creditors and a trustee had been appointed. By a deed of the 17th of November he assured all his real and personal estate to the trustee for the benefit of his creditors. On the 28th of November notice of the deed was given to the bank, who, on the 18th of December, sold the policy under the power.

Held, that, though the bank had not itself closed the account, the debtor's letter of the 9th of November must be taken to have amounted to a closing of the account within the meaning of the clause in the mortgage deed; and, consequently, that the power of sale had been properly exercised by the bank.—BERRY v. HALIFAX COMMERCIAL BANKING CO., Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 164; [1901] 1 Ch. 188; 70 L. J. Ch. 85; 83 L. T. 665.

2. Cheque—Crossed cheque—Agents to collect—Holders for value—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61, ss. 60, 82—Revenue Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 55), s. 17.—J., a clerk of the plaintiff, stole certain cheques and forged the endorsement thereon. He paid them into his accounts at the defendants' banks, and his accounts were at once credited with them. The accounts were sometimes in credit and sometimes overdrawn.

The stolen cheques were paid in at various times over a period of some four years.

The cheques were, when paid in by J., (1) drawn in favour of G. or order on other banks and uncrossed; (2) drawn in favour of G. or bearer on other banks and uncrossed; (3) drawn on another branch of the defendants' bank, payable to order, and uncrossed; (4) drawn on another branch of the defendants' bank and crossed; (5) drawn on other banks, crossed, and marked "not negotiable"; (6) drawn to order on other banks and crossed; (7) drawn to bearer on other banks and crossed.

In collecting the cheques the defendants acted bonâ fide and without negligence.

Held, that the defendants received all the cheques as agents to collect for their customer; that as to (1) and (2) they are liable for the conversion of the proceeds, but that as to (3), (4), they were protected by section 60 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, and as to (5), (6), (7), they are also protected by section 82 of the same Act.

The defendants also received, crossed, a document addressed to a banker, stating: "Pay to —— the sum named below on presentation of the subjoined receipt duly signed and dated."

Held, that the defendants were entitled to the protection of section 82 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, by virtue of section 17 of the Revenue Act, 1883.

Bankers are not deprived of the protection of section 82 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, by reason of crossing, for the purpose of collection, crossed cheques received by them.—GORDON v. LONDON, CITY, AND MIDLAND BANK, Q.B.D.; 63 L. T. 762.

3. Principal and agent—Authority of agent—Consideration moving from the principal—Special damage—Appeal from New Zealand.—The plaintiff's agent obtained from the defendant bank a promise to pay certain cheques drawn by the plaintiff, in consideration of his depositing with it a store warrant in lieu of the cash which the plaintiff had instructed him to pay to the credit of the plaintiff's account. The store warrant belonged to the plaintiff, was under pledge to the agent, and was accepted by the bank with full knowledge of the circumstances.

Held, in an action for dishonouring the cheques, that the agent in substituting the deposit for cash did not exceed his authority, but that even if he had, the contract was complete, for there was consideration for the bank's promise. The deposit conferred on the bank some right, interest, profit, or benefit within the legal meaning of consideration; and in the circumstances it could not be heard to say that that consideration did not move from the plaintiff.

Held, further, that evidence of special damage—that is, of plaintiff's loss of custom and credit from particular individuals—was wrongly admitted; special damage not having been alleged.—FLEMING v BANK OF NEW ZEALAND, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 577; 69 L J. P. C. 120.

BANKRUPTCY:—

1. Act of bankruptcy—Assignment of property for the benefit of creditors generally—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (a)—Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 57), s. 19.—Where the act of bankruptcy alleged in a petition is a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors generally, a receiving order ought not to be made if the deed relied upon is for the benefit of trade creditors only. The expression "creditors generally" must be construed to mean "all creditors."—PHILLIPS, RE, BARTON, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 16; [1900] 2 Q. B. 329; 69 L. J. Q. B. 604; 82 L. T. 691.

2. Act of bankruptcy—Transfer of whole of assets—Arrangement for payment of creditors—Relation back of trustee's title—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 4 (1) (a) (c) 49.—In December, 1899, S., a publican, owed about £3,000 to trade creditors; his trade premises were mortgaged to W. & Co. his lessors, and he was insolvent. It was agreed that S. should surrender his lease, that W. & Co. should release the mortgage and should take over the stock-in-trade, being the whole of S.'s assets, for £2,800; this sum was the total amount of a list of his debts furnished by S. and stated to be a complete list; a cheque for £2,800 was handed by W. & Co. to S., who, according to the arrangement, immediately indorsed and delivered it to the respondents, who proceeded to pay all the debts set out in the said list furnished by S. This list did not in fact contain all the creditors. The arrangement was entered into honestly and without any fraudulent motive.

A receiving order having been made against S. within three months of this transaction, the trustee sought to recover the sum of £2,800 from the respondents.

Held, that the transfer by S. was an act of bankruptcy as necessarily tending to defeat the creditors omitted from the list, and as substituting for the administration of the estate in bankruptcy a different mode of administration.

Also, that section 49 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, does not protect payments made, not in the ordinary course of business, but for the purpose of doing that which in law constitutes an act of bankruptcy, and that the present transaction was therefore not protected by that section.—SHARP, RE, GUNDRY, EX PARTE, Bkcy.; 83 L. T. 416.

3. After-acquired property—Personal earnings—Interpleader—Wagering contract—Money deposited as stakes—Stakes claimed by trustee in bankruptcy—Gaming Acts, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 109), s. 18; 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 9), s. 1—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c 52), ss. 44, 53.—The defendant, a professional billiard player, who was then an undischarged bankrupt, agreed to play a match at billiards with another billiard player for £100 a side, and each party deposited that amount with stakeholders. The defendant won the match, and thereupon both the defendant and the plaintiff, his trustee in bankruptcy, claimed the stakes. The stakeholders interpleaded; and, the money having been paid into court, an issue was directed to try whether the plaintiff or the defendant was entitled to the money.

Held (varying the order of Phillimore, J., [1899] 2 Q. B. 560), that the plaintiff was entitled to the whole of the money.—SHOOLBRED v. ROBERTS, C.A.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 497; 69 L. J. Q. B. 800; 83 L. T. 37.

4. Agreement to assign bills when completed—Assignment of debt by bankrupt—Notice of the assignment—Order and disposition—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 43, 44, 49.—D. carried on business as a coal exporter. In January, 1900, he sold a cargo of coal to a company carrying on business at Athens. D. shipped the coal to the purchasers and forwarded them bills of exchange for the price, to be accepted by them and returned. D. being in want of funds to meet cheques falling due, on the 3rd of February arranged with the N.E. Bank they should pay these cheques on their being presented, and he agreed in writing that these payments should be against the bills to be accepted, and he thereby "undertook to hand to the N.E. Bank the above-mentioned bills immediately on receipt." On the 3rd of March, the bills not having arrived, D. gave to the N.E. Bank a letter addressed by him to the company in Athens requesting them to "hand the bills on demand to the N.E. Bank." This letter the bank on the 3rd of March forwarded to the company, inclosed in one from themselves, to the following effect: "We shall be glad if you will post direct to us the four bills in accordance with the inclosed instructions." D. committed an act of bankruptcy on the 3rd of March, before giving the letter to the bank, but the bank had no notice of an act of bankruptcy till the 6th of March.

A receiving order was subsequently made against D., and his trustee in bankruptcy moved for a declaration that he was entitled to the proceeds of the bills as being property in the order and disposition of the bankrupt within section 44 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

Held, that, even if the document of the 3rd of February only amounted to an assignment of the debt and not of the bills, yet the letters of the 3rd of March constituted a sufficient notice of the assignment to prevent the operation of section 44. —DIXON, RE, Bkcy.; 83 L. T. 433.

5. Annulment—Payment of debts in full—Discretion to refuse annulment—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 35.—Where a bankrupt has been guilty of serious misconduct in the course of the bankruptcy, the court will refuse to annul the adjudication, even though the bankrupt has paid his debts and the costs of the bankruptcy in full.—TAYLOR, RE, TAYLOR. EX PARTE, Bkcy., 510; [1901] 1 Q. B. 744; 70 L. J. K. B. 531; 84 L T. 426.

6. Bankruptcy notice—Final judgment—Order for revocation of patent—Bankruptcy Act 1883, (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (g)—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 26.—An order of the Chancery Division revoking a patent, with costs, under section 26 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, is not a final judgment within the meaning of section 4, sub-section 1 (g), of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and a bankruptcy notice cannot be founded thereon.—OWEN, RE, Bkcy., 379; 70 L. J. Q. B. 92; 86 L. T. 572.

7. Bankruptcy notice—Notice of suspension of payment under section 4 (1) (h) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52)—Existence of debt due to petitioning creditor at time of notice—Petition.—V. T. paid £2,000 into a bank to the use of S. M., with the view of his subsequently becoming a partner of S. M. on the Stock Exchange. It was agreed, however, that, if S. M. should use the said sum for any other than certain specified purposes, or if V. T. should not by a certain specified day become a member of the Stock Exchange and enter thereupon into partnership with S. M., then the said sum of £2,000 should be repayable by S. M. to V. T., and the agreement should be at an end. Prior to the fulfilment of either of these two conditions, S. M. was "hammered" on the Stock Exchange, and informed V. T. that he was utterly penniless and unable to pay his debts.

Held, that, inasmuch as, at the date of the information in question, the sum of £2,000 was not then due from S. M. to V. T. under the terms of the contract, and inasmuch as V. T. was not at that date in a position to sue S. M. for the said sum as money had and received, there was no debt due at that date from S. M. to V. T., and V. T. was not then accordingly a creditor of S. M. within the meaning of section 4 (1) (h) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.—MILLER, RE, TALBOT, EX PARTE, C.A., 65; [1901] 1 Q. B. 51; 70 L. J. Q. B. 1; 83 L. T. 545.

8. Bankruptcy notice issued by trustee in bankruptcy of judgment creditor—"Person entitled to enforce a final judgment"—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (g)—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 1—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 17, r. 4; ord. 42, r. 23.—A trustee in the bankruptcy of a creditor who has obtained a final judgment may not issue a bankruptcy notice against the judgment debtor until he has obtained an order under ord. 42, r. 23, declaring that he is entitled to issue execution. — CLEMENTS, RE, CLEMENTS, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 176; [1901] 1 Q. B. 260; 70 L. J. Q. B. 58; 83 L. T. 464.

9. Bill of sale—Bankruptcy of grantor—Costs of preparation and redemption—Taxation—Jurisdiction —Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 38—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 102.—The grantor of a bill of sale became bankrupt and the grantee having sold the chattels therein comprised, realized a sum more than sufficient to discharge the amount secured by the bill of sale. By an antecedent agreement the grantor was liable to pay all the expenses of the bill of sale, and the grantee now claimed to deduct out of the fund in his hands his solicitor's costs in connection with the preparation and redemption of the bill. The official receiver, as trustee, having paid the costs under protest, moved in the bankruptcy for a declaration that certain heads of these costs could not be charged. The county court judge held that he had no jurisdiction.

Held, on appeal, that the court having jurisdiction in the bankruptcy had a discretionary power under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 102, to tax the costs of the grantee's solicitor, and that the third party taxation provided by the Solicitors Act, 1843, s. 38, did not exclude this discretionary jurisdiction.—FORD, RE. OFFICIAL RECEIVER, EX PARTE, Bkcy.; 84 L. T. 329.

10. Company—Fraudulent preference—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 164—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 28 (repealed), 48. —Section 164 of the Companies Act, 1862, although it uses the words "undue or fraudulent preference," does not extend the operation of the fraudulent preference clause (section 48) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, which is thereby applied to companies being wound up under the Companies Acts.

Within three months before the commencement of its winding up a company was indebted to H., and was to the knowledge of its directors unable to pay its debts as they became due from its own moneys. The chairman of its directors was personally liable on an acceptance of the company for part of the debt due to H. In pursuance of a scheme resolved upon by the directors with the very object of relieving the chairman from his liability, debentures of the company were allotted to H. as a collateral security for his debt.

Held, that the transaction was not a fraudulent preference, and that the debentures were valid.—THE STENOTYPER (LIMITED), RE, HASTINGS BROTHERS v. THE STENOTYPER (LIMITED). Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 250; 70 L. J. Ch. 94; 84 L. T. 149.

11. Deed of arrangement—Registration—Foreign debtor—Mobilia sequuntur personam—Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 57), s. 5.—The provision of the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887, requiring that a deed of arrangement shall be void unless registered in accordance with the Act does not apply to a deed executed abroad by a foreign debtor.

Two foreigners trading as V. & Co., having personal property situated in England, executed in their own country a deed assigning all their property, wherever situated, to a trustee for the benefit of their creditors. The deed was not registered under the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887. It was good and unimpeachable in the country in which it was made, and would have been sufficient to pass property according to English law had it been duly registered. A creditor of V. & Co., having obtained judgment against them, issued execution against their goods in England. The trustee claimed the goods.

Held, in an interpleader issue, that the trustee was entitled to the goods as against the execution creditor.—DULANEY v. MERRY, K.B D., 331; [1901] 1 Q. B. 536; 70 L. J. K. B. 377; 84 L. T. 156.

12. Deposit of securities to make good a breach of trust—Fraudulent preference—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 48.—A payment by a bankrupt trustee to his cestui que trust, made with a view to make good his breach of trust, is not a fraudulent preference within section 48 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

Decision of Wright, J. (ante, p. 280), reversed.—LAKE, RE, DYER, EX PARTE, C.A., 291; [1901] 1 Q. B. 710; 70 L. J. K. B. 390; 84 L. T. 430.

13. Interpleader—Property of the bankrupt divisible among his creditors—Property held on trust—Assignment for the benefit of creditors—Right of an assignee to an indemity over the assets—Lien passing to trustee in bankruptcy—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 44.—The assignee of a business under a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors who incurs debts in carrying on the business has a right of indemnity or lien over the assets of the business which on his bankruptcy would pass to his trustee.

The assignee of such a business, having incurred debts in carrying it on, became bankrupt.

Held, that, although the assets of the business were property held on trust, and so, by virtue of section 44 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, were not divisible among his creditors, yet the trustee of the bankrupt had such an interest in them as to entitle him to succeed in an interpleader issue as against an execution creditor who had obtained judgment against the bankrupt.—JENNINGS v MATHER. Q.B.D, 495; [1901] 1 Q B. 108; 70 L J. Q. B. 53; 83 L T. 506.

14. Landlord and tenant—Lease—Covenant not to assign—Proviso for re-entry on bankruptcy or breach of covenant—Receiving order and adjudication on lessee's own application—Forfeiture—Peaceable re-entry by lessor—Notice—Relief—Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 14, sub-sections 1, 2, 6—Conveyancing Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 13)—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, r. 190.—The filing by a debtor of his own petition and his application to be adjudged bankrupt, followed by receiving order and adjudication, does not constitute a breach of a covenant in a lease not to assign the demised premises.—RIGGS, RE, TRUSTEE, THE, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 624; [1901] 2 K. B. 16; 17 L. J. K. B. 541; 84 L. T. 428.

15. Landlord and tenant—Rent guaranteed by third party—Bankruptcy of lessee—Disclaimer of lease by trustee—Liability of surety after date of disclaimer—Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 55 (2).—Where a lessee for a term of years becomes bankrupt, and his trustee disclaims the lease under section 55 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, the term, as between the lessor and the lessee, is put an end to; and, therefore, a surety for the payment of the rent under the lease is released from his liability under the guarantee as and from the date of the disclaimer, there being no rent due from the lessee after that date.—STACEY v. HILL, C.A., 390; [1901] 1 Q. B. 660; 70 L. J. K. B. 435; 84 L. T. 410

16 Lease—Assignment—Mortgage by sub-demise—Bankrupt assignee—Disclaimer—Vesting order—Exclusion—Application by lessor—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 55, sub-section 6).—Where the trustee in bankruptcy of an assignee of a lease has disclaimed the lease which the bankrupt had mortgaged by a sub-demise, the original lessor is, under section 55 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, entitled, notwithstanding the solvency of the original lessee, to apply to the court for an order vesting the property in the mortgagee subject to the same liabilities as the bankrupt was subject to under the original lease at the date when the bankruptcy petition was filed, and if the mortgagee declines to accept such an order he will be excluded from all interest in and security upon the property.—BAKER, RE, LUPTON, EX PARTE, C.A., 691.

17. Partnership—Equitable assignment of debt—Bankruptcy of continuing partner—Order or disposition—True owner—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 44.—C. and S. traded in partnership, and in the course of business lent money to R. In 1894 the partnership was dissolved by deed, whereby the assets of the partnership were assigned to C., who agreed to pay over to S. one fifth part of any money which he might receive from R. in respect to R.'s debt to the firm. In 1898 C. became bankrupt. S. gave no notice to R. of his interest in the debt due from R. to the firm under his agreement with C. In 1900 the trustee in C.'s bankruptcy received from R. £150 in settlement of R.'s debt. S. now claimed to recover one-fifth of this sum from the trustee.

Held, that the agreement between C. and S. amounted to a valid equitable assignment to S., but that S. was the "true owner" of the share assigned to him, which, however, was in the order or disposition of the bankrupt with his consent, within section 44 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and that he therefore could not recover from the trustee.—CROUCH, RE, SMITH, EX PARTE, Bkcy.; 83 L. T. 746.

18. Petition—Receiving order—Fraud—"Sufficient cause"—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 7, sub-section 3.—In July, 1899, the debtor proposed to pay his creditors a composition of 10s. in the pound. Gill, one of the creditors, refused to accept the composition unless the debtor gave him a promissory note for the balance of his debt. The composition fell through, and in August, 1900, Gill and Sutcliffe presented a joint petition against the debtor.

Held, that the conduct of Gill with reference to the proposed composition constituted "sufficient cause" why no order ought to be made, and dismissed the petition.

Decision of the Divisional Court (Wright and Phillimore, JJ.), ante, p. 141, reversed.—SHAW, RE, GILL, EX PARTE, C.A., 264; 83 L. T. 754.

19 Petition by company—Officer of the company—Amendment—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c.

52), s. 148.—Any person bonâ fide chosen by a company to be their agent for the presentation of a bankruptcy petition becomes an officer for that purpose.

Where, therefore, the person so nominated is only a clerk, and not in any ordinary sense an officer of the company, he thereby becomes sufficiently for the purposes of section 148 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, an officer of the company to present the petition, although his appointment under the seal of the company was only made subsequently to the presentation of the petition.—TOMKINS, RE, C.A., 294; [1901] 1 Q. B. 476; 70 L. J. Q. B. 223; 84 L. T. 341.

20. Practice—Costs—Appeal—Security for costs—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52)—General Rules, 1886, 1890, r. 131.—The deposit of £20 which an intending appellant is required by Bankruptcy rule 131 to lodge in the High Court as security for the cost of his appeal may be applied to satisfy the costs of an unsuccessful application to diminish or dispense with such security, as well as to the costs of the actual appeal.—CHILD, RE, CHILD, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 447; 84 L. T. 326.

21. Practice—Receiving order—Foreigner resident abroad but trading in England—Jurisdiction—"Debtor"—Assignment executed abroad for benefit of creditors generally—Notice of suspension of payment—Receiving order—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (a), (h); s. 6, sub-section 1 (d).—The Court of Bankruptcy has no jurisdiction to make a receiving order against a foreigner resident abroad who, without coming into the jurisdiction, has in this country had a place of business, contracted debts, and acquired assets, and has executed abroad an assignment of his property for the benefit of his creditors generally. Such a person is not a "debtor" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 6, sub-section 1 (d).

Decision of Court of Appeal, reported as In re A. B. & Co., [1900] 1 Q. B. 541, affirmed.—COOKE v. VOGELER, H.L.; [1901] A. C. 102; 70 L J. Q. B. 181; 84 L T. 10.

22. Practice—Receiving order—Stay of proceedings—Appeal—Service of notice of appeal—"Parties directly affected by"—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 58, r. 2—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, r. 134.—A receiving order having been made against a debtor upon a creditor's petition, the registrar, on the application of the debtor, supported by the majority of persons claiming to be creditors, including the petitioning creditor, stayed the issue of advertisements and all proceedings under the receiving order for a limited period. The official receiver appealed against the stay, the debtor alone being served with notice of the appeal.

Held, that the notice of appeal must be served also on the petitioning creditor as being a party "directly affected by the appeal" under R. S. C., 1883, ord. 58, r. 2 (applied to bankruptcy appeals by rule 134 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1886), but not on any other of the alleged creditors.—DEBTOR, A, RE, C.A.; [1901] 2 K. B. 354; 70 L. J. K. B. 699; 84 L. T. 666.

23. Practice—Summary case—Release of trustee—Subsequent assets—Right of creditors to appoint new trustee—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 82, 121—Bankruptcy Discharge and Closure Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 66), s. 6, sub-section 2.—Where a bankrupt's estate is administered in a summary manner under section 121 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, the official receiver is to be the trustee in the bankruptcy, and after he has obtained his release as such trustee he still remains an ex officio trustee by virtue of section 82, sub-section 4, of the same Act.

The creditors, therefore, have no power to appoint a new trustee after the official receiver's release because there is no vacancy in the office.—LEACH, RE, BARNES, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 76; [1900] 2 Q. B. 649; 69 L. J. Q. B. 931; 83 L. T. 222.

24. Practice—Withdrawal of proof—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), Sched. II.—A creditor will not be allowed to withdraw his proof otherwise than unconditionally while a motion is pending to expunge such proof.—CLARK, RE, BUENOS AYRES RAILWAY, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 528; [1901] 1 Q. B. 655; 70 L. J. Q. B. 259; 84 L. T. 208.

25. Property of bankrupt—Undischarged bankrupt carrying on business—Knowledge of the trustee—Second adjudication—Profits of business—Right of trustee in second bankruptcy—Costs—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 44, 54.—Where an undischarged bankrupt carries on business with the knowledge of the trustee for the time being, and subsequently while still undischarged is again adjudicated a bankrupt, the present trustee in the first bankruptcy (though not aware of the trading) is not entitled to the proceeds of the business, carried on with the knowledge of his predecessor, against the trustee in the second bankruptcy.

Troughton v. Gitley (Amb. 629) and Tucker v. Hernaman (4 D. M. & G. 395) followed.

The fund in dispute having been acquired under circumstances which themselves necessitated investigation, the costs of both trustees ordered to be paid thereout.—BURR, RE, PANNELL, EX PARTE, Bkcy.; 84 L. T. 327.

26. Property passing to trustee—Right of action—Action for personal tort and injury to goods—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 44, 168.—The action was for trespass and conversion of the plaintiff's goods, and damages were also claimed for the personal annoyance caused thereby to the plaintiff. After the cause was entered for trial the plaintiff became bankrupt, and, on the application of the defendants, before the jury were sworn, Grantham, J., stayed all proceedings in the action, on the ground that the causes of action had vested in the trustee in the bankruptcy. The trustee did not desire to continue the action. The bankrupt appealed.

Held, that this action was one in which, to use the words of Cresswell, J., in Beckham v. Drake, 2 H. L. C. 579, at p. 613, "the primary personal injury to the bankrupt is the principal and essential cause of action," and though the facts, so far as one could surmise them from the pleadings and the materials before Grantham, J., made "vindictive" damages in the popular sense improbable, the court would not be justified in interfering with the plaintiff's right to have the stay of proceedings removed, if the cause of action was in point of law vested in him, notwithstanding his bankruptcy.—ROSS v. BUCKETT, C.A.; [1901] 2 K. B. 449; 70 L. J. K. B. 736; 84 L. T. 670.

27. Receiving order—Judgment debt—Guaranty—Release of co-guarantor—Release of debt—Agreement not to sue.—The release of one co-guarantor operates as a release of the other co-guarantors, notwithstanding that the contractual liability has passed into a judgment.

The difference as regards co-debtors between the release of a debt and the release of liability to be sued, considered and explained.

Ex parte Good, In re Armitage, 25 W. R. 422, 5

Ch. D. 46, distinguished.—E. W. A., Re, C.A., 642; 70 L. J. K. B. 810.

28. Reputed ownership—Bill of sale—Grantor licensed victualler—Mortgagees in possession of premises—Goods in possession of debtor in his trade or business—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 44.—A debtor was lessee of three public-houses; the licence of one was in his name, that of the other two in the names of nominees of his. He granted a bill of sale over trade utensils and equipment in and upon the three public-houses. At the commencement of the bankruptcy the mortgagees of the houses had entered, and had appointed managers who were carrying on the business, but they allowed the debtor to reside at the house of which he held the licence. The goods in the bill of sale remained on the premises; there was no default under the bill of sale.

Held, that the goods at all three houses were at the commencement of the bankruptcy in the possession of the bankrupt in his trade or business within section 44 of the Bankruptcy Act, and that they passed to the trustee as part of the bankrupt's property divisible among his creditors.—Elliott, Re, Bkcy.; 84 L. T. 325.

29. Rescission of receiving order—Debtor's petition—Abuse of process of the court—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 8.—Where a receiving order has been made upon a debtor's petition, the court may rescind such receiving order upon proof that the presentation of the petition was an abuse by the debtor of the process of the court.

In re Painter, 43 W. R. 144, [1895] 1 Q. B. 85, distinguished.—Betts, Re, Official Receiver, Ex parte, Bkcy., 447; [1901] 1 Q. B. 39; 70 L. J. Q. B. 511; 84 L. T. 427.

30. Secured creditors—Security on property represented by debtor to be that of his wife—Right of proof—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict c. 52), ss. 39, 168, and Schedule II., r. 9.—C. in 1898 owed a considerable sum to P. & Co. for goods supplied and for money lent. In August, 1898, P. & Co. agreed to advance to C. a further sum of £2,000. As security for this advance it was arranged that C.'s wife should mortgage to P. & Co. a property called the Yacht Tavern; C. represented to P. & Co. that this was his wife's separate property, and that it had been bought exclusively with her own money. On the 6th of September, 1898, the mortgage was executed, C. joining therein. C. subsequently became bankrupt, and the trustee in his bankruptcy obtained an order from the court declaring that the Yacht Tavern was part of his estate, and that his wife was merely his nominee.

P. & Co. having sold the Yacht Tavern under the powers in the mortgage, sought to prove against C.'s estate for the full amount of their debt, without giving credit for the amount realized by the sale, arguing that the trustee was estopped from denying that the Yacht Tavern was the separate property of the wife.

Held, that there was no such estoppel against the trustee, and that P. & Co. could prove against C.'s estate only for the balance of their debt, after giving credit for the amount realized by the sale of the security.—Cooksey, Re, Portal, Ex parte, Bkcy.; 83 L. T. 435.

31. Ship—Mortgage—Act of bankruptcy before mortgage—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 36—Bankruptcy Act, 1883, ss. 43, 44, 49.—Where a mortgage is granted on a ship after the mortgagor has committed an act of bankruptcy, in respect of which he is subsequently adjudicated a bankrupt, the mortgage is protected by section 49 of the Bankruptcy Act if the mortgagee had no notice of the act of bankruptcy at the date of the mortgage, notwithstanding the fact that the ship remains in the possession of the mortgagor up to the date of the receiving order.—"Ruby," The, P.D. & Ad D.; 83 L. T. 438.

32. Trading under assumed name—Mortgage of freehold property—Second bankruptcy—Rights of trustees and mortgagees—Vesting order—Annulment of bankruptcy—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 25), s. 35.—An undischarged bankrupt started business under an assumed name, acquired freehold property, and mortgaged it in that name. A second receiving order was made, the assets being the equity redemption of the property, and personal property of which realized £113. Subsequently the identity of the bankrupt was discovered.

On motion it was ordered that the mortgaged property should vest in the mortgagees upon the registrar being satisfied that all the debts in the first bankruptcy, with all costs and expenses, had been paid in full; the £113 to be applied towards payment of the debts.—Adie, Re, Rushforth, Ex parte, Bkcy.; 84 L. T. 508.

33. Vendor and purchaser—Contract for sale—Leaseholds — Disclaimer of contract — Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 55.—A trustee in bankruptcy cannot disclaim a contract for the sale of leaseholds entered into by the bankrupt before the bankruptcy unless he also disclaims the leaseholds.—Bastable, Re, Trustee, The, Ex parte, C.A., 561; 70 L. J. K. B. 784; 84 L. T. 825.

34. Voluntary settlements of policies of life assurance—Payment of premiums of settled policies within ten years of bankruptcy—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 47.—Although circumstances might easily arise in which moneys paid within ten years of bankruptcy for the purpose of effecting a policy of assurance which is taken out and settled within that period might constitute a settlement within the meaning of section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, yet, where the policy has been taken out and settled at a period more remote than ten years from the date of the settlor's bankruptcy, the premiums subsequently voluntarily paid by the settlor within the said ten years in order to keep alive the policy do not constitute such a settlement.

No proportionate part of the moneys ultimately payable under a policy of assurance is represented by the payment of any particular premium.

Decision of Wright, J. (44 Solicitors' Journal, 451, 82 L. T. Rep. 623, 48 W. R. Dig. 21), reversed.—Harrison, Re, Whinney, Ex parte, C.A., 2; [1900] 2 Q. B. 710; 69 L. J. Q. B. 942; 83 L. T. 189.

35. Will — Determinable life interest — Would become vested in some other person—Vesting of bankrupt's property in trustee in bankruptcy—Relation back to act of bankruptcy—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 43, 44 (1), 54 (2).—By his will, J. G., who died in 1858 gave a share of his residue upon trust to permit H. G. to receive the income until he should do, or omit to do, or should suffer to be done, any act whereby the same, if payable to himself, would become vested in some other person, and, on the determination of the interest so given to H. G., upon other trusts. A bankruptcy notice which was served on H. G. expired on the 8th of July, 1900, without his having complied with it. On the 17th of August a receiving order was made, and on the 1st of October H. G. was adjudicated bankrupt.

A dividend was payable on the 5th of October for the quarter—5th of July to the 5th of October; and the question was, Who was entitled to the apportioned part from the 8th of July, the date of the act of bankruptcy, to the 1st of October, the date of the adjudication. It was admitted that the Apportionment Act applied.

Held, that, inasmuch as the dividend, if it had been payable before the adjudication, would have vested in the applicant the trustee of the will, to be dealt with according to the will by reason of H. G. —on the 8th of July—omitting to comply with the bankruptcy notice, and the same was true of all daily apportioned parts of the dividend, therefore the applicant was entitled to an apportioned part of the dividend as from the 8th of July.—MONTEFIORE v. GUEDALLA, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 269; [1901] 1 Ch. 435; 70 L. J. Ch. 180; 83 L. T. 735.

See also Company, 1, 3, 44. 45; Married Woman, 1, 2; Settlement, 5; Stock Exchange, 1; Vendor and Purchaser, 1.

BASTARDY:—

1. Order of quarter sessions quashing affiliation order—Subsequent action for seduction by mother—Estoppel.—The fact that an affiliation order made (on the application of a girl who was the mother of an illegitimate child) by justices against the putative father has been quashed on appeal to quarter sessions, does not raise an estoppel as against such girl's mother in an action claiming damages for the seduction of the girl.

Reg. v. Glynne, 20 W. R. 94. L. R. 7 Q. B. 16, considered and distinguished.—ANDERSON v. COLLINSON, K.B.D., 615; [1901] 2 K. B. 107; 70 L. J. K. B. 626; 84 L. T. 465.

2. Summons against putative father — Married woman living with her husband—Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 65), s. 3 — A married woman is not entitled to a bastardy summons against the putative father of a bastard child born to her during wedlock if, at the time of her application, she is living with her husband.—JONES v. DAVIES, Q B.D., 136; [1901] 1 Q. B. 118; 70 L. J. Q. B. 38; 83 L. T. 412.

BILL of EXCHANGE.—See Banker, 2.

BILL of SALE:—

1. Registration—Absolute bill of sale—Non-renewal of registration—Bill of sale given by grantee of first bill of sale—Subsequent execution against grantor of first bill of sale—Apparent possession—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), ss. 8, 11.—In 1893 the defendant, by an absolute bill of sale, assigned the furniture in the house in which he resided, and of which he was the tenant, to a person who also resided in the same house. This bill of sale was duly registered, but the registration was not renewed. In November, 1900, the grantee gave a bill of sale of the furniture to the claimant to secure an advance, and this bill of sale was duly registered. Subsequently the furniture, which had remained at the same house where the defendant and the grantee of the first bill of sale resided, was seized in execution of a judgment recovered by the plaintiff against the defendant, and was claimed by the claimant under his bill of sale. Upon an interpleader issue,

Held, that, as there was no execution creditor of the defendant in existence at the time when the bill of sale to the claimant was given, so as to avoid the first bill of sale under section 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, the claimant's title to the furniture was valid.—ANTONIADA v. SMITH, C.A., 693.

2. Statutory form—True ownership—Two grantors —Chattels belonging to each grantor in severalty—Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), ss. 5, 7, 9.—A bill of sale by way of security for the payment of money was given by two persons as grantors, of whom each was the owner of some only of the chattels comprised in the bill.

Held, that the form of a bill of sale in the schedule to the Act of 1882 does not contemplate a bill of sale being given jointly by two independent owners of chattels, and that the bill of sale was void as not being in accordance with that form.—SAUNDERS v. WHITE, Q.B.D., 127; [1901] 1 Q. B. 70; 70 L. J. Q. B 34; 83 L. T. 712.

3. Validity—Registration—Name of grantor—Bill of sale given and registered in true name—Grantor known by assumed name—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 10, sub-section 2.—The Bills of Sale Act has no provision that the name of the grantor of a bill of sale should be correctly stated in the affidavit filed on the registration of the bill of sale; and therefore, if the grantor of a bill of sale, who has assumed and become known by a name other than his own, is described in the bill of sale and in the affidavit filed on its registration by his true name instead of the name by which he is known, such registration is valid in the absence of an intention on the part of the grantor to defraud or mislead creditors.—STOKES v. SPENCER, Q.B.D., 13; [1900] 2 Q. B. 483; 69 L. J. Q. B. 792; 83 L. T. 199.

See also Bankruptcy, 9, 28.

BUILDING SOCIETY:—

1. Winding up—Unincorporated society certified after 1862 and before 1874—Repeal of statute under which certified—Illegal company—Jurisdiction to wind up—Building Societies Acts, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32); 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 42), s. 40; 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 47), s. 25—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 4, 199.—A building society was established and certified in 1868 under the Building Societies Act, 1836. but was never incorporated. By section 25 of the Building Societies Act, 1894, the Act of 1836 was repealed as from August, 1896, as to all societies certified under it after 1856.

Early in 1900 the society was found to be insolvent, and the winding-up petition was then presented against the society, but C., one of its creditors, did not appear on that petition. which was withdrawn, all the other undisputed creditors of the society agreeing to accept 12s. 6d. in the pound, which was paid to them. There was nothing for distribution amongst the shareholders, as the assets when sold did not realize enough to pay the composition. The balance of this was provided by the directors out of their own pockets, and they took an assignment of the claims of the assenting creditors, and retained in hand enough to pay and offered C. 12s. 6d. in the pound on his debt.

C. refused the offer, and petitioned for a winding-up order, alleging irregularities by the society's officers, and that an investigation into its affairs was necessary. The court was of opinion that nothing substantial would result from a winding-up order.

Held, on the facts above stated, that the petition must be dismissed.

Semble, that, the Act of 1836 having been repealed, the society came within the class of companies forbidden by section 4 of the Companies

Act, 1862, and that there was no jurisdiction to wind it up under the Companies Acts.

Held, also, that the society had no status to ask to be paid its costs of the petition while it relied on this point against the petitioner.—ILFRACOMBE BUILDING SOCIETY, RE, Ch.D. Wright, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 102; 70 L. J. Ch. 66; 84 L. T. 146.

2. Withdrawal of members—Construction of rules—Priorities—Executor of deceased member—Right to "set off."—In a building society incorporated in 1880 under the Act of 1874, notice was given on the 26th of June, 1895, for a meeting on the 10th of July, to consider the question of dissolution. On the 8th of August, at the adjourned meeting, a resolution was carried for voluntary winding up. On the 1st of November, 1895, the deed of dissolution was registered. The notices of withdrawal given by different members under the rules of the society and matured before the four above-mentioned dates respectively, and one member had died before the 26th of June, 1895, without giving notice of withdrawal.

This was a summons by the trustees of the deed of dissolution to determine the priorities of such members inter se in the distribution of the surplus assets of the society. An advance, on the security of his share, had been made ultra vires, on the terms of a circular issued by the secretary, to a member who had given notice of withdrawal before the 26th of June, 1895.

Held, on the construction of the rules, (1) that the members who gave notice of withdrawal prior to the date of the resolution for winding up were entitled to the surplus assets in priority to the other members; (2) that the deceased member took precedence of all persons who had given notices of withdrawal, and that his executor took priority accordingly; (3) that the member to whom the advance had been made was to be treated as having waived his notice of withdrawal, and was not entitled, as against those whose notices of withdrawal matured prior to the 26th of June, 1895, to set off the moneys due from him against the sum due to him from the society on his fully paid-up share, but was bound to contribute the moneys to satisfy the claims of those entitled to the assets in priority to himself.

In re West London and General Permanent Building Society, 78 L. T. Rep. 393, 46 W. R. Dig. 19, followed.

Brownlie v. Russell, 8 App. Cas. 235, 31 W. R. Dig. 28, distinguished.—COUNTIES CONSERVATIVE BUILDING SOCIETY, RE, DAVIS v. NORTON, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 71; [1901] 2 Ch. 819; 69 L. J. Ch. 798.

CANADA, LAW of:—

Builder's privilege—Hypothecary privilege—Civil Code of Lower Canada, arts. 2013 G and 2103—59 Vict. c. 42.—Held, that under the Civil Code, as amended by 59 Vict. c. 42, a builder's privilege is limited to one year from the date of registration thereof; and, with regard to an hypothecary privilege conferred on suppliers of materials, it only arises on notice being given to the proprietor under art. 2013 G, and registered under art. 2103, and lapses unless the prescribed legal proceedings are taken within three months from the date of notice.—BANQUE D'HOCHELEGA v. STEVENSON, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 600; 69 L. J. P. C. 139.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE, LAW of:—

Contract — Construction — "Flotation" — British South Africa Co.'s Mining Ordinance, 1890, ss. 26, 27, 28—Company.—Where a prospector agreed with a syndicate that his pay for services rendered in Matabeleland or Mashonaland should be £250 on flotation by the syndicate of every block of ten claims pegged by him, and the syndicate agreed to sell 330 claims pegged by the prospector to a substantial company which had for one of its principal objects the developing and working of gold mines,

Held, that this was a flotation of the claims within the meaning of the agreement, and that the provisions of the Mining Regulations of 1890, ss. 26, 27, and 28, were not imported into the agreement so as to limit the meaning of flotation to one by the British South Africa Co. or by the claimholder with their consent, in either case after the grant of an inspection certificate. — TORVA EXPLORING SYNDICATE v. KELLY, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 612; 69 L. J. P. C. 115.

CEYLON, LAW of:—

1. Practice—Code of Civil Procedure, 1889, chap. xii., art. 87—Setting aside proceedings—Defendant lunatic not so found by inquisition—Order in Lunacy—Admissibility in evidence—Chap. 12, art. 87, of the Ceylon Code of Civil Procedure provides that where a plaintiff has obtained a decree absolute by default, the court may set it aside if within a reasonable time the defendant appears and satisfies the court that he was prevented from appearing to show cause "by reason of accident or misfortune, or by not having received due information of the proceedings."

Held, that in the case of a lunatic defendant it is not necessary to show that he has been formally found lunatic on an inquisition on an application under the section to set aside proceedings if there is sufficient evidence of the lunacy in fact.

Orders in Lunacy, being made by a competent tribunal in matters within its jurisdiction, are admissible as primâ facie evidence of the facts recited in them which are essential to their validity in all parts of his Majesty's dominions.—HARVEY v. REX, P.C.; 84 L. T. 849.

2. Will, Execution of—Wills—Ordinance No. 7 of 1840, s. 3—Notary present without attesting—Testamentary capacity.—Ceylon Ordinance No. 7 of 1840, s. 3, requires that a testator's signature shall be made or acknowledged in the presence of a licensed notary public and two or more witnesses duly attesting the execution, or, if no notary be present, then in the presence of five or more witnesses duly attesting.

Held, that the words "if no notary be present" mean present acting in his notarial capacity.

Where a notary was present but refused to act in that capacity by attesting, and the will was in consequence attested by five witnesses, held, that it was validly executed.

Where a testator is of sound mind when he gives instructions for a will, but at the time of signature accepts the instrument drawn in pursuance thereof without being able to follow its provisions, held, that he must be deemed to be of sound mind when it is executed.

Parker v. Felgate, 8 P. D. 171, approved.—PERERA v. PERERA, P.C.; [1901] A. C. 354; 70 L. J. P. C. 46; 84 L. T. 371.

CHARITY:—

1. Action by school board to enforce trust—Consent of Charity Commissioners—Charitable Trusts Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 137) s. 17.—The managers of a national school demised the school buildings and the income of the endowment of the school for the term of sixty years to a school board. During the term the school board brought an action in the county court against the Official Trustees of Charitable Funds, alleging that the income of the endowment had been paid to and received by the defendants, and claiming inquiries and payment of the income so received.

Held, that the action was one to which section 17 of the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, applied, and that it did not come within the proviso to that section; and that, therefore, it could not proceed without the consent of the Charity Commissioners. —LLANBADARNFAWR SCHOOL BOARD v. OFFICIAL TRUSTEES OF CHARITABLE FUNDS, C.A., 363; [1901] 1 Q. B. 430; 70 L. J. K. B. 307; 84 L. T. 311.

2. Invalid bequest followed by gift of residue to charity—Will.—Testator by his will, dated in 1864, gave the sum of £1,000 out of his personal estate to trustees, and directed that it should be invested in the names of the vicar and churchwardens of a certain church, upon trust in the first place out of the income to maintain yearly and keep in good repair and condition a tomb belonging to the testator in the churchyard, and in the next place to divide and distribute the remainder among the poor recipients of certain almshouses.

Held, that, the gift to maintain the tomb being invalid, the whole income of the fund went to the vicar and churchwardens on behalf of the almshouses.

Fisk v. Attorney-General, L. R. 4 Eq. 521; Dawson v. Small, L. R. 18 Eq. 114; and In re Birkett, 9 Ch. D. 576, followed.—ROGERSON, RE, BIRD v. LEE, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 715; 70 L. J. Ch. 444; 84 L. T. 200.

3. Mortmain — Real estate—Devise—Sale—Extension of time—Jurisdiction—Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 73), ss. 5, 6.—Where land had been devised to a charity the court has jurisdiction, under section 5 of the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891, when and so often as the circumstances render it desirable, to extend the time for sale beyond the year from the testator's death; and the power of granting an extension of time is not confined merely to an extension for the purpose of carrying into effect a contract for sale made within the year from the death.—SIDEBOTTOM, RE, BEELEY v. SIDEBOTTOM, C.A.; [1901] 2 Ch. 1; 70 L. J. Ch. 448.

4. Scheme—Construction—Parish—Privileged and non-privileged townships — Chapelries — Overseers—Tithe—Church rate—Private Act—Endowed Schools Acts, 1869 to 1874 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 56; 36 & 37 Vict. c. 87; 37 & 38 Vict c. 87).—On the construction of an Act of Parliament and two schemes regulating charitable trusts for the benefit of "the deserving poor of the parish of Sandbach," in which parish there were, besides the parish church, two chapelries with chapels of ease, and thirteen townships, only six of which latter were privileged under the original foundation,

Held, that the word "parish" meant the whole ecclesiastical parish, including all the thirteen townships and the two chapelries.

The payment of the whole tithe to the incumbent of the parish church points to this as the true construction, and evidence as to the local levying of rates by different overseers and of funds for chapel repairs and as to the local election of churchwardens cannot avail to the contrary.—SANDBACH SCHOOL, RE, ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. CREWE (EARL), Ch.D. Farwell, J., 647; [1901] 2 Ch. 317; 70 L. J. Ch. 604.

5. Trustees—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 66.—J. S. by his will, made in 1558, directed his executors to erect an almshouse for ten poor persons, and gave his executors the rents of certain real estate for five years after his death, for the purpose of founding and maintaining the intended almshouses, and gave his residue to his executors on condition that they should procure the creation of a corporation to enable the corporators to take on themselves his real estate "for the finding of such poor persons." Some time after the death of the testator legal proceedings were taken and the money recovered from the executors was invested in lands at M. A deed was executed declaring the trusts of the property to be for the relief of the poor, lame, and impotent people dwelling within A. "or otherwise to employ the same for the raising and maintenance of a school according to the statute in that behalf made so as and where the same should be thought convenient by the greatest number of inhabitants being also the most chargeable to the relief of the poor" until a charter of incorporation should be obtained.

Until 1818 the income was applied in aid of the rates for the relief of the poor. In 1818 the vestry of A. resolved to erect a school, and since 1819 the rents of M. were applied in supporting the school which was then erected. The governors of the school, who were trustees now retired, and the parish council appointed new trustees in their place. The churchwardens now petitioned against the decision of the Charity Commissioners that the parish council had power to appoint. They said in 1819 the income had been definitely appropriated to educational purposes, and trustees of the income of a permanent endowment of a school were in the same position as trustees of a school. Secondly, it was said that the charity was ecclesiastical.

Held, that section 66 of the Local Government Act, 1894, did not include trusteeship of property temporarily devoted to the use of the school.

Held, also, that the charity was not ecclesiastical. —SPENDLUFFE'S CHARITY, RE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; 83 L. T. 498.

6. Voluntary association—Clifford's-inn—Failure of objects.—By a deed made in 1618 a messuage and premises known as Clifford's-inn were assured in consideration of £600 to certain members of a voluntary association as trustees; and it was declared that the true intent of the deed was that the premises "shall for ever be continued and employed as an inn of Chancery for the good of the gentlemen of that society and for the benefit of the Commonwealth, and not otherwise nor to any other use, intent, or purpose." The property had long been dealt with by the Society of Clifford's-inn as its own and for its own purposes; and the surviving members of the society contended that it was not now subject to or affected by any charitable trust, but belonged to the individual members for their own personal benefit, and capable of being divided and disposed of between them as they might think fit.

Held, that the deed of 1618 negatived the contention of private ownership and proved a dedication to public or charitable objects, and that the property now vested in the present trustees must be held by them upon trust for charitable purposes.—SMITH v. KERR, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J; [1900] 2 Ch. 511; 69 L. J. Ch. 755; 82 L. T. 795.

7. Will—Gift to the Corps of Commissionaires—Gift to an institution not charitable—Gift to members of voluntary institution as such—Perpetuity.—The Corps of Commissionaires is a society existing to find employment for discharged or disabled soldiers and sailors. The institution is self-supporting. A gift to the committee for the time being of the Corps of Commissionaires to aid in the purchase of their barracks, or in any other way beneficial to that corps, held to be valid on the grounds that (1) if the institution was a charity the gift was good; (2) in so far as the institution was not a charity the gift was good, as the governing body could deal with it in any way they pleased, and the gift did not tend to a perpetuity.—CLARKE v. CLARKE, Ch.D. Bryne, J., 628; [1901] 2 Ch. 110; 70 L. J. Ch. 631; 84 L. T. 811.

8. Will—Perpetuity—Gift without reference to age or poverty.—Testator bequeathed to the Vintners Company a certain portrait "to be hung by them in a conspicuous part of their hall, and always to be so retained; and upon condition that they accept the bequest of the said portrait with the obligation aforesaid" the testator bequeathed to the said company the sum of £4,000, enjoining the said company out of the income of the said sum of £4,000 to keep the portrait in proper repair, cleaning and regilding its frame not less than once in every four years, and the surplus of the said income to be applied for the benefit of individuals answering a certain description, without any reference to age or poverty.

Held, that the gift of the portrait was valid, the condition imposed being a condition subsequent, but that no part of the gift of the £4,000 could be supported as a charitable gift, and therefore wholly failed as infringing the rule against perpetuities.—GASSIOT, RE, FLADGATE v. VINTNERS COMPANY, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; 78 L. J. Ch. 242.

COMMON:—

Scheme for regulation under Metropolitan Commons Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 122), and Metropolitan Commons Amendment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 107) —Metropolitan Commons (Mitcham) Supplemental Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. xxvi.)—Land delineated in the plan.—An Act of Parliament confirmnig a scheme under the Metropolitan Commons Act, 1866, and the Metropolitan Commons Amendment Act, 1869, provided, by section 17, that the conservators should maintain the commons as delineated on a plan free of all encroachment. Section 37 was a saving clause as regards estates, interests, or rights of a profitable or beneficial nature in, over, or affecting the commons as could or might have been enjoyed if the scheme had not been confirmed by Act of Parliament.

Held, that where land was delineated on the plan, it could not be denied that it was subject to the provisions of the scheme of the Act; and that it was then too late for any person to set up for the first time a claim of ownership in fee to such land or any part thereof.—COOK v. MITCHAM COMMON CONSERVATORS, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 201; [1901] 1 Ch. 387; 70 L. J. Ch. 223; 83 L. T. 519.

COMPANY:—

1. Articles of association—Restriction on transfer of shares—Perpetuity—Fraud on bankruptcy law.—The rule against perpetuities does not apply to personal contracts.

A provision in the articles of association of a company that a shareholder who was not a manager or assistant should sell his shares to a manager or assistant at a price to be assessed in a particular way is not invalid.

A bonâ fide provision in the articles of association that a person should sell his shares is not obnoxious to the bankruptcy law.—BORLAND'S TRUSTEE v. STEEL, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 120; [1901] 1 Ch. 279; 70 L. J. Ch. 51.

2. Association not for profit—Alteration of objects—Addition of "Limited"—Board of Trade—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 23—Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 62).—An association not for profit, registered under licence from the Board of Trade without the word "Limited," applied to the court for confirmation of alterations of its objects as stated in its memorandum of association.

By the direction of the court the sanction of the board to the alterations was applied for and obtained.

The court granted the application.

Held, also, that, if the sanction of the board had not been obtained, the court could only have allowed the alterations if the word "Limited" were added to the name of the association.—ST. HILDA'S COLLEGE, CHELTENHAM, RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 279; [1901] 1 Ch. 556; 70 L. J. Ch. 266.

3. Bankruptcy — Debenture-holder's action — Receiver in possession—Poor and district rates—Water rate payable by meter—Apportionment—Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 62), s. 1, sub-section 1 (a)—Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Amendment Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 19), ss. 2, 3.—On the 9th of November, 1898, holders of debentures of a company commenced an action to enforce their security, and a receiver was appointed. The debentures were a charge on the undertaking of the company and its property present and future. On the 1st of December, 1898, the company went into liquidation. In January, 1899, the receiver paid poor rate and district rate made in October, 1898, and water rate, which was payable according to meter. He claimed to be recouped these payments as preferential payments under the Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888, and Amendment Act, 1897.

Held, that the question being one between mortgagor and mortgagee, not between successive occupiers, and the poor rate and district rate being due from the company at the date of the commencement of the winding up, the liquidators must pay the whole amounts out of the general assets of the company; but that the water rate was not due until the water was supplied, and must be apportioned, the liquidators paying only so much as was due at the date of the commencement of the winding up.—SIEMENS v. MANNESMANN TUBE Co., Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1901] 2 Ch. 93; 70 L. J. Ch. 565; 84 L. T. 579.

4. Capital—Appreciation of assets—Ultra vires—Payment of dividend out of assets—Debt written off as bad subsequently paid with interest.—A new company purchased the assets of an old company, and there was included in such assets a debt (then considered valueless) due to the old company from a third company, and secured by promissory notes. For some time the debt due on the notes was treated as of no value in the new company's annual accounts. Ultimately the debt was paid in full.

Held, on motion for injunction by a shareholder, that the company ought to be restrained from distributing the amount so paid as dividend except with reference to the other business or assets of the new company.—FOSTER v. NEW TRINIDAD LAKE ASPHALT Co., Ch.D. Byrne, J., 119; [1901] 1 Ch. 208; 70 L. J. Ch. 123.

5. Capital—Reduction—Available assets—Goodwill—Reserve—Unappropriated profits—Preference shares—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 11—Companies Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 26).—The court will not confirm a reduction of capital unless satisfied that it will not work unjustly or inequitably.

Share capital comprised ordinary shares and shares carrying a fixed cumulative preference dividend, with no preference as to capital and no voting power. The court refused to confirm a reduction on the ground (inter alia) that the reduction would benefit the ordinary shareholders at the expense of the preference shareholders.

In ascertaining the available assets of a company for the purpose of a reduction of capital, the amounts of reserve and unappropriated profit and the value of goodwill are to be taken into account.

On an opposed petition to confirm a reduction of capital the court will not act on the balance of speculative expert evidence as to the value of mining property.—BARROW HÆMATITE STEEL CO., RE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 846; 83 L. T. 397.

6. Contract on behalf of intended company—Adoption—Inference—Privity of contract.—The plaintiff company entered into an agreement with A. B. to grant to him, or a company to be formed by him, an exclusive licence to use certain patents. A. B. then entered into an agreement with C. D. to sell the licence to him on behalf of the intended company, and this agreement was adopted by the intended company, the defendants, by another agreement, to which A. B., C. D., and the defendants were parties.

Held, that there was no privity of contract between the plaintiffs and defendants, and that no contract between them could be inferred from the facts of the case.

In re Northumberland Avenue Hotel Co., 33 Ch.D 16, 35 W. R. Dig. 38, followed.

Howard v. Patent Ivory Manufacturing Co., 36 W. R. 801, 38 Ch. D. 156, and Werderman v. Société Générale d'Electricité, 30 W. R. 33, 19 Ch. D. 246, discussed.—BAGOT PNEUMATIC TYRE CO. v. CLIPPER PNEUMATIC TYRE CO., Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 265; [1901] 1 Ch. 196; 70 L. J. Ch. 128; 83 L. T. 667.

7. Debentures—Contract to issue debentures—Charge—Execution creditor—Priority.—Where a company contracts for consideration to issue debentures charging its property, and before the debentures are actually issued goods intended to be thereby charged are seized in execution of a judgment recovered against the company, the execution creditor is only entitled to the goods subject to a charge in favour of the intended debenture-holders.—SIMULTANEOUS COLOUR PRINTING SYNDICATE v. FOWERAKER, Ch.D. Wright, J.; [1901] 1 K B 771; 70 L. J. K. B. 453.

8. Debentures—Floating security—Sale of assets to another company—Dissentient debenture-holders—Ultra vires.—Where a company sells its assets to another company, dissentient debenture-holders, having a floating security, are not entitled to insist on payment unless the sale is ultra vires, or the undertaking has ceased to be a going concern, or their debentures give them an express right to veto the transaction.—BORAX CO., RE, FOSTER v. BORAX CO., C.A., 212; [1901] 1 Ch. 326; 70 L. J. Ch. 162; 83 L. T. 638.

9. *Debenture—Unauthorized issue—*Bonâ fide holder for value—Rights as against execution creditor.—The right of a bonâ fide holder for value of a debenture, which is in proper form and charges all the property of the company as security for the debenture debt, prevail over those of an execution creditor, even where the debenture is issued without authority, no directors of the company having been appointed and no resolution to issue debentures passed; provided that the holder had no notice of any irregularity in the issue of the debenture.—DUCK v. TOWER GALVANIZING CO., K.B.D.; [1901] 2 K. B. 314; 70 L. J. K. B. 625; 84 L. T. 847.

10. Director—Fiduciary character—Contracts with company—Declaration of interest—Collateral profits.—The articles of association of a company provided that the rules as to vacating the office of director should be subject to the exception that "No director shall vacate his office by reason of his being a member of any company or partnership which has entered into contracts with, or done any work for, the company, or by reason of his being interested, either in his individual capacity or as a member of any company or partnership, in any adventure or undertaking in which the company may also have an interest."

Held, that, having regard to the above article, a director was not liable to account for profits arising out of contracts with another company or partnership in which he was a shareholder or partner.

Imperial Mercantile Credit Association v. Coleman, 18 W. R. 570, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 558, followed.

Decision of Byrne, J. (48 W. R. 553, [1900] 1 Ch. 756), affirmed.—COSTA RICA RAILWAY CO. v. FORWOOD, C.A., 337; [1901] 1 Ch. 746; 70 L. J. Ch. 385; 84 L. T. 279.

11. Director—Powers of reduced directorate.—Articles of association provided that four named persons should be the first directors of a company; that the number of directors should not be more than nine or less than three; that continuing directors might act notwithstanding any vacancy; and that the directors might fix a quorum.

Held, that, although the number of directors was reduced to two and no quorum had ever been fixed, the two directors had power to charge the property of the company.

In re Scottish Petroleum Co., 31 W. R. 846, 23 Ch. D. 413, followed.—BANK OF SYRIA, RE, OWEN AND ASHWORTH'S CLAIM, C.A., 100; [1901] 1 Ch. 115; 70 L. J. Ch. 82; 83 L. T. 547.

12. Directors' remuneration—Yearly payment—Apportionment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 35).—By the articles of association of a joint-stock company it was provided, inter alia, that "the directors shall be paid out of the funds of the company by way of remuneration for their services, and exclusive of their travelling expenses, the sum of £125 per annum per director, and such further sums as shall from time to time be determined by the company in general meeting, and the same shall be divided among them in such proportions and manner as the directors by agreement may determine, and in default of such determination, equally."

Held, that, according to the true construction of such article of association, no director is entitled to remuneration except for service for a whole year, and therefore any director who retires before the end of the year cannot claim a proportionate remuneration.

Salton v. New Beeston Cycle Co., 47 W. R. 462, [1899] 1 Ch. 775, approved.

Swabey v. Port Darwin Gold Mining Co., 1 Megone C. C. 385, distinguished.—INMAN v. ACKROYD, C.A., 369; [1901] 1 Q. B. 613; 70 L. J. K. B, 450; 84 L. T. 344.

13. Director—Remuneration fixed by articles of association—Resolution of board to forego—Vacating office of director by absence for specified period—Date from which period runs.—By the articles of association of a company each of its directors was to be paid out of its funds by way of remuneration £300 per annum, and the office of a director was to be vacated if he absented himself from directors' meetings during a period of three calendar months without special leave of absence from the directors. M. was appointed a director on the 3rd of August, 1898, and attended meetings of directors down to the 3rd of February, 1899, on which last-named date he attended a meeting at which they, including himself, passed a resolution "that no remuneration be received by the directors for their services until a dividend is declared on the ordinary shares of the bank." There was no further meeting from the 3rd of February to the 3rd of March, 1899. From the 3rd of February he absented himself without leave until after the 7th of May, 1899, on which another directors' meeting was held, and on the 8th of May, 1899, received a written notice from the board stating that he had ceased to be a director pursuant to the articles, and that the fact of his non-attendance for three months had been ordered to be entered on the minutes. M. did not insist on being reinstated and did not attend a meeting of directors on the 3rd of June. The company went into liquidation on the 29th of December, 1899, and no dividend was declared on the ordinary shares. M. claimed to prove for remuneration from the date of his appointment until the winding-up.

Held, (1) distinguishing Lambert v. Northern Railway of Buenos Ayres Co. (1869), 18 W. R. 180, that, the remuneration not being due until the end of a year, and the agreement to pay it being on the 3rd of February only partially performed and not broken, the resolution was effective; (2) that the period of absence only began to run from the 3rd of March, 1899, terminating on the 3rd of June; (3) that the remuneration was not apportionable, and that the claim of M. failed.

Observations as to when a director absents himself. —LONDON AND NORTHERN BANK, RE, MCCONNELL'S CLAIM, Ch.D. Wright, J.; [1901] 1 Ch 728; 70 L. J. Ch. 251; 84 L. T. 557.

14. Dividend—Profits available for dividend—Memorandum—Articles—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), Schedule I., Table A, art. 74.—The memorandum of association of a company declared that "the profits available for dividend" should be applicable in payment of a preferential dividend on ordinary shares, and in payment, as to two-thirds of the surplus, of a further dividend on the ordinary shares, and, as to the remaining third, of a dividend on founders' shares.

The articles of association provided for a payment of dividend out of profits in accordance with the memorandum. Table A. was adopted by the company, except so far as it was excluded or varied by the articles.

Held, that, under article 74 of Table A, which was neither expressly excluded by the articles nor excluded by implication, the directors had power to appropriate any sum they thought fit out of profits to the formation of a reserve fund, even though the effect of the appropriation was to prevent the holders of founders' shares receiving any dividend at all; and that the words "profits available for dividend" meant the profits available after all proper appropriations had been made by the directors.—FISHER v. BLACK AND WHITE PUBLISHING CO., C.A., 310; [1901] 1 Ch. 174; 70 L. J. Ch. 175; 84 L. T. 305.

15. Meeting — Extraordinary general meeting—Notice—Unauthorized notice—Ratification.—On the 10th of December, 1900, the secretary of a company sent out a notice convening an extraordinary general meeting to be held on the 18th of December. The notice purported to be issued by order of the board. A requisition had been served on the company in accordance with the articles requiring the calling of the meeting. In fact no meeting of directors was held after the receipt of the requisition, but a meeting of directors was held on the 16th of December, the day after the writ was issued, at which it was resolved that the directors should adopt, ratify, and confirm the action of the secretary in issuing the notice convening the meeting.

The only question for determination was whether the meeting had been validly summoned.

Held, that on ratification by the directors the notice became good for all purposes.—HOOPER v. KERR, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; 83 L. T. 729.

16. Meeting of shareholders—Power of chairman—Declaration as to passing of resolution—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89). s. 51.—At a meeting of a company duly convened to pass an extraordinary resolution to wind up voluntarily, the chairman declared the resolution carried on a show of hands; a poll was not demanded by five members.

On a petition by a holder of paid-up shares to have the company wound up compulsorily, the court refused to entertain the question whether the resolution was carried by the requisite majority.—HADLEIGH CASTLE GOLD MINES, RE. Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 419; 69 L. J. Ch. 631; 83 L. T 400.

17. Memorandum—Right to issue pre-preference shares—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 12.—Clause 5 of the memorandum of a limited company was as follows: "The capital of the company is £60,000, divided into 6,000 preference shares of £5 each and 6,000 ordinary shares of £5 each. Such preference shares shall confer a right to a fixed cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of £7 per centum per annum. Any shares of the present or any increased capital of the company may be guaranteed or have any special privilege or advantage, or may be deferred and may be issued on such special conditions as to priority or postponement, either for dividends or repayment of principal, or as to voting power, and generally on such terms as the company may from time to time determine."

Held, that the company had power to increase its capital by issuing preference shares having priority over the original preference shares.—UNDERWOOD v. LONDON MUSIC HALL. Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 507; [1901] 2 Ch. 309; 84 L. T. 759.

18. Memorandum — Verbal alteration — Memorandum of association—Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 62), s. 1, sub-section 5.—The Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890, does not authorize alterations in the memorandum which merely amplify the description of objects clearly comprised in the original memorandum of association.—CONSETT IRON CO., RE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 236; 70 L. J. Ch. 198; 84 L. T. 258.

19. Promoters—Secret profit—Duty as to extent of disclosure.—A syndicate of which S. was a director and member, was formed in February, 1895, to acquire and work a mine, and in the same month issued a prospectus showing that the directors were aware that similar properties were often resold "to the public" at a profit, and were "not unmindful of the benefit that" might "arise by converting the syndicate into a very much larger company within a short period."

In October, 1895, the directors promoted and brought out a company, with a larger share capital than that of the syndicate, to purchase the mine on the terms of an agreement, already entered into in the same month with a trustee for the company, which provided for the payment of a purchase-money much larger than what had been paid for and expended upon the mine by the syndicate. The same persons were the directors of both the syndicate and the company. In the same month the company issued a prospectus offering some of its shares for public subscription and stating the names of its directors, that they were directors of the syndicate selling to the company, and the date of, parties to, and consideration for the sale to the company. Inspection of the contract was also offered. The amount of profit on the resale to the company was not stated, and, subject as aforesaid, there was nothing in the prospectus to show that the sale was at a profit.

The court found as a fact that when the syndicate acquired the mine it had no present intention of reselling to or forming another company, but contemplated working it in the first instance.

In the winding up of the company it was sought to make S. liable on a misfeasance summons for the secret profit received by him as a promoter of the company.

Held, (1) that the syndicate and its directors were not promoters of the company when the syndicate acquired the property.

(2) That the disclosure in the prospectus of the company of the fact that the directors of the syndicate were directors of the company was a disclosure that some profit was being made.

(3) That S. and the other directors were guilty of a breach of duty in not disclosing what profit had been made on the resale to the company.

(4) That although the company might have had a right to rescind the contract, S. could not be ordered to repay the profit which he had derived from the resale to the company.

Gluckstein v. Barnes, [1900] A. C. 240, distinguished.—LADY FORREST (MURCHISON) GOLD MINE (LIMITED), RE, Ch.D. Wright, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 582; 70 L. J. Ch. 275; 84 L. T. 559.

20. Register of members—Inspection—Copies—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 32.—A person paying a shilling for inspection of the register of members of a company, under section 32 of the Companies Act, 1862, is not entitled, without any further payment, to take copies on his own account. His only right with regard to copies is to be furnished by the company with copies on payment of sixpence for every hundred words required to be copied.

Boord v. African Consolidated Land and Trading Co., 46 W. R. 150, 14 Times L. R. 116, overruled.—BALAGHAT GOLD MINING CO, RE, C.A., 625.

21. Shares—Calls—Liability of past member—Forfeited shares—Liquidation—Reduction of capital—Irregularity in resolutions—Certificate of registration—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss 38, 51—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131, ss. 11, 15, 16—The defendant was the holder of certain part-paid shares in the plaintiff company. The articles of association did not contain any power to reduce the capital of the company. The articles empowered the company to forfeit the shares of members who made default in paying calls, and provided that any member whose shares were so forfeited should nevertheless be liable to pay to the company all calls owing upon the shares at the time of the forfeiture. A resolution was passed to amend the articles by empowering the company to reduce its capital, and a further resolution was subsequently passed to reduce the capital. Each of these resolutions was confirmed, but in neither case did an interval of fourteen days elapse between the passing of the original resolution and the confirmation, as required by section 51 of the Companies Act, 1862. An order of the court giving effect to the resolutions was duly registered, and the registration was duly certified in accordance with section 15 of the Companies Act, 1867. A resolution was passed to call up the balance of the uncalled capital, and the defendant having made default in payment of the calls in respect of the shares of which he was the holder in consequence of the order of the court, his said shares became forfeited. More than a year after the forfeiture a resolution was passed to wind up the company. In an action for the calls, Held, first, that the defendant was not protected from liability by section 38 of the Companies Act, 1862; secondly, that any irregularity in the confirmation of the resolutions for amending the articles and reducing the capital was cured by the certificate of the registrar, by virtue of sections 15 and 16 of the Companies Act, 1867.—LADIES' DRESS ASSOCIATION v. PULBROOK, C.A., 6; [1900] 2 Q. B. 376; 69 L J. Q. B. 705.

22. Shares—Contract—Issue of fully-paid shares for consideration other than cash—Omission to file contract—Memorandum in lieu of contract—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25—Companies Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 26), s. 1 (4)—Companies Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 48), ss. 33, 36.—Shares of one company taken in exchange for shares of another company are not shares paid for in cash, and therefore an agreement to take such shares ought to have been filed under section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867.

Quære, whether section 25 has been wholly repealed by the Companies Act, 1900.—BRUTTON & BURNEY, RE, BURNEY'S NEW CROSS BREWERY, RE, C.A., 360; [1901] 1 Ch. 637; 70 L. J. Ch. 309; 84 L. T. 130.

23. Shares — Deposit—Equitable mortgage —Foreclosure.—Where a certificate of shares in a limited company was deposited as a security for the repayment of a debt owing to A.,

Held, that the deposit of the certificate amounted to an equitable mortgage, and that A. was entitled to a decree for foreclosure.—HARROLD v. PLENTY, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 646; [1901] 2 Ch. 314; 70 L. J. 562.

24. Shares—Surrender of shares—Invalidity—Sale and purchase transaction—Release of liability on shares—Rectification—Discretion of court—Lapse of time—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 35.—Action to determine whether a surrender of shares in the defendant company made to the company in 1893, was valid.

Held, that the surrender of the shares was a transaction of purchase and sale, and on that ground bad, according to what was laid down in Trevor v. Whitworth, [1887] 12 App. Cas. 409, the company having purchased the shares at the price of discharging the directors from the liability of £1 per share. The court could not, however, accede to the claim for rectification. Under section 35 of the Companies Act, 1862, the court will only exercise the power of rectification if satisfied of the justice of the case, and it lay on the applicants to satisfy the court that justice required that their application should be granted. In the present case more than seven years had elapsed since the surrenders, and nothing had happened in the meantime except that the company which had been embarrassed had become prosperous; and the plaintiffs, if placed on the register, would share in the fruits of prosperity which they had formerly renounced. They had not satisfied the court that there was an equity in their favour to disturb the existing state of things.—BELLERBY v. ROWLAND AND MARWOOD'S STEAMSHIP CO., Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1901] 2 Ch. 265; 70 L. J. Ch. 616; 84 L. T. 651.

25. Shares—Underwriting—Application of shares in payment of commission—Companies Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 48), s. 8.—A company agreed to grant the underwriters of an issue of shares proposed to be made to existing shareholders of the company an option to an agreed date to take 15,000 £1 shares, part of the proposed issue, at the price of £2 10s. per share. The shares in fact stood at a much higher price than £2 10s. per share.

Held, that the proposed arrangement was an application of shares in payment of commission in consideration of underwriting, and was prohibited by section 8 (2) of the Companies Act, 1900.

Decision of Farwell, J. (ante, p. 428), confirmed. —BURROWS v. MATABELE GOLD REEFS CO., C.A., 500; [1901] 2 Ch. 23; 70 L. J. Ch. 434; 84 L. T. 478.

26. Special resolution — Requisite majority — Declaration of chairman—Conclusive evidence—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 61.—The declaration of the chairman of a company meeting that a special resolution has been duly carried is conclusive, unless challenged by means of a poll demanded by five members; and, in the absence of any evidence of mala fides on the part of the chairman, the court will not receive evidence impeaching the declaration.

In re Gold Co., 27 W. R. 341, 11 Ch. D. 701, and In re Hadleigh Castle Gold Mines (Limited), [1900] 2 Ch. 419, followed.

In re Horbury Bridge Coal, &c., Co., 27 W. R. 438, 11 Ch. D. 109, distinguished.—ARNOT v. UNITED AFRICAN LANDS, C.A., 322; [1901] 1 Ch. 518; 70 L. J. Ch. 306; 84 L. T. 309.

27. Voting—Disqualification—Forfeiture of shares —Purchaser of forfeited shares disqualified from voting whilst calls remain due from original holder. —By the articles of association of a company it was provided that after the forfeiture of shares the directors of the company should be entitled to recover from the shareholder calls and other sums due in respect of the forfeited shares, and that no member should be entitled to vote whilst any calls or other sums should be due and payable to the company in respect of the shares of such member.

Shares were forfeited for non-payment of calls, and resold by the company to a purchaser, to whom a certificate was issued stating that he was to be deemed to be the holder of the shares discharged from all calls due.

Held, that the purchaser of the shares was not entitled to vote whilst any calls or other sums remained due and payable to the company from the original holder of the shares.—RANDT GOLD MINING CO. v. WAINWRIGHT, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 184; 70 L. J. Ch. 90; 84 L. T. 348.

28. Winding up—Assets — Distribution. — The articles of association of the A. Co. made no provision as to the distribution of its assets on winding up. The A. Co. made an agreement to sell its business and property to the C. Co. in part consideration of the transfer of certain of the C. Co.'s stock to the shareholders of the A. Co. There were two classes of the shareholders of the A. Co.—preferred and deferred. The A. Co. gave notice to its shareholders calling a meeting for the purpose of passing a resolution to carry out this agreement. Both the agreement and the resolution made no mention as to the distribution of this stock between the two classes of shareholders. With the notice calling the meeting, the secretary of the A. Co. sent out a circular saying that at the wish of the C. Co. the stock would be distributed between the preferred and deferred shareholders in certain proportions, and not pro rata. The resolutions were carried, but not unanimously, certain shareholders voting against them and some refraining from voting.

Held, that it was impossible to make an order affecting all the shareholders collectively; that an inference could not be drawn that all parties had agreed on a principle of distribution not in accordance with the legal rights of the two classes of shareholders in a winding up; and that the liquidator must distribute the stock in accordance with the legal rights of the shareholders.—NORTH-WEST ARGENTINE RAILWAY CO., RE, Ch.D. Wright, J., 134; [1900] 2 Ch. 882; 70 L. J. Ch. 9; 83 L. T. 675.

29. Winding up—Assets—Distribution—Previous loss of capital—Last year's profits—No dividend declared—Preferred and ordinary shareholders—Articles.—Where, on a limited company going into liquidation, there is standing to the credit of its revenue account a sum representing undivided net profits,

Held, that such sum, though it might have been made available for dividend to preference shareholders, in spite of a previously existing debit for loss of capital, was not to be applied as dividend if, prior to the liquidation, no dividend had been recommended by the directors or declared by the company in accordance with the articles.—CRICHTON'S OIL CO., RE, Ch.D. Wright, J., 556; [1901] 2 Ch. 184; 70 L. J. Ch. 639; 84 L. T. 864.

30. Winding up — Assets — Undistributed assets—Payment in to Companies' Liquidation Account—Inspector-General—Shareholder—Garnishee order—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63), s. 15.—In order to put into force the garnishee procedure the judgment creditor must show that there was a debt due from the garnishee to the judgment debtor.

Payment to the Companies' Liquidation Account by a liquidator of a sum due to a judgment debtor does not constitute the relation of debtor and creditor as between the Inspector-General and the judgment debtor, and therefore the garnishee procedure does not apply.—SPENCE v. COLEMAN, C.A., 516; [1901] 2 K. B. 199; 70 L. J. K. B. 632; 84 L. T. 703.

31. Winding up—Committee of inspection—Foreign creditor—Power of court to order fresh meetings of creditors and contributories—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c 89), s. 91—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63), ss. 6, 9, 23, 24.—If it is shown that there is reason to believe that the committee of inspection of a company in liquidation is not constituted in accordance with the wishes of the majority of the creditors, the court may order the liquidator to summon a fresh meeting of creditors in order to determine whether any alterations should be made in the constitution of the committee.—RADFORD & BRIGHT, RE, Ch.D. Wright, J., 270; [1901] 1 Ch. 272; 70 L. J. Ch. 78.

32. Winding up — Committee of inspection — Creditors unrepresented—Resummoning first meetings —Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 91—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63), ss. 6, 9.—In the winding up of a company by the court, the court has power to order the first meetings of the creditors and contributories to be resummoned, and it may limit the purposes of the meetings to the selection of persons to be appointed as members of the committee of inspection.

Where the creditor of a company for a large amount was unrepresented on the committee of inspection, and at a meeting of the creditors, summoned by the direction of the court, a resolution was passed that it was desirable that the creditor should be represented on the committee, but a majority of the creditors at the meeting expressed the opinion that it was undesirable that any member of the present committee should retire, the court directed the first meetings to be resummoned to determine whether a committee should be appointed and who should be the members of it.—RADFORD & BRIGHT (LIMITED) (No. 2), RE, Ch.D. Wright, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 735; 70 L. J. Ch. 352; 84 L. T. 151.

33. Winding up—Contract—Fully-paid shares—Omission to file contract—Costs—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25—Companies Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 26).—Where after a winding up has commenced relief has been granted to a shareholder under the Companies Act, 1898, the terms (if any) imposed as a consideration of obtaining relief are in the discretion of the court.

Where the payment of the liquidation costs is made a condition of obtaining relief, there is no general rule as to whether the costs ought to be as between solicitor and client, or party and party; but in determining this the court will take into consideration the assistance given to the liquidator by the applicant and the reasonableness of opposing the application.—FARMERS UNITED, RE, STEPHENSON'S CASE, Ch.D. Wright, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 442; 69 L. J. Ch. 684; 63 L. T. 406.

34. Winding up—Contributory—Action begun by company—Discontinuance by liquidator—Originating summons—Same cause of action—Costs of action—Stay of proceedings—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 101.—Where a company commenced an action against a shareholder for calls, but afterwards went into voluntary liquidation, and the liquidator discontinued the action, and then took out a summons against the shareholder for a balance order, the shareholder is not entitled to a stay of proceedings on the summons till his taxed costs of the discontinued action have been paid, but is entitled to set off these costs against any sum which the liquidator may recover against him under the summons.—UNITED SERVICE ASSOCIATION, RE, YOUNG, EX PARTE, Ch.D. Wright, J., 216; [1901] 1 Ch. 97; 70 L. J. Ch. 15; 84 L. T. 145.

35. Winding up — Contributory — Application for shares—Withdrawal before allotment.—By a reconstruction or amalgamation agreement the C. Co. and its liquidators agreed to transfer its goodwill and assets to the M. Co., part of the consideration for the transfer being that every member of the C. Co. should, in respect of each share therein held by him, "be entitled as of right to claim an allotment" of either a debenture bond, or two ordinary shares of £5 each in the M. Co. credited with £1 per share paid up, and the agreement provided that the M. Co. should, within a month from the date of the agreement, allot and issue the bonds and shares claimed, subject to this, that it should not be bound to allot shares to any one to whom under its articles it could have objected as a transferee of shares. The agreement further provided that a claim must be made within twenty-one days from the date thereof by sending in to the M. Co. or to the liquidators of the C. Co. a signed claim in writing, and that the liquidators should within seven days from that date give notice in writing to each member of the C. Co. stating the number of bonds or shares which he was entitled to claim as of right, with proper forms of claim. The liquidators duly gave notice to W., a shareholder in the C. Co., who within the twenty-one days signed a document, addressed to the directors of the M. Co., claiming an allotment of ten ordinary shares with £1 per share paid up, and agreeing to accept the same and to pay the further moneys payable thereon when called upon. Before any acceptance of the offer or the allotment of the shares subsequently made, W. wrote to the M. Co. withdrawing his application. In the subsequent winding-up of the M. Co. the liquidator of that company sought to have W. retained on the list of contributories in respect of the ten shares.

Held, that the document sent to W. was an application which could be withdrawn by him before acceptance, and not an acceptance of a prior offer by the M. Co., and that he was not liable as a contributory.—METROPOLITAN FIRE INSURANCE CO., RE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 671; 83 L. T. 403.

36. Winding up—Landlord and tenant—Restraining distress—Bill of exchange for rent—Debentures—Receiver—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 87, 138, 163.—H. granted a lease to X. which was purchased by a company, but no assignment of it was taken. The company, however, entered into occupation of the demised premises, and gave H. bills of exchange for rent overdue, which bills were dishonoured. After the dishonour the company passed an extraordinary resolution for voluntary winding-up, and then the landlord distrained for the rent on the company's chattels. These, however, were subject to a floating security contained in debentures covering all the company's assets, which were insufficient in value to satisfy the debenture debt. No receiver had been appointed. The liquidators having moved to restrain the landlord from proceeding with the distress, Held, (1) that, but for the existence of the debentures, and notwithstanding Ex parte Clemence, 23 Ch. D. 154 (which the court declined to follow), the landlord would have been restrained, as he had a right to prove in the winding up; but (2) that, as the assets were covered by the debentures and were insufficient to satisfy the debenture debt, the liquidator had no right to intervene, following on this point Ex parte Purssell, 34 Ch. D. 646, and that the non-appointment of a receiver made no difference.—HARPUR'S CYCLE FITTINGS CO., RE, Ch.D. Wright, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 731; 83 L. T. 407.

37. Winding up — Liquidator — Appointment — Court's power to appoint additional liquidator in voluntary winding-up—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 138, 141.—Sections 138 and 141 of the Companies Act, 1862, enable the court having jurisdiction to wind up companies to appoint a liquidator in a voluntary winding up, not only where there is no liquidator acting or in the place of a liquidator who is by the court removed from his office, but also in any other case where due cause is shown for appointing a liquidator—e.g., when an additional liquidator is required—and the appointment may be made on the application of the existing liquidator.—SUNLIGHT INCANDESCENT GAS LAMP CO., RE, Ch.D. Wright, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 728; 83 L. T. 406.

38. Winding up—Liquidator—Appointment of—Order by court for winding up—Jurisdiction of court to appoint permanent liquidator—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89) s. 92—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63), ss. 4, 6.—The court, on making an order for the compulsory winding up of a company, has no jurisdiction to appoint a permanent liquidator other than the official receiver for the district.

By section 4 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, the official receiver becomes, by virtue of his office, provisional liquidator; and, under section 6, he has to summon a meeting of the creditors of the company, and, until they have been thus consulted as to the appointment of the liquidator, the court has no power to appoint a permanent liquidator.—REID (JOHN), RE. Q.B.D., 15; [1900] 2 Q. B. 634; 69 L. J. Q. B. 736; 83 L. T. 196.

39. Winding up — Liquidator — Remuneration—Charges for letters.—A company which was being wound up under a compulsory winding-up order was liable for the costs and expenses of the voluntary winding up of other companies, the undertakings of which it had purchased.

In assessing the amount payable as remuneration to the voluntary liquidator, Held, (1) that the court would not sanction an alleged practice of accountants to charge for all letters written, irrespective of their character, as having taken half an hour of the principal's time (charged for at a certain rate) in the preparation; (2) that there was nothing to bind the court to apply the scale adopted by the Chancery judges and sanctioned by the Lord Chancellor in 1868, which only applied to official liquidators; and (3) that each case as to the remuneration of a voluntary liquidator must be considered with regard to its own particular circumstances. — AMALGAMATED SYNDICATES (LIMITED), RE, Ch.D. Wright, J.; [1901] 2 Ch. 181; 84 L. T. 864.

40. Winding up — Petition—Evidence—Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1900, rr. 36, 176, 177.—The statutory affidavit in support of a petition to wind up a company must be made by the petitioner, or one of the petitioners, and the power to make it cannot be delegated to a subordinate.—CHARTERED STORES AND TRADING CO., RE, Ch.D. Wright, J., 75; [1900] 2 Ch. 870; 69 L. J. Q. B. 861; 83 L. T. 674.

41. Winding up — Petition—Future debt—Debenture stock — Trust deed — Breach of covenant — Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 79, 80, 82.—A debenture-holder whose security is not presently redeemable, and the interest of which is not in arrear, cannot petition for the winding up of the company, as he is not yet a creditor.

In re Australian Joint Stock Bank, 41 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL 469, [1897] W. N., p. 48, distinguished.—MELBOURNE BREWERY, RE, Ch.D. Wright, J., 250; [1901] 1 Ch. 453; 70 L. J. Ch. 198; 84 L. T. 228.

42. Winding up—Reconstruction—Special resolution—Notice of—Invalidity.—Notice was given of an extraordinary meeting of shareholders in a company for the purpose of considering and, if thought fit, passing resolutions for a voluntary winding up with the appointment of a liquidator at a fixed remuneration for the purpose of reconstruction in accordance with the terms of a draft agreement. At the meeting the only resolution put was for voluntary winding up with the appointment of a liquidator.

Held, on the petition of a creditor for a compulsory winding up, that a compulsory winding up order must be made, as the resolution put to the meeting and passed was invalid, not being in accordance with the terms of the notice.—TEEDE & BISHOP, RE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; 70 L. J. Ch. 409; 84 L. T. 561.

43. Winding up—Requisition to directors—Notice of meeting by secretary without authority—Effect on validity of resolution to wind up voluntarily——Companies Act, 1900, s. 13, sub-sections 1, 3, 5.—Where a requisition under section 13 of the Companies Act, 1900, has been sent in to the directors calling upon them to summon a meeting of the company, the notice of the meeting, if given within the period of twenty-one days mentioned in the Act, can only be given by the authority of the directors at a meeting of the board, consequently a notice given within such period by the secretary of the company without the authority of the board of directors is invalid, and the proceedings of the meeting held in pursuance of such notice are of no effect.

Quære, whether the requisitionists could, after the expiration of the twenty-one days, call a meeting by notices signed by the secretary.—STATE OF WYOMING SYNDICATE, RE, Ch.D. Wright, J., 650; 84 L. T. 868.

44. Winding up—Secured creditor—Garnishee order—Judicature Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 77), s. 10—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 45 — Section 45 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, restricting the rights of creditors under attachment of debts is not made applicable by section 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875, to the winding up of insolvent companies, and therefore it is still the law, as recognized in In re Stanhope Silkstone Collieries Co, 11 Ch. D. 160, that a judgment creditor who has obtained a garnishee order nisi to attach a debt owing by a company to his debtor, and has served the order on the company before the commencement of its winding up, is a secured creditor and entitled to the debt as against the liquidator.—NATIONAL UNITED INVESTMENT CORPORATION, RE, Ch.D. Wright, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 950; 70 L. J. Ch. 461; 84 L. T. 766.

45. Winding up—Surety—Fraudulent preference—"Creditor"—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 164—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 48.—A surety being a person who can prove in respect of his contingent liability is a creditor within the meaning of section 48 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and consequently a transaction which, if between a company and one of its ordinary creditors, would, under section 164 of the Companies Act, 1862, and section 48 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, be void as a fraudulent preference, is also void for the same reason when between the company and its surety.—BLACKPOOL MOTOR CAR CO., RE, HAMILTON v. BLACKPOOL MOTOR CAR CO., Ch.D. Buckley, J., 124; [1901] 1 Ch. 77; 70 L. J. Ch. 61.

46. Winding up—Voluntary winding up—Shareholder's petition for compulsory order—Effect of voluntary winding up.—A petition for a compulsory winding-up order was presented by a fully-paid shareholder who was supported by a considerable number of the other shareholders. Resolutions for voluntary winding up had been passed with a view to a reconstruction, which had, however, proved abortive at the time of the hearing of the petition. There were also matters which appeared to require investigation.

Held, that a compulsory winding-up order must be made, and that, in arriving at that conclusion, the fact that the voluntary winding up was not an ordinary one, but was resolved upon with the view to a specific object which had failed, was a reason for strongly influencing the court. — GUTTA PERCHA CORPORATION, RE, Ch D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 665; 83 L. T. 401.

See also Bankruptcy, 10, 19; Building Society, 1; Mortgage, 2; Partnership, 4; Practice, 8, 25; Solicitor, 1.

CONFLICT of LAWS:—

1. Domicil—Personal property—Settlement—Power of appointment—Will.—On the marriage of an Englishwoman with a domiciled Frenchman, English personal property was settled in English form with English trustees on such trusts as the intended wife should by will appoint, and subject thereto for her separate use.

Held, that the settlement was governed by English law, and that, subject to the payment of separate debts of the wife, the settled property passed under the will of the wife notwithstanding limitations imposed by French law on testamentary disposition.—MEGRET, RE, TWEEDIE v. MAUNDER, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 547; 70 L. J. Ch. 451; 84 L. T. 192.

2. Marriage settlement. — A marriage was solemnized in Scotland in 1857 between B., a gentleman domiciled in Mauritius, and K., a domiciled Scotchwoman. Before the marriage a settlement was made in Scotch form of the money brought into settlement by the wife, and another settlement was made in English form of the property settled by the husband. Each settlement contained a provision that the law of Mauritius should not apply so far as it was or might be at variance or inconsistent with the provisions, clauses, and agreements contained in the settlements. In the English settlement there was a limitation on the death of the husband and remarriage of the wife to the persons who would have been entitled to the husband's estate if he had died without issue and unmarried under the English Statutes of Distribution. The husband, by the law of Scotland, had a testamentary power to revoke this limitation if that law applied.

Held, that the law of Scotland applied.—MUSPRATT-WILLIAMS v. HOWE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; 84 L. T. 191.

CONTEMPT:

1. Company—Winding up—Creditor's petition—Fraudulent circular—Resolution to wind up voluntarily—Attempt to mislead the court.—Where, after a creditor's petition for the compulsory winding up of a company has been presented, a circular is issued at the instigation of the directors by a shareholder asking for proxies to be used by him in order to obtain an investigation into the conduct of the directors, and such proxies are intended to be, and are in fact, used in support of the directors and a resolution for voluntary winding up, those responsible for the circular and such action are guilty of a contempt of court, in that they have attempted to mislead the court by representing that a voluntary winding up is already in existence, with the view of inducing the court not to make an order for compulsory winding up.—PARSONAGE, RE, Ch.D. Wright, J., 700; 84 L. T. 866.

2. Company—Winding up—Liquidator—Application to remove circularizing shareholders.—In a voluntary winding up a shareholder took out a summons on behalf of himself and the other shareholders of the company asking for the removal of the voluntary liquidator from office, and in support filed an affidavit stating what he alleged to be the facts justifying the application. Before the summons came on for hearing he issued a circular to the other shareholders, in substance repeating what he had stated in the affidavit, and asking the shareholders to support his application. The liquidator then served notice of motion for an injunction to restrain the issuing of the circular or any other like document on the ground that it was a contempt of court.

Held, that the circular could not in any way interfere with or prejudice the due trial of the matter, and was not a contempt of court, and that the liquidator's application must be dismissed.

Semble, that Coats v. Chadwick, [1894] 1 Ch. 347, so far as it decided that the plaintiff had been guilty of contempt, and In re Crown Bank, [1890] 44 Ch. D. 649, were not rightly decided.—NEW GOLD COAST EXPLORATION CO., RE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 860; 70 L. J. Ch. 355.

CONTRACT:—

1. Assignment—Chose in action.—A., who was the owner of a patent for the construction of a machine, supplied and erected a machine for the respondent. Afterwards he assigned the patent to the appellant company "together with the benefit of all contracts and concessions." The company, with the consent of A., sued the respondent for the price of the machine supplied to him.

Held, that the action was not maintainable.—INTERNATIONAL FIBRE SYNDICATE v. DAWSON, H.L.; 84 L. T. 803.

2. Breach—Remedy—Conduct determining contract—Damages.—To enable one of two parties to a contract to treat the contract as at an end there must either be an express repudiation of the contract by the other party thereto or such a failure of performance going to the root of the contract as to justify the conclusion that the other party no longer intends to be bound by the contract.

Where the main part of a contract has been performed and little remains to be done under it, failure to perform that little does not justify the other party to the contract in treating it as at an end, but the proper remedy is in damages.—RHYMNEY RAILWAY CO. v. BRECON, &c., RAILWAY CO, C.A., 116; 83 L. T. 111.

3. Building contract — Architect — Certificate — Liability for negligence in making certificate—Position of arbitrator—Duty to exercise impartial judgment.—A building contract provided that the builder should be paid on the certificates of the architect who was employed by the building owner to superintend the work and measure it up when completed, and that the final certificate should be conclusive evidence that the builder was entitled to receive payment of the final balance. The contract contained a clause providing that, in case any dispute under the contract should arise between the building owner, or the architect on his behalf, and the builder, such dispute should be referred to the arbitration of a person other than the architect.

Held, by A. L. Smith, M.R., and Collins, L.J. (Romer, L.J., dissenting), that the architect occupied the position of an arbitrator in making certificates, and therefore that the building owner could not maintain an action against the architect for negligence in making his final certificate.—CHAMBERS v. GOLDTHORPE; RESTELL v. NYE, C.A., 401; [1901] 1 Q. B. 624; 70 L. J. K. B. 482; 84 L. T. 444.

4. Conditional promise to consider a proposal favourably—Construction—Appeal from Canada.—Held, reversing the judgment of the courts below, that a written promise by the appellants that if satisfied with the respondent as a customer they would favourably consider any application by him to renew a subsisting contract between them on its expiration does not impose a legal obligation to grant it.—MONTREAL GAS CO. v. VASEY, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 595; 69 L. J. P. C. 134; 83 L. T. 233.

5 Contract to erect houses—Breach—Specific performance.—The defendant covenanted to erect certain houses on a piece of land sold to him for that purpose by the mayor and corporation of W., who sought to have houses erected on this site in order to increase the rateable value of that part of the town.

In an action to enforce specific performance of the covenant to build, with an alternative claim for damages for the non-performance of the covenant, the special jury assessed the damages at £50; and the learned judge entered judgment for the plaintiffs for specific performance.

Held, that, this being a case in which the loss arising to the plaintiffs from the land remaining vacant could not be estimated in damages, specific performance of the covenant to build had rightly been granted.

Per Romer, L.J.—As a general rule the court will not grant specific performance of a building contract; but there is an exception to that rule where it is established (1) that the building work to be done is defined; (2) the plaintiff has a substantial interest in having the contract specifically performed which cannot be adequately compensated by damages; and (3) the defendant has, by reason of the contract, obtained possession of the land on which the building is to be erected.—WOLVERHAMPTON (MAYOR) v. EMMONS, C.A., 553; [1901] 1 K. B. 515; 70 L. J. K. B. 429; 84 L. T. 407.

6. Contract to make and deliver chattel by certain date—Buyer to provide ship to receive—Concurrent obligations—Delay in making chattel—Obligation of buyer to provide ship.—The plaintiffs agreed to construct and deliver, f. o. b. at the port of London, for the defendants a steam launch by a fixed date. The launch was not in fact ready to be delivered until three months after the agreed date, but the defendants did not during that time notify to the plaintiffs that there was any vessel at the port of London on board of which they required the launch to be delivered.

Held (affirming the judgment of Bucknill, J.), that, as the defendants were not ready and willing to take delivery before the plaintiffs were ready and willing to deliver, the defendants were not entitled to deduct from the price the agreed damages for delay in delivery.—FORREST v. ARAMAYO, C.A.; 83 L. T. 335.

7. Illegality—City of London Corporation—Interest of member—City of London Sewers Act, 1848, s. 42 —City of London Sewers Act, 1851, ss. 53, 57.—The fact that a commissioner of sewers or an alderman or common councilman of the City of London is interested or concerned in a contract made by the Commissioners of Sewers with a company, by reason of his being a shareholder in such company, is sufficient to render the contract null and void.—CITY OF LONDON ELECTRIC LIGHTING CO. v. CITY OF LONDON CORPORATION, C.A., 306; [1901] 1 Ch. 602; 70 L. J. Ch. 334; 84 L. T. 170.

8. Illegality—Statutory confirmation—Vendor and purchaser—Agreement to give "first refusal" of land —Purchaser with notice—Injunction.—Where an agreement is confirmed by Act of Parliament, the effect is to give it statutory validity, so that no question as to remoteness or uncertainty can arise.

Where a contract so confirmed stipulates that B. shall have the first refusal of A.'s land, A. cannot sell the land without first informing B. of the actual cash price offered by an intending purchaser, and offering it to B. at that price.

Such a stipulation does not create an interest in the land, but it involves a negative contract not to part with the land to any other person without giving that first refusal, and can be enforced, not only against the vendor, but against an intending purchaser with notice.

Decision of Farwell, J., ([1900] 2 Ch. 352), affirmed.—MANCHESTER SHIP CANAL CO. v. MANCHESTER RACECOURSE CO., C.A., 418; [1901] 2 Ch. 37; 70 L. J. Ch. 468; 84 L. T. 436.

9. Implied negative stipulation—Injunction—Undue preference—Electric Lighting Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 59), ss. 19, 20.—Where a contract, although affirmative in form, is negative in substance, the court will, notwithstanding the absence of a negative stipulation, imply one, and grant an injunction accordingly, upon the principle of Lumley v. Wagner, 1 De G. M. & G. 604.

A customer of an electric lighting company agreed "to take the whole of the electric energy required for the premises" for five years. He did not bind himself to take any quantity at all. There was no express negative stipulation.

Held, that the court would imply a negative stipulation, and grant an injunction against his taking electric energy from anyone else.

An electric lighting company were empowered under their provisional orders (duly confirmed) to supply a district with electric energy. They agreed to supply a customer for five years at 4½d. a unit upon his taking the whole of his supply from them. They were supplying another customer for two years at 4d., but he was a large consumer, and took his supply in the daytime, which was an advantage to the company.

Held, that the supply to this customer was not an undue preference, and that, consequently, the contract with the first-named consumer was not wanting in consideration.

Held, also, that the contract was authorized by sections 19 and 20 of the Electric Lighting Act, 1882, and the provisional orders of the company.—METROPOLITAN ELECTRIC SUPPLY CO. v. GINDER, Ch. D. Byrne, J., 508; 84 L. T. 818.

10. Infant—Illegitimate child—Contract to relieve mother for ever of liability—Validity.—By a contract made between the plaintiff and the defendants, in consideration that the plaintiff, who was the mother of an illegitimate child, would place and allow the child to remain in the defendants' possession, the defendants promised to maintain and bring up the child as though she were the defendants' child, and for ever to relieve the plaintiff from all liability and responsibility in connection with the bringing up of the child. The child was placed in the defendants' possession and maintained by them for some months, when they refused to maintain her any longer. In an action by the plaintiff to recover damages for breach of contract,

Held, that the contract was one which the law would not enforce.—HUMPHRYS v. POLLAK, C.A., 612; [1901] 2 K. B. 385; 70 L. J. K. B. 752.

11. Interest — Tradesman's account — Notification that interest would be charged—Implied agreement by customer to pay interest.—During a period of ten years a tradesman had delivered to a customer, since deceased, a yearly account in which it was stated that interest would be charged on all sums due for more than three years. The customer never objected to the charge, and had from time to time made payments on account generally.

Held, that there was an implied agreement to pay interest.—ANGLESEY (MARQUIS), RE, WILLMOT v. GARDNER, C.A., 708.

12. "Liquidated damages"—Word "penalty" used in contract—Amount recoverable.—By a contract for electric lighting installation it was provided that the work should be "completed in all respects on or before the 26th of November, 1898, subject to a penalty of £15 per day, and the plant by the 10th of December, subject to a penalty of £3 per day for every day the work remains unfinished to the satisfaction of the authorities or engineers."

Held, that, although the word "penalties" was used, the amounts incurred owing to the default of the contractor were in fact "liquidated damages." —WHITE v. ARTHUR, K.B.D.; 84 L. T. 594.

13. Personal contract—Agreement with a partnership—Death of one member of partnership—Liability of surviving partners—"Unforeseen calamity"—Sale under power in mortgage.—The plaintiffs, music-hall artistes, entered into a contract with the A. Co., which was then a partnership of three persons, to perform on two separate occasions at their hall. The plaintiffs had no knowledge of the fact that the A. Co. was a partnership consisting of three persons. The contract contained a clause that, in the event of any "unforeseen calamity" by which the business might be stopped, all engagements were to terminate. Before the time fixed for the first performance one of the partners in the firm died, but the plaintiffs performed in accordance with their contract, and were paid by the defendants for their services. After the first performance, and before the time fixed for the second performance, the hall was sold by a mortgagee under a power of sale in the mortgage, and the second performance was not carried out.

Held, that, the contract being one which had no reference to the personal character and conduct of the partner who had died, the surviving partners were liable for a breach of it, and that the sale of the hall under the power of sale was not an "unforeseen calamity" within the contract, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover.—PHILLIPS v. ALHAMBRA PALACE CO., Q.B.D., 223; [1901] 1 Q. B. 59; 70 L. J. Q. B. 26; 83 L. T. 431.

14. Principal and agent—Undisclosed principal—Ratification.—A contract made by a person intending to contract on behalf of a third party, but without his authority, cannot be ratified by the third party so as to render him able to sue or liable to be sued on the contract, where the person who made the contract did not profess at the time of making it to be acting on behalf of a principal.

The decision of the Court of Appeal, [1900] 1 Q. B. 629, reversed.—KEIGHLEY v. DURANT, H.L.; [1901] A. C. 240; 70 L. J. K. B. 662; 84 L. T. 777.

15. Principal and agent—Vendor and purchaser agreement—Construction of contract—Appeal from Canada—Quebec.—In an action by the appellant for a declaration that he was entitled as purchaser to a conveyance from the respondent of the property in suit,

Held, on consideration of all its terms and of the surrounding circumstances, that the agreement sued upon was not a vendor and purchaser agreement, but an agency agreement; that the appellant never came under any personal liability, present or future, to purchase, the arrangement contemplated being on behalf of third parties who might thereafter be accepted by the respondent.—LIVINGSTONE v. ROSS, P.C.; [1901] A. C. 327.

16. Restraint of trade—Contract not to retail goods supplied by the plaintiff below a fixed price.—A contract entered into with a manufacturer not to retail his goods below a fixed price is not a contract in restraint of trade.—ELLIMAN v. CARRINGTON, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 532; [1901] 2 Ch. 275; 70 L. J. Ch. 577; 84 L. T. 858.

See also Company, 6, 7, 10, 22, 33; Election Law, 2; Frauds Statutes, 1; Infant, 2; Married Woman, 11; Master and Servant, 1.

CONVEYANCING ACTS.—See Bankruptcy, 14; Easement, 1, 7; Landlord and Tenant, 11; Married Woman, 8; Mortgage, 6, 9, 10; Power 1; Trustee, 1.

COPYHOLD:—

1. Special custom—Only one joint tenant admitted —Admittance of one not admittance of all—Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 3.—A special custom of a manor by which one only of several joint tenants of copyholds can be admitted and only one fine is payable on such admittance is a special circumstance which excludes the general rule that the admittance of one joint tenant operates as the admittance of all; and, in case of a devise to joint tenants, such custom is not bad as restraining the power given to testators, by section 3 of the Wills Act, to devise their copyholds without stint.—HOWARD v. GWYNN, K.B.D.; 84 L. T. 505.

2. Waste of manor—Custom to kill rabbits—Right of copyholders—Reasonableness—Lease by lord for training horses—Liability for damage to commoner's rights.—A custom or customary bye-law, whereby the commoners of a manor might take or destroy rabbits or game on the waste, is not necessarily void for unreasonableness.

Semble, that a custom for any person, not merely any copyholder, to kill rabbits on a manor without molestation would be on the face of it unreasonable.

The lord of the manor by deed leased the right to train and gallop horses on the waste of the manor.

Held, that the lord would not be liable for damage done to the rights of common of pasturage of the copyholders by the lessee, unless it was proved that the lessee caused the damage as the lord's agent or with his licence.

Semble, a licence to train and gallop horses does not of necessity involve injury to the right of pasturage.—COOTE v. FORD, Q.B.D.; 83 L. T. 482.

COPYRIGHT:—

1. Infringement—Portions of one book printed by different printers — "Cause to be printed" — Sanctioning publication—Partnership—5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 15.—A. agreed with B., in consideration of receiving a percentage of profits, to allow B. the use of A.'s name in the publication of a book containing shipping information. The whole was to be printed by A.'s workmen. The title-page, containing the statement "Printed by A.," and the first eighty-one pages of the book and certain advertisements, were printed by A., but at B.'s request the remainder of the book was subsequently printed elsewhere. The portion printed elsewhere contained matter pirated from the plaintiffs' copyright. The book was published and sold by B. A. was ignorant of the piracy till notified of the same by the plaintiffs.

Held, that there was no partnership between A. and B., and that A. had not caused the printing of the pirated portion of the book within the meaning of the statute; but, that, inasmuch as A. had not altered the statement "Printed by A." to suit the facts, A. was not entitled to costs.—KELLY'S DIRECTORIES v. GAVIN, Ch.D Byrne, J., 313; [1901] 1 Ch. 374; 70 L. J. Ch. 237; 84 L. T. 581.

2. Penalties — Number of offences — "Sum not exceeding £10"—Minimum sum—25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, s. 6.—The copyright in certain pictures was infringed by the distribution of over a million copies. Upon a summons to fix the amount of the penalties payable under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, s. 6, which fixes the penalty for each offence at a "sum not exceeding £10."

Held, that each copy constituted a separate offence, but that the court was not bound to fix a penalty for each offence but could give an aggregate sum for all, even though that sum if divided by the number of offences would give for each offence a fraction of a farthing.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (48 W. R. 682), reversed.—HILDESHEIMER v. FAULKNER, C.A., 708.

3. Report of speech—"Author"—Newspaper—Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), ss. 2, 3, 16, 18.—Under the Copyright Act, 1842, the reporter of a public speech has copyright in his report, for he is "author" of such within the meaning of the Act.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (48 W. R. 218, [1899] 2 Ch. 749) (Lord Robertson dissenting) reversed.—WALTER v. LANE, H.L., 95; [1900] A. C. 539; 69 L. J. Ch. 699; 83 L. T. 289.

4. School edition of Shakespeare—Colourable imitation—Common sources of knowledge—Injunction, when granted.—An author dealing with a subject already treated by another is at liberty (1) to use all common sources of information, (2) to use the work of that other as a guide to those common sources, and (3) to use that other's work to test the completeness of his own.

Where there has been no extensive copying, and no extraction of the vital part of the plaintiff's work, the court will not grant an injunction.

Jarrold v. Houlston, 3 K. & J. 708, 6 W. R. Ch. Dig. 19, and Pike v. Nicholas, 18 W. R. 321, L. R. 5 Ch. App. 251, considered.—MOFFATT v. GILL, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 438; 84 L. T. 452.

CORPORATION:—

Corporation sole—Endowment—Rector—Wrongful investment—Statute 13 Eliz. c. 10.—In pursuance of the private Act 31 Geo. 2, c. 2, a sum of money was vested in the rector of a parish as corporation sole. In 1881 a rector of the parish invested part of the money in the purchase of land, which was conveyed to him, "his heirs and assigns," with a declaration in bar of dower. The deed was not enrolled in Chancery, and there was only one attesting witness, and no licence in mortmain was obtained. Part of the property thus conveyed was sold by the rector, and the rest, on resigning the living, he conveyed as beneficial owner by deed to H. (his successor) in fee simple in consideration of five shillings as purchase-money. Shortly afterwards H. sold the property by auction, and defendant B. was the purchaser.

Held, that though personal property cannot usually be vested in a corporation sole, the statute 31 Geo. 2, c. 2, made this case an exception, and therefore that the rector as corporation sole could receive and give a good discharge for the money vested in him.

Held, that, on the sale by H. to B., as the purchase-money was received by H., it came into the proper hands, and that the defendant B. was not answerable.—POWER v. BANKS, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 679.

See also Election Law, 1, 2; Justices, 2.

COSTS—See Arbitration, 3; Bankruptcy, 20-25; Company, 34; Divorce, 7-10; Lands Clauses Acts, 3, 7; Married Woman, 3, 12; Mortgage, 2; Practice, 5-17, 20, 24; Solicitor, 1-4; Vendor and Purchaser, 5.

COUNTY COURT:—

1. Admiralty—Jurisdiction of county court and Trimming Board Committee—Coal Trimmers' Union.—Where a committee of a Coal Trimmers' Union held that a certain vessel was, according to their bye-laws, a "self-trimmer," the effect of which was to bind her to a certain tariff rate of the board's,

Held, by the county court (and affirmed by the Divisional Court), that the question was one of law, and was within the jurisdiction of the county court and not of the Trimmers' Union.—"SWINDON," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 634.

2. Appeal — Costs — Security.—The High Court will order security for costs to be given of an appeal from a county court where it appears that the appellant has disposed of his goods for the purpose of avoiding payment of the respondent's costs.—MOORE v. PINWICK, K.B.D.; 70 L. J. K. B. 471.

3. Jurisdiction—Foreclosure action in county court—Amount originally advanced over £500—Amount actually due when action brought under £500—Transfer to Chancery Division of High Court—Retransfer to county court—County Court Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), ss. 67 (3), 68.—On a motion for an order retransferring to the county court of Durham an action commenced in that court for payment of the amount due on a mortgage of freehold property and in default foreclosure and possession of the property, it appeared that, although the mortgage debt of £575 had by various payments been reduced to £461 before action brought, the county court judge was of opinion that, as the amount of the advance had exceeded £500 the matter was beyond the jurisdiction of the county court, and ordered the action to be transferred to the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice.

Held, that by virtue of section 67 (3) and section 68 of the County Courts Act, 1888, the action might be re-transferred to the county court of Durham.—SHIELDS, &c., BUILDING SOCIETY v. RICHARDS, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; 84 L. T. 587.

4. Practice—Costs—Taxation—Ship—Admiralty—Payment into court—Acceptance—Amount less than £2.—In an admiralty action in a county court where money is paid into court unconditionally by the defendant, and accepted by the plaintiff in satisfaction, the plaintiff is entitled to his costs under ord. 39*b*, r. 50*a*, of the County Court Rules, and to have them taxed under column B of the County Court Scale, under rule 80 of the same order, unless the county court judge otherwise orders, even where the amount so recovered is less than £2.—"SKUDENARES," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 70 L. J. P. 64.

5. Practice—Garnishee summons—Attachment of debt — Attachment of part of a debt — Balance in hands of garnishee — County Court Rules, ord. 26a, r. 3; Form 156a.—A garnishee summons issued by a county court attaches the whole of the moneys owing or accruing due from the garnishee to the judgment debtor, and an assignment by the judgment debtor of the balance of such moneys over and above the amount of the judgment debt is therefore invalid.

Rogers v. Whiteley, [1892] A. C. 118, followed.—YATES v. TERRY, Q.B.D, 112; [1901] 1 Q. B. 102; 70 L. J. Q. B. 24; 83 L. T. 415.

6. Practice—Judgment summons—Judgment debtor outside the district of the county court—Leave to issue judgment summons—Affidavit—County Court Rules, 1889, ord. 25, r. 14a; Appendix, Form 52a.—Where a judgment debtor does not dwell or carry on business, and is not employed, within the district of the county court in which the judgment was obtained, the affidavit, on the application under ord. 25, r. 14a, of the County Court Rules, 1889, for leave to issue a judgment summons against the debtor, must contain all the material averments set out in Form 52a in the appendix to the rules.

Therefore, where the affidavit only stated that the debtor lived in a certain house, apparently of the yearly value of £60, and that he carried on the business of a builder, and did not state any facts showing that the business was profitable or that he had other means to pay a substantial part of the debt, and did not say whether he was married, and, if so, whether he had any children,

Held, that the affidavit did not comply with the requirements of the form, and that the county court judge had no jurisdiction to give leave to issue the judgment summons.—MCINTOSH v. SIMPKINS, C.A., 241; [1901] 1 Q. B. 487; 70 L. J. Q. B. 268; 84 L. T. 21.

7. Practice—Jurisdiction to remit action—Claim on writ for over £100—Abandonment of excess—Jurisdiction of county court judge to proceed with trial—Prohibition—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 65.—In an action commenced in the High Court in which the claim is for more than £100, but which claim is reduced to £100 by abandonment of the excess over £100 after action brought, there is no jurisdiction under section 65 of the County Courts Act, 1888, to remit the action for trial in the county court except by consent of the parties.

Where, however, the plaintiff has reduced the claim to £100 by abandonment of the excess and the master at chambers has made an order remitting the action, and the defendant has failed to appeal against such order, the county court judge has jurisdiction to try the action though the order should not have been made, and the High Court under such circumstances will not subsequently grant a prohibition.—DIERKEN v. PHILPOT, K.B.D., 703; [1901] 2 K. B. 380; 70 L. J. K. B. 675.

8. Practice—New trial, application for—Jurisdiction—Power to enter judgment—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 93.—A county court judge has no jurisdiction, on an application for a new trial of an action tried in the county court, to enter judgment for the applicant.—ROBINSON v. FAWCETT & FIRTH, K.B.D.; [1901] 2 K. B. 325; 70 L. J. K. B. 639; 84 L. T. 629.

9. Practice—Notice of statutory defence—Gaming Act, 1892 (55 Vict. c. 9), s. 1—County Court Rules, 1899, ord. 10, rr. 10, 18a.—The Gaming Act, 1892, created a statutory defence, of which it is necessary for the defendant to give notice under the County Court Rules, 1889, ord. 10, r. 18a.—WILLIS v. LOVICK, K.B.D., 540; [1901] 2 K. B. 195; 70 L. J. K. B. 656; 84 L. T. 713.

10. Practice — Prohibition — Judgment debtor outside district—Affidavit on application for judgment summons—Waiver—County Court Rules, 1889, ord. 25a, r. 14, App. Form 52a.—The requirements of ord. 25, r. 14a, of the County Court Rules, 1889, as to the form of an affidavit on an application for leave to issue a judgment summons against a debtor who does not dwell or carry on business and is not employed within the district of the court in which the judgment was obtained, cannot be waived by the debtor.—ALDERTON v. PALLISER, C.A., 706.

11. Prohibition — Jurisdiction — Commitment — Judgment against firm in High Court of Justice—Judgment summons against alleged partner in county court—County Court Rules, ord. 25, rr. 14b, 17—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 5.—The affidavit which the plaintiff is required to file under ord. 25, r. 14b, of the County Court Rules must set out the sources of information and grounds of belief on which the plaintiff alleges the defendant is a partner in the firm against which he has recovered judgment, or there is no jurisdiction in the county court judge to try the case.

Where a plaintiff has recovered judgment against a firm in the High Court, he can enforce such judgment against a partner by a judgment summons in the county court, and on the trial of such judgment summons the county court judge, if satisfied that the defendant is a partner in the firm, and that he has had means since the date of the judgment against the firm, may forthwith commit the defendant to prison.—LUMLEY v. OSBORNE, K.B.D., 374; [1901] 1 Q. B. 532; 70 L. J. K. B. 416; 84 L. T. 461.

12. Prohibition—Telephone company—Delegation of powers by Postmaster-General—Consent from local authority — Arbitration — Jurisdiction — Telegraph Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 112—Telegraph Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 112)—Telegraph Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 76)—Telegraph Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c 59).—Under the Telegraph Acts the Postmaster-General delegated certain powers to the National Telephone Co. The company thereupon entered into an agreement with the mayor, &c., of Tunbridge Wells for the exercise of certain powers within their district.

By that agreement, with the exception of certain work mentioned in the schedule, it was provided that the company should not exercise any of the powers conferred on the Postmaster-General by the Telegraph Acts, 1863 and 1878, in respect of which the consent of the corporation was required without obtaining a further consent in writing from the corporation.

It was further provided that if any dispute or difference arose concerning the premises or the rights and liabilities of the parties, such dispute or difference should be referred to arbitration.

Upon the corporation refusing their consent to some further works beyond those mentioned in the schedule, the National Telephone Co. applied to the county court judge as arbitrator under sections 3 and 4 of the Telegraph Act, 1878.

Held, that the county court judge had no jurisdiction, as the company, being only the delegates of powers from the Postmaster-General, could not proceed under sections 3 and 4 of the Telegraph Act, 1878, but only under the arbitration clause in their agreement. Prohibition therefore granted. —TUNBRIDGE WELLS (MAYOR) v. NATIONAL TELEPHONE CO., Q.B.D.; 83 L. T. 525.

See also Married Woman, 3; Practice, 6, 10.

CRIMINAL LAW:—

1. Evidence—Admissibility—Course of conduct—Acquittal on previous indictment—Admission of evidence given on previous trial.—A person was charged with obtaining money by falsely pretending that certain cheques drawn by him would be honoured. He was indicted on two separate indictments in respect of separate transactions of this kind, all occurring within the space of a fortnight. He was acquitted on the first indictment, and was afterwards tried on the second indictment. Evidence which had been given on the trial of the first indictment was given again on the trial of the second indictment, such evidence being relevant on both indictments.

Held, by Lord Russell of Killowen, L.C.J., and Mathew, Grantham, Wright, Darling, and Channell, JJ. (Bruce and Ridley, JJ., dissenting), that the evidence was admissible on the second trial.—REG. v. OLLIS, C.C.R., 76; [1900] 2 Q. B. 758; 69 L. J. Q. B. 918; 83 L. T. 251.

2. False pretences—Friendly society—Member in arrears with subscription — Arrears paid up by prisoner—He places member's name on sick list—Applies sick pay to satisfy debt—Person to whom false pretence made.—It was the duty of the prisoner, who was an officer of a society, to return the names of members entitled to sick pay. The prisoner wrongfully entered on the list a member's name, which he gave to the secretary, and in due course received an order from the treasurer to pay the member the sum named. When the prisoner received the money he applied it in payment of a debt due from the member to himself. Upon an indictment charging the prisoner with obtaining the money from the treasurer by falsely pretending to him that the member was entitled to sick pay,

Held, dismissing the appeal, that there was evidence upon which the jury might find that the false pretence was made by the prisoner to the treasurer.—REX v. TAYLOR, C.C.R., 671.

3. Larceny—Advertising reward for return of stolen property—No questions to be asked—"Any property whatsoever"—Dog—Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 102.—Section 102 of the Larceny Act, 1861, which makes it an offence to publish an advertisement offering a reward for the return of stolen property and stating that no questions will be asked, applies to the case of a stolen dog.—MIRAMS v. OUR DOGS PUBLISHING CO., C.A., 626.

4. Larceny—Fraudulent appropriation by agent—Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 75.—The prisoner, a conjuror and thought-reader, received from the prosecutrix a cheque for the specific purpose of paying a deposit upon an application on behalf of the prosecutrix for shares in a certain railway company, the cheque to be returned to the prosecutrix in the event of the shares not being obtainable. The prisoner made no application for the shares, but cashed the cheque and misappropriated the proceeds.

Held, that the words "or other agent" in section 75 applied only to persons whose occupation was similar to those enumerated in the section, and did not include any ordinary agent who might from time to time be intrusted with chattels or valuable securities, and that the facts disclosed no offence within the meaning of the section.

Reg. v. Portugal, 16 Q. B. D. 487, approved and followed.—REG. v. KANE, C.C.R.; [1901] 1 Q. B. 472; 70 L. J. Q. B. 143; 84 L. T. 240.

5. Obtaining goods by false pretences—Parting with possession—Goods loaded on prisoner's van before false pretence—Cheque for balance dishonoured.—The prisoner agreed to purchase a quantity of old iron from the prosecutor, and paid a deposit of ten shillings. The next day he came with a cart and man to fetch the iron away, and said, "I will pay you the remainder of the money when I have loaded the iron." The iron having been placed in the the cart, the prisoner returned to prosecutor's house and gave him a cheque for the balance, which was subsequently dishonoured.

Held, that there was evidence upon which the jury might find that the goods were obtained by false pretence, as the prosecutor did not intend to part with the goods until after he had received the cheque.—REX v. COSNETT, C.C.R., 633; 84 L. T. 800.

6. Practice—Sentence of hard labour—Common law forgery—"Any cheat or fraud punishable at common law"—Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100), s. 29.—H. was tried and convicted for the common law misdemeanour of forging and uttering writing with intent to defraud. An order had been made in a county court that he should render an account of the money he had collected and received from one Cobb, which he had fraudulently misappropriated. He delivered papers in which the donors had entered their names and the amounts they had handed him, and he so altered these entries as to make it appear that smaller amounts had been given.

It was not alleged that Cobb had been defrauded or prejudiced, except so far as it appeared that he had been deprived by the prisoner's conduct of the evidence to support his claim. The question reserved was whether there was power to pass a sentence of imprisonment with hard labour.

The Court (Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Mathew, Lawrance, Bruce, and Ridley, JJ.) held that, as the indictment charged only a common law forgery, without alleging that anyone was thereby defrauded, the case did not come within the Criminal Procedure Act, 1851, s. 29, by which persons convicted of "any cheat or fraud punishable at common law" may be sentenced to hard labour.—REX v. HAMILTON, C.C.R., 575; [1901] 2 K. B. 740; 70 L. J. K. B. 480; 84 L. T. 332.

See also Gaming, 2.

DEED:—

Construction—"Or" read "and"—Gift to a class—Absence of words of division—Substantial gift.—A settlement contained a trust "for all and every the child and children or grandchild of Julia Gibson, the wife of John Gibson, party hereto living at the death of the survivor of" H. C. and M. his wife.

Held that the word "or" must be construed literally.

Held, also, that the fact that the document to be construed was a deed and not a will made no difference.

Held, also, that the children of Julia Gibson who were living at the death of the survivor of H. C. and M. his wife alone took under the trust, to the exclusion of all the grandchildren notwithstanding that the parents of some of the grandchildren were then dead.—COLEY'S TRUSTS, RE, GIBSON v. GIBSON, Ch.D. Byrne J., 165; [1901] 1 Ch. 40; 70 L. J. Ch. 153; 83 L. T. 671.

DIVORCE :—

1. Nullity of marriage—Impotence—Power to vary settlements—Property settled—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict c. 61), s. 5—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 19), s. 3.—The powers of the court under section 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859, and section 3 of the Act of 1878, can be exercised in the case of a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground of impotence, and are not confined to cases where there are or might have been children.

By a marriage settlement the husband, in consideration of the intended marriage, covenanted with the trustees that, if the marriage should take place, he would, during the joint lives of himself and his wife, pay to the trustees £200 a year upon trust for his wife. Further, in consideration of the intended marriage, and in exercise of a power of appointment vested in him, he appointed to the trustees a term of 1,000 years in certain hereditaments to secure the payment of a rent-charge to his wife, the term and the rent-charge to commence as from his death. Further, in consideration of the intended marriage, and in exercise of a power of appointment vested in him, he appointed to the trustees a term of 1 200 years in certain hereditaments, to commence from the solemnization of the intended marriage, upon trust to raise the sum of £20,000 upon certain trusts for himself and the issue of the marriage; but no part of the £20,000 was to be raised during his lifetime, except with his consent in writing. No such consent was ever given.

On a petition by the wife for a variation of the settlement, after a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground of the impotence of the husband,

Held, that the court had power. under section 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859, to deal with the annuity of £200; but that it had not power to deal with the term of 1,000 years and the rent-charge, because the term and rent-charge were not to commence till the death of the husband; neither had it power to deal with the sum of £20,000, because the husband had not given his consent to the raising of any part of that sum —DORMER v. WARD, C.A., 149; [1900] P. 20; 83 L. T. 556.

2. Nullity—Non-consummation — Impotence presumed.—From the fact of non-consummation of a marriage after a reasonable period or cohabitation, during which one of the parties was always willing and anxious and repeatedly urged that the marriage should be consummated, the court may draw the inference that something more than seemingly mere wilful refusal must have animated the other party, who has in fact persistently refused to consummate the marriage, and has also refused to obey the usual order to attend for medical inspection. In such a case the court may properly assume the existence of some latent impediment amounting to incapacity.

The principle laid down by the court in F. v. P. (falsely called F.), 75 L. T. 192, in the case of a female respondent, followed and extended to the case of a male respondent.—B. v. B., P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 39; 70 L. J. P. 4.

3. Peer—Title of honour—Right of wife who has divorced husband to continue to use his title—Subsequent re-marriage to commoner.—Injunction.—The former wife of a peer, who has divorced her husband, has no legal right to continue to use his title.

If, however, she continue to do so, that fact alone does not constitute an injuria cognizable at law; and the court, accordingly, will not restrain her from so doing by injunction.

The existence of any social usage in the matter might be material in any proceeding where malice was part of the cause of action, but it is otherwise irrelevant.

Decision of Gorell Barnes, J. (48 W. R. 463, [1900] P. 118). reversed.—COWLEY v. COWLEY, C.A., 19; [1900] P. 305; 69 L. J. P. 121; 83 L. T. 218.

4. Practice—Affidavit in verification of petition—Proposed petitioner for judicial separation an inmate of an asylum—Refusal by Commissioners in Lunacy to authorize access by solicitor and commissioner for oaths — Motion — Order forthwith. — A married woman, confined in an asylum, gave instructions to her solicitor to institute proceedings against her husband for judicial separation, and the solicitor attended with a commissioner for oaths, in order to obtain from the proposed petitioner the necessary affidavit in verification of the petition, which had been approved and signed by her previously.

The superintendent of the asylum, acting upon printed instructions purporting to be signed by the secretary, and addressed from the Office of the Commissioners in Lunacy, refused to allow the solicitor and commissioner for oaths to see the proposed petitioner, and, upon application being made by the solicitor to the Commissioners in Lunacy, they upheld the refusal of the superintendent.

The court, upon motion, and upon affidavit proving notice, made an order, the Commissioners in Lunacy having notice and not opposing, that the commissioners should forthwith authorize the superintendent of the asylum to permit the solicitor and commissioner for oaths to have access to the proposed petitioner. — BEECHAM, EX PARTE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 65; 70 L. J. P. 20; 84 L. T. 63.

5. Practice—Agreement for separation—Petition for alimony pendente lite—Matrimonial Causes Act. 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 35—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 61), s. 4.—Where an action has been brought for a dissolution of a marriage, the inquiry as to alimony on a petition for alimony pendente lite ought to proceed in the usual way, notwithstanding that the parties have entered into a separation agreement providing for an allowance to be paid by the husband to the wife. —BARRY v. BARRY, C.A., 370; [1901] P. 87; 70 L. J. P. 17; 84 L. T. 33.

6. Practice—Alimony—Death of co-respondent after suit begun—Motion to strike out his name.—Where a co-respondent named in a petition dies after the commencement of the proceedings, the right form of application to be made by the petitioner is to strike his name out of the suit. — WALPOLE v. WALPOLE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 86; 70 L. J. P. 23; 84 L. T. 63.

7. Practice — Consolidated suits — Costs — Co-respondent—Appeal—Final or interlocutory order—Leave to appeal—Jurisdiction—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85). s. 34—Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 44), s. 5.—Where a husband and wife present cross-suits. the wife's being in fact the first on the file, and an order for consolidation is made, followed by verdict and decree in the husband's favour,

Held, on the authority of The City of Manchester, 5 P. D. 221, and Marsden v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co., 7 Q. B. D. 641, that the order was final, not interlocutory, and that the leave of the court was not required.

Held, also, that section 34 of the Act of 1857 only gave jurisdiction to order a co-respondent to pay the costs of the proceedings upon a petition presented by the husband, and that the consolidation order did not make the proceedings in the wife's suit part of the proceedings in the husband's suit. The order had no effect analogous to the consolidation of common law actions; it was merely made for the convenience of trying the two petitions together. Section 5 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1890, had been relied on as giving jurisdiction to order the co-respondent to pay these costs. But the generality of the words of that section must have some limitation, and they could not authorize the court to order a person to pay the costs of proceedings to which he was not a party.—FORBES-SMITH v. FORBES-SMITH, C.A., [1901] P. 258; 70 L. J. P. 61; 84 L. T. 789.

8. Practice—Costs—Security for—Motion for new trial—Divorce petition—Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 44), s. 1—R. S. C., ord. 58, r. 15.—The Court of Appeal will not order security to be given for the costs of a motion for a new trial of a divorce petition, it not having been the practice to require security to be given in such a case before the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1890.

Hecksher v. Crosley. [1891] 1 Q. B. 224, followed.—RICKABY v. RICKABY, C.A.; [1901] P. 134; 70 L. J. P. 24; 84 L. T. 182.

9. Practice—Costs—Wife's costs—Husband's petition—No security for wife's costs—Disagreement of jury—Entering verdict—Wife's costs of abortive trial—Practice—Discretion of judge—A husband filed a petition for divorce, alleging adultery by his wife with a co-respondent. The wife filed a cross-petition for judicial separation, alleging adultery and cruelty on the part of the husband, to which he pleaded condonation. At the trial the jury disagreed as to the wife's adultery, and as to condonation by her, but signified, without returning a formal verdict, that they were prepared to find both adultery and cruelty on the part of the husband. The judge at the trial declined to enter any verdict, and on an application by the wife for her costs of the abortive trial, refused to make any order at that stage in the proceedings.

Held, that the refusal at that stage was a matter for the discretion of the judge, with which the Court of Appeal would not interfere.

Decision of Jeune, P. (ante, p. 672), affirmed.—WAUDBY v. WAUDBY, C.A.; 84 L. T. 829.

10. Practice—Costs—Wife's costs—Jury discharged without giving a verdict.—It is the usual practice of the Divorce Court to allow to an unsuccessful wife her costs up to the limit of the amount paid into court or secured, with the addition of such sum as may be added de die in diem at the trial; but if a wife brings her case to a hearing without having previously taxed them against her husband, and is unsuccessful, the husband is not liable.—WAUDBY v. WAUDBY, P.D. & Ad.D., 672.

11. Practice—Damages—Verdict for larger amount than that claimed.—Where in an undefended case damages are assessed at a higher figure than that claimed in the petition, a summons must be taken out by the petitioner (if he desire to amend his claim) asking for leave to amend and re-serve the petition.

The summons should be served upon the co-respondent, who, although not represented at the trial, will be entitled to be heard in opposition to the application.—BECKETT v. BECKETT, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 85; 70 L. J. P. 17; 84 L. T. 272.

12. Practice—Husband's petition—Wife not appearing—Husband formerly convicted of desertion—Separation and allowance under Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895—Subsequent adultery of wife—Discretional bar—Decree.—Where a husband, who presents a petition for a dissolution of his marriage, has been previously convicted of desertion under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, the court will exercise its discretion as to granting a decree dissolving his marriage. The mere fact of conviction will not be sufficient to establish a bar. The whole circumstances of the case will be considered, and if the court is of opinion that the petitioner acted upon reasonable grounds, he will not be deprived of the relief prayed for.—LLOYD v. LLOYD, P.D. & Ad.D.; 84 L. T. 726.

13. Practice—Married woman—Computation of income—Voluntary allowance—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39).—In estimating the respective incomes of a husband and wife upon a matter arising under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, a voluntary allowance is to be taken into account.—NOTT v. NOTT, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 241; 84 L. T. 573.

14. Practice—Restitution of conjugal rights—Demand and petition—Service out of the jurisdiction—Domiciled Englishman—Deed of separation—Practice.—The service of a demand and petition for restitution of conjugal rights by a wife upon her husband, effected out of the jurisdiction, is good if the husband is a domiciled Englishman.

The court, if the husband fails to appear, will take no notice of any agreement for separation by which the parties have undertaken not to molest or trouble each other.—HARDIE v. HARDIE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 84 L. T. 64.

15. Practice—Restitution of conjugal rights—Service out of the jurisdiction—Decree.—A citation and petition in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, as well as the previous letter of demand required by the rules, may now be served out of the jurisdiction; and where a decree is granted, the decree may likewise be served out of the jurisdiction.

In any further proceedings arising out of a non-compliance with the decree, the petitioner must satisfy the court that the respondent has been served therewith at a place from which he could reasonably have returned to his wife within the period named in the decree.—BATEMAN v. BATEMAN, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 136; 70 L. J. P. 29; 84 L. T. 331.

16. Practice—Service of petition—Substituted service—Co-respondent resident abroad.—The co-respondent in a divorce suit was resident in a sanatorium in Switzerland, and the principal of the sanatorium refused to serve him with the citation or petition, or to allow him to be served therewith; the Procureur-General of the Canton stated that service must be effected through a diplomatic source, but the Foreign Office refused to act in the matter except under an order of the court. It was shown on affidavit that the mother and uncle of the co-respondent resided in Switzerland, and that the petitioner was acquainted with their addresses.

The court made an order for service of the citation and the petition on the co-respondent by means of registered letters addressed to his mother and uncle.—STUMPEL v. STUMPEL, P.D. & Ad.D.; 70 L. J. P. 6.

17. Practice—Substituted service of citations and petition—Respondent and co-respondent resident in Lisbon—Portuguese law—Letters of request refused—Service by registered letters.—Where, upon a citation and petition for dissolution of marriage, it appeared that the respondent and co-respondent were known to be residing at certain addresses in Portugal, the court, after letters of request had been applied for and refused, dispensed with personal service, and ordered substituted service to be effected by registered letters.—WRAY v. WRAY, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 132; 70 L. J. P. 32; 84 L. T. 64.

18. Practice—Wife's petition—Queen's Proctor's intervention—Wife forced by husband to earn money by prostitution—Separation—Habitual adultery subsequent to separation—Husband's former misconduct conducive to such adultery—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 31—Discretion of court—Decree made absolute.—Upon an intervention by the Queen's Proctor after the petitioner had obtained a decree nisi for the dissolution of her marriage on the ground of the adultery and cruelty of her husband, it appeared that he had by his threats and ill-treatment forced her to prostitute herself for his pecuniary benefit, and that she, after she had left him on account of his continued ill-treatment, resorted to other acts of prostitution to supplement her insufficient means of livelihood, and also cohabited for a period of three years with a certain man as his wife.

Held, that all her subsequent acts were the outcome of the husband's conduct, and that she was entitled to have the decree which she had obtained made absolute; the three years' cohabitation and some other facts, very material to be considered by the court and such as ought not to have been withheld at the hearing of the petition, being insufficient to bar the wife's claim to have her marriage dissolved on the grounds of her husband's adultery and cruelty, though amply sufficient to warrant and justify the intervention of the Queen's Proctor.

Symons v. Symons, [1897] P. 167, discussed.—BURDON v. BURDON, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 52.

19. "Unreasonable delay"—Respondent's insanity.—The hope or expectation operating in the mind of a husband that he may be released from the matrimonial tie by the death of his wife, who after committing adultery has become insane, may be accepted as a valid excuse of what would otherwise be "unreasonable delay" in taking proceedings for the dissolution of the marriage.—JOHNSON v. JOHNSON, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 193; 70 L. J. P. 44; 84 L. T. 725.

20. Variation of settlements—Absolute assignment by husband to wife—Divorce Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c 61), s. 5.—A husband executed a deed by which he assigned to a trustee a leasehold house and some furniture upon trust to assign the same at once to the wife absolutely, and the trustee assigned the same accordingly. The wife afterwards obtained a decree of nullity of marriage.

Held, that the assignment was not a settlement within section 5 of the Divorce Act, 1859, and that the court had no jurisdiction to vary its provisions.—HUBBARD v. HUBBARD, C.A.; [1901] P. 157; 70 L. J. P. 34; 84 L. T. 441.

21. Variation of settlements—Next-of-kin—Petition for order of reconveyance of settled property.—The petitioner on his marriage with respondent settled property on trust to pay the income to himself until he should alienate his interest therein or until some event should occur whereby the income should become payable to someone other than himself, or until his death, whichever should first happen; with remainder to the respondent for life or widowhood; and (there being no children of the marriage) there was an ultimate trust in favour of the next-of-kin of the petitioner, which, however, was only to take effect after the death of the respondent if she should have married again and again become a widow. In 1899, the petitioner gave an undertaking in the Chancery Division that he would apply forthwith to vary the settlement so as to vest the remainder of the property in himself absolutely and that he would in any event give a charge over all his interest under the settlement. After the decree absolute, the petitioner contracted a second marriage, and at present if he were to die the persons entitled to share in his estate under the Statute of Distributions would be the second wife, the mother, and a nephew and neice of the petitioner, the last two being also beneficially interested in the mortgage of his interest in the settled property.

Upon motion to confirm the registrar's report upon the petition to vary the settlement and to order the reconveyance of the settled property to the petitioner absolutely,

Held, distinguishing Meredyth v. Meredyth and Leigh, [1895] P. 92, and Wynne v. Wynne, 78 L. T. 796, that this would be going too far, and that the right order to make was simply to extinguish the respondent's interests in the settlement, so that, subject to the engagement given by the petitioner in the Chancery Division, the petitioner's resulting life interest in the settled property would become operative.—WALPOLE v. WALPOLE (No. 2), P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 196; 70 L. J. P. 49; 84 L. T. 727.

22 Variation of settlement—Settlement on wife with restraint on anticipation—Dissolution of marriage—Remarriage of wife.—On their marriage both husband and wife brought property into settlement. The wife's property was settled on her for life, with a restraint on anticipation. The wife obtained a decree dissolving her marriage, and remarried. She then presented a petition for variation of the marriage settlement. The registrar recommended that the property brought into settlement by husband and wife should be given back to them freed from all trusts.

Held, that the report ought to be confirmed, and that the restraint on anticipation did not, even after the petitioner's remarriage, affect the power of the court to make the suggested variation.—MERTON v. MERTON, P.D. & Ad.D.; 83 L. T. 223.

See also Married Woman, 4-6.

DOG.—See Animal, 1.

DOMICIL:—

Prolonged residence abroad—Declared intention to return home—Inference from acts.—If the acts of a person reasonably indicate that he intends to make his home for an indefinite period in a foreign country, the fact that he declares from time to time his intention ultimately to return to his native country will not be sufficient to prevent his acquiring a domicil of choice in the foreign country.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. WINANS, Q.B.D.; 83 L. T. 634.

See also Administration, 4; Lunacy, 3.

EASEMENT:—

1. Light—Derogation from grant—Plots sold for building—Plan showing building line—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 6.—Where a landowner contracts to grant a lease of a vacant piece of land when a house of a specified character is built thereon, and accordingly a house is built and a lease of the house and land is granted, the doctrine that a grantor cannot derogate from his own grant must be applied, not to the vacant piece of land, but to the land with the house on it according to the contract, which must be taken for this purpose to have been fulfilled.

If land forms part of a building estate, and the contract is entered into by reference to a plan in which the estate is marked out in building plots, with a building line marked on the plan so as to extend through all the plots, including the land which is the subject of the contract, the application of the doctrine is not thereby limited or restricted, and, in the absence of further evidence of the existence of a building scheme or of any reservation of right to the grantor, the purchaser from him of an adjoining plot will be restrained from building on his land so as to interfere with the access of light to the house as theretofore enjoyed.

Broomfield v. Williams. [1897] 1 Ch. 602, applied. —POLLARD v. GARE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 834; 70 L. J. Ch. 404; 84 L. T. 352.

2. Light—Right to extraordinary use of light—Sufficient for ordinary business purposes.—A prescriptive right to light is limited to a sufficient quantity for ordinary business purposes. Where the light has been interfered with, but not so as to make it insufficient for ordinary business purposes, the plaintiff has no cause of action.—HOME AND COLONIAL STORES v. COLLS, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; 83 L. T. 759.

3. Right of way—Annual payment—Uninterrupted enjoyment for over forty years—Parol licence—Lost grant—Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), ss. 2, 5.—Where an easement is claimed under the Prescription Act, s. 2, a payment within the period of forty years may so negative the enjoyment "as of right" as to prevent the claim being established.

Where a licence to use a way was given by parol more than forty years before action brought, and such licence was subject to a small annual payment,

Held (Rigby, L.J., dissenting), on the facts, that the proper inference was that each payment was made for permission to use the way for the preceding year, and that the way had not therefore been enjoyed as of right within the meaning of the Prescription Act.

Held, also, that no lost grant could be inferred.

Decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (48 W. R. 469), reversed.—GARDNER v. HODGSON'S KINGSTON BREWERY CO., C.A., 421; [1901] 2 Ch. 198; 70 L. J. Ch. 504; 84 L. T. 373.

4. Right of way—Private right of way—Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), ss. 2, 3, 4—Unity of possession of alleged dominant and servient tenements by lessee.—Unity of possession of the dominant and servient tenements in the person of a lessee for years during the twenty years next before action brought is sufficient to bar a claim to a right of way under the Prescription Act.

Onley v. Gardiner, 4 M. & W. 496, and Battishill v. Reed, 4 W. R. 603, 18 C. B. 696, followed.—DAMPER v. BASSETT, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 536; [1901] 2 Ch. 350; 70 L. J. Ch. 657; 84 L. T. 682.

5. Right of way—Undefined—No user—Unlimited claim—Action dismissed.—In 1862 the Corporation of the City of London, in pursuance of powers conferred on them by the Metropolitan Meat and Poultry Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. cxciii.), entered into an agreement with the plaintiff and defendant companies by which the companies agreed to construct a railway station for goods traffic only beneath the site of S. Market.

In 1878 the corporation, with the privity of the defendant company, leased to the plaintiff company the northern part of the land on which the railway station had been built for 100 years, together with a right of way from time to time and at all times over the southern part of the land (which was leased by the corporation to the defendant company) through a circular road. The way was not definitely described, and it was never in fact used by the plaintiff company.

The station was now substantially in the same state as it was in 1878.

The plaintiff company brought this action to enforce their right of way.

Held, that, until the plaintiff company used the demised premises as a goods station in accordance with the provisions of the Act of 1860, their right of way did not arise; and that the claim to the right of way was so undefined and unlimited that it could not be maintained.—METROPOLITAN RAILWAY CO. v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO., C.A.; 84 L. T. 333.

6. Support—Right to support of dock sides by rods fastened in adjoining owner's land—Enjoyment claim.—In this case it was held that there was no implied reservation in favour of the vendors when the wharf was conveyed to the plaintiffs in 1877, but that a right had been acquired, either under the Prescription Act, or under the common law doctrine of a lost grant, unless it could be held that the easement had been enjoyed not openly but clam—namely, that the easement had not come to the knowledge of the plaintiffs, and was not of such a nature that their attention ought reasonably to have been drawn to it. In the present case there had been nothing surreptitious, no active concealment, but on the other hand there had been no open and visible enjoyment of the easement claimed. This special and unusual support, by means of iron ties beneath the surface of the plaintiffs' land, was not such as could be claimed merely by twenty years' enjoyment without the knowledge of the plaintiffs, and the defendants were not entitled to retain any of the rods, ties, or supports in or under the plaintiffs' land for the purpose of upholding or supporting the defendants' dry dock, and were not entitled to interfere with the removal by the plaintiffs of all or any of such rods, ties, or supports.—UNION LIGHTERAGE CO. v. LONDON GRAVING DOCK CO., Ch D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1901] 2 Ch. 300; 70 L. J. Ch. 558; 84 L. T. 527.

7. Watercourse—Pond—Uninterrupted flow—Right to water cattle — Prescription—"Temporary"—"Precarious"—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 6.—Of two properties which were in one ownership for fifty years prior to 1886, a farm property was conveyed to the plaintiff in 1886 and a mill property to the defendant at a subsequent date. An ancient pond, filled from a brook by an artificial watercourse, and habitually used by cattle, was on the defendant's property, but for fifty-five years abutted on the plaintiff's property, whence his cattle drank from it.

In an action by the plaintiff claiming that the watercourse was a continuous easement necessary and convenient for the use of his property; that he had a right to compel the defendant to keep the pond full with a constant and undiminished supply, or at least a right to water his cattle at the pond whenever there was water therein; and that, in the absence of express words in his deed of conveyance, these rights passed under section 6 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881,

Held, that, in such a case all the circumstances must be considered (Birmingham Banking Co. v. Ross, 36 W. R. 914, 38 Ch. D. 295); that there was no easement here which could pass, nor one by way of prescription by reason of the nature of the works; and that the artificial watercourse having been made for one property only, and no leakage by trampling of cattle in the pond having been intended by the vendors of the property, it was not to be inferred from the particular facts of the user that there was a grant of water which conferred either any right to compel such a continuance of the flow as, apart from the rights of lower riparian proprietors, would impose a serious burden on the defendant, or any right to an easement of such a "precarious" character as an easement to water cattle at the pond when and as often as it might be full, such an easement being unknown to the law, and therefore incapable of passing under the general words of section 6 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881.

Hanna v. Pollock, [1898] 2 Ir. Rep. 532, [1900] 2 Ir. Rep. 664, and McEvoy v. Great Northern Railway Co., [1900] 2 Ir. Rep. 325, discussed.

Watts v. Kelson, 19 W. R. 338, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 166, distinguished.—BURROWS v. LANG, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 564; 70 L. J. Ch. 607; 84 L. T. 623.

See also Highway, 3; Settled Land, 8.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW:—

1. Churchwarden—Admission—Visitation of bishop—Inhibition to archdeacon—Jurisdiction of archdeacon.—Where the bishop, during his visitation, inhibits the archdeacon from admitting churchwardens, the bishop is the only person entitled to admit, and a mandamus to admit a churchwarden during the period covered by the inhibition will not lie to the archdeacon.

Rex v. Simpson, 1 Stra. 609, explained.

Judgment of the Divisional Court (ante, p. 170, [1901] 1 Q. B. 66) reversed.—REG. v. SOWTER, C.A., 338; [1901] 1 Q. B. 396; 70 L. J. Ch. 322; 84 L. T. 36.

2. Churchwarden—Election of parishioners' churchwarden—Right of minister to vote as ratepayer—Canon 89—Sturges Bourne's Act, 1818 (58 Geo. 3, c. 69), s. 3.—The minister of a parish has no right to vote in his capacity as a ratepayer in the election of the parishioners' churchwarden.

Judgment of Wills and Channell, JJ. (ante, p. 399, [1901] 1 Q. B. 573), affirmed.—REX v. SALISBURY (BISHOP), C.A., 529; [1901] 2 K. B. 225; 70 L. J. K. B. 593; 84 L. T. 553.

3. Clergy—Discipline—Brawling—Conviction by justices—Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 32), s. 2—Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 32), s. 2.—The consistory court of the diocese in which a clergyman holds preferment has jurisdiction under section 2 of the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892, to try and sentence him under that Act, in case he is convicted by a temporal court of having committed an act constituting an offence against ecclesiastical law, not being a question of doctrine or ritual, notwithstanding that the offence he is charged with is not an offence against morality.—GIRT v. FILLINGHAM, St. Alban's Consist. Ct.; [1901] P. 176.

4. Faculty—Architectural adornment not shown to be probably open to abuse—Jurisdiction—Chancel screen with crucifix and figures of the Virgin Mary and St. John—Admission of fresh evidence on appeal—Retention of cause.—A chancel screen, to the upper portion of the tracery of which is attached over the entrance archway the figure of Our Lord upon the Cross, and on one side of the archway the figure of the Virgin Mary, and on the other side the figure of St. John, is not, either from its character, nature, or position, in itself unlawful in churches or chapels of the Church of England, and may be authorized by faculty, provided the ordinary is of opinion in his discretion that it is not probable that it will be abused for superstitious purposes.

The mere suggestion that the figures on the screen may cause offence is not a sufficient reason for the ordinary refusing in his discretion to grant the faculty.

The vicar and churchwardens of a parish church in the diocese of London and the chapel-wardens of a chapel of ease in the parish petitioned for a faculty to authorize the erection in the chapel of a chancel screen of oak with the figure of our Lord on the Cross upon the centre of it, and the figure of the Virgin Mary on one side, and of St. John on the other; the figures not to surmount the screen, but to be attached to the upper portion of the tracery, the central figure immediately over the entrance archway, and the other two figures, one on the right and one on the left, at a somewhat less elevation, upon pedestals affixed to the woodwork. The grant of the faculty was unopposed, and no evidence was given as to whether the figures on the screen would or would not be likely to be abused by superstitious reverence. The Chancellor of the Diocese of London refused to grant a faculty for the figures on the proposed screen, being of opinion that the erection of a chancel screen with the figures as proposed was illegal in itself under the ruling of the Arches Court and the Privy Council in Clifton v. Ridsdale, 1 P. D. 316, 2 P. D. 276. The petitioners appealed to the Arches Court.

The Dean of Arches at the hearing of the appeal admitted fresh evidence as to the mode in which the services in the chapel were conducted, and finding that there was nothing in them to lead the court to suppose that the proposed screen and figures were likely to be treated otherwise than as architectural decoration, allowed the appeal, retained the cause, and ordered the faculty as prayed to issue from the registry of the Arches Court.—ST. ANSELM'S, PINNER, RE, London Consist. Ct.; [1901] P. 202.

5. Faculty—Communion table in side chapel—Proviso inserted in faculty.—A faculty was granted on the application of the rector of a parish for the erection and use of a second communion table in a side chapel of the parish church, though both the churchwardens of the parish and the parish vestry expressed opinions averse to the grant, but the court directed that a proviso should be inserted in the faculty reserving to the court, on being satisfied that ornaments other than those sanctioned by the present or any future faculty had been introduced into the chapel or unlawful services performed there, to order the removal of the second communion table from the chapel.—ST. ANNE'S, LIMEHOUSE (RECTOR) v. PARISHIONERS OF SAME, London Consist. Ct.; [1901] P. 73.

6. Faculty—Jurisdiction—Grant of faculty for use as public street of portion of consecrated cemetery or churchyard closed for burials, and setting back of cemetery or churchyard wall—Retention of cause.—The ordinary has jurisdiction to grant a faculty authorising a portion of a consecrated cemetery or churchyard, closed for burials by Order in Council, to be used for widening a public street. Any faculty granted for this purpose should contain exact particulars of the measurements of the portion of the cemetery or churchyard proposed to be used for the widening.

The rector and churchwardens of a parish church in the diocese of Exeter, and the corporation of a borough in which a consecrated cemetery forming an addition to the parish churchyard was situate, petitioned the ordinary for a faculty to authorize a strip of the cemetery being used for widening an adjoining public street, and the boundary wall of the cemetery being set back so as to form the boundary wall between the remaining portion of the cemetery and the widened street. It appeared that the street proposed to be widened was only sixteen feet wide, and too narrow for the traffic along it, and that the proposed widening would be not only for the general convenience and safety of the public, but particularly of the rector and his parishioners, to the former of whom and the churchwardens moreover, by way of consideration, a sum of money was intended to be paid by the corporation. It also appeared that the strip of cemetery proposed to be thrown into the street had been closed for interments under an Order in Council, and that the proposed alteration of the width of the street had been unanimously approved by the parish vestry. The Chancellor of the Diocese of Exeter refused to issue citation, being of opinion that he had no jurisdiction to grant the faculty prayed for. The petitioners appealed to the Arches Court of Canterbury. The Dean of Arches allowed the appeal, retained the cause, and, the allegations in the petition having been verified by affidavit, decreed a faculty to issue in accordance with the prayer of the petitioners.—RECTOR, &c., OF BIDEFORD, EX PARTE, Arches Ct. of Canterbury; [1900] P. 314.

7. Faculty—New ecclesiastical parish—Right of non-resident ratepayer to promote faculty suit—Lord Blandford's Act (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104), s. 15—Consecration—Criminal suit against churchwarden—Illegal ornaments.—The tenant of a house within the limits of an ecclesiastical district formed into a separate parish with a new parish church under Lord Blandford's Act, who has his name on the rate-book of the civil parish out of which the separate parish has been formed, and pays the civil parochial rates levied on him, has a sufficient interest to promote a faculty suit for the removal of illegal ornaments set up in the new parish church, notwithstanding that he does not reside in the ecclesiastical district and has become tenant of the house for the sole purpose of qualifying as a parishioner and ratepayer.

A bishop cannot by a sentence of consecration legalize the retention in a parish church of an ornament which is forbidden by law to be there.

The following ornaments and things were ordered by the ordinary to be removed from a parish church as illegal:—

I. ORNAMENTS AND THINGS IN THE CHURCH AT THE TIME OF ITS CONSECRATION.

I. The fourteen Stations of the Cross. II. Three Confessional Boxes. III. A large Crucifix fixed near the pulpit. IV. A Tabernacle on the Communion Table in the chancel before which a lamp was kept burning.

II. ORNAMENTS AND THINGS INTRODUCED INTO THE CHURCH SINCE ITS CONSECRATION.

I. A piece of furniture applicable for receiving Confessions. II. Two Water Stoups for holding Holy Water. III. A Tabernacle on the Communion Table in the side chapel of the church used for the Reservation of the Sacrament. IV. Images representing (1) the Good Shepherd, on a pedestal at the west end of the church, with candles on each side and a lighted lamp in front; (2) the Virgin Mary, on a pedestal standing against the chancel screen with candles on each side, vases of flowers, and a lighted blue lamp before it with canopy, crown, and star over it; (3) the Sacred Heart and St. Joseph, on either side of the Communion Table in the side chapel of the church. V. Several Crucifixes, one over the Communion Table in the chancel, another on the chancel screen, and another with a crown over it over the Holy Table in the side chapel of the church.

The patent appointing the Chancellor of the Diocese of Chichester confers on him jurisdiction to proceed in the absence of the bishop of the diocese from the Consistory Court of Chichester in all ecclesiastical suits, the decision of which is known by law or custom of the realm to belong to the Ecclesiastical Courts, and finally to decide and determine them without breach of the laws and statutes of the kingdom, "nevertheless first consulting us" [the bishop of the diocese] "and our successors, and having our consent, in case either party earnestly craves our judgment."

The opponents in a cause of faculty instituted in the Consistory Court of Chichester for the removal of certain ornaments out of a parish church alleged in their answer that before any decision or final determination of the cause, the bishop of the diocese should be first consulted and his consent had, and earnestly craved his judgment in the premises, and complained and supplicated that the said bishop should examine and determine the cause in his own proper person in the consistory court of the diocese. The petitioner in his reply submitted that the consent of the bishop prayed for in the answer was not necessary to the hearing and determination of the cause, and supplicated that the said cause might be examined and determined by the chancellor of the diocese. Subsequently the hearing of the cause took place in the Consistory Court of Chichester.

The chancellor of the diocese heard the cause sitting alone, the bishop not being present, and determined it, delivering judgment without consulting the bishop, and decreeing a faculty to issue for the removal of the illegal ornaments referred to in the petition, holding that the validity of the reservation in his patent in favour of the bishop was a matter for the determination of the temporal courts; it being within the province of these courts alone to decide whether a custom for the bishop to exercise the right reserved to him by the patent was valid in law.

Semble, the custom in question—i.e., a custom for the bishop to veto a judgment come to after the hearing of a suit by the chancellor, would be unreasonable and bad in law and not a legal custom, as no trace of its exercise could be found in recent times or since the Reformation.

Observations as to the institution of criminal suits against churchwardens for the purpose of obtaining the removal of illegal church ornaments.—DAVEY v. HINDE, Chichester Consist. Ct.; [1901] P. 95.

8. Faculty—Removal of remains from consecrated to unconsecrated ground subject to grant of licence from Secretary of State, Faculty for — Jurisdiction — Evidence—Discretion—The Burial Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict c. 81), s. 25—4 & 5 Will. 4, c. lxxv.—The 25th section of the Burial Act, 1857, provides that, except in the cases where a body is removed from one consecrated place of burial to another by faculty granted by the ordinary, it shall not be lawful to remove any body or the remains of any body which may have been interred in any place of burial without licence under the hand of one of her Majesty's Secretaries of State.

The superior of St. Edmund's College—one of the Roman Catholic theological colleges in England—applied to the court for a faculty to authorize the removal of the remains of a former superior of the college from their place of interment in a vault in the churchyard of a parish church in the diocese of London to a vault under the chapel of the college wherein three of the predecessors of the petitioner and the deceased lay buried. It appeared that the owner of the vault from which it was proposed to remove the remains of the deceased could not be discovered, but that the incumbent of the parish church in whom the freehold of the churchyard was vested and the next-of-kin of the deceased consented to the proposed removal. No evidence was given that the vault under the college chapel had ever been consecrated.

The court in its discretion granted the faculty; but, being of opinion that the vault under the college chapel was not a consecrated place of burial within the meaning of the above section, directed that the faculty should issue upon condition that it was not to be acted upon until a licence approving the place of reinterment had been obtained from a Secretary of State.

The removal of remains from unconsecrated places of burial being by the above section placed under the control of a Secretary of State, the court cannot now, as it would have done before the passing of the Burial Act, 1857, refuse to exercise whatever jurisdiction it might possess to grant a faculty for the removal of remains to unconsecrated ground on account of the objection that the remains when removed would not be sufficiently protected from disturbance.—TALBOT, RE, London Consist. Ct.; [1901] P. 1.

9. Prohibition—Consistory court—Patent of commissary and vicar-general—Reservation to bishop of certain causes—Questions of procedure not affecting jurisdiction.—By letters patent appointing a chancellor for a diocese, the bishop gave him power to determine certain causes, "Nevertheless first consulting us and our successors, and having our consent in case either party earnestly crave our judgment." A suit was promoted for the removal of certain ornaments from a church in the diocese, and the respondents in their reply asked that the bishop should be first consulted and his consent had, and earnestly craved his judgment. The chancellor heard the suit and pronounced an order, in which it did not appear that he had first consulted the bishop or had his consent. On an application for a writ of prohibition,

Held, that there was not such a defect of jurisdiction apparent on the record as would justify the issue of the writ, but that if there was any defect it was in the procedure of the court, and was the proper subject of appeal.—REX v TRISTRAM, K.B.D.; [1901] 2 K. B 141; 70 L. J. K. B. 565; 84 L. T. 473.

EDUCATION:—

Elementary school—School board—Science and art schools or classes—Provision out of rates—Day schools—Evening continuation schools—Elementary Education Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 75), ss. 3, 5, 7, 8, 53, 54, 74—Elementary Education Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 86), s. 13—Education Code (1890) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 22), s. 1.—It is not within the power of a school board to pay out of the rate levied under the Elementary Education Acts the expenses of maintaining in their day schools or evening continuation schools science and art schools or classes registered under the Science and Art Department.

Judgment of Wills and Kennedy, JJ. (ante, p. 252, [1901] 1 Q. B. 322), affirmed.—REG. v. COCKERTON, C.A., 433; [1901] 1 Q. B. 726; 70 L. J. K. B. 441; 84 L. T. 488.

ELECTION LAW:—

1. Municipal election—Election of mayor—Vote of councillor subsequently disqualified—Validity of such vote—Vote of chairman—Casting vote—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 10, 15 (3), 42, 61 (4), 102.—At a municipal election N., a councillor, voted, whose election as a councillor was then about to be challenged on the ground that he had an interest in a contract with the council.

T., the retiring mayor and chairman of the meeting, who had himself voted, said if N.'s vote was disallowed there would be an equal number of votes for each of the two candidates for the position of mayor, and he should therefore give a provisional casting vote for the respondent.

On the hearing of the petition N. was held disqualified from acting as a member of the town council, and the question was then raised for the decision of the High Court, (1) whether, on the authority of Nell v. Longbottom, [1894] 1 Q. B. 767, his vote given for the election of the mayor was valid; (2) whether the chairman at a meeting of the council for electing a mayor may give a casting vote to take effect in case the votes turn out to be equal, owing to one of the votes being disallowed.

Held, (1) that as N. had been found to be disqualified to act as a councillor, his vote was bad and ought to be disallowed; (2) that under the Municipal Corporations Act T., the outgoing mayor, would have been entitled to give an original vote, and that there was nothing in the Provisional Order of 1900 to take away that right; (2) that T. had a right, under the circumstances, to give a casting vote, as the number of lawful (i.e., valid) votes—N.'s not being a lawful vote—were equal, and therefore both the original and casting vote of T. were good and the respondent entitled to claim the seat.—BLAND v BUCHANAN, K.B D., 601; [1901] 2 K. B. 75; 70 L J. K. B. 466; 84 L. T. 390.

2. Municipal corporation—Town council—Disqualification—Contract with council—Release by committee—Ratification by council—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 12, sub-section 1 (c).—The respondent, in answer to an advertisement, sent in a tender offering to supply to a city council certain goods at specified prices for the period of twelve months certain. This tender was accepted, and the respondent supplied goods from time to time. Shortly before the completion of the twelve months the respondent, wishing to stand as a candidate at the forthcoming election of councillors, applied to a committee of the council to be released from his contract. The committee resolved, subject to approval by the council, to release the respondent as from that date. He was then nominated, and after his nomination the council ratified the resolution of the committee. A petition was presented against him, alleging that his election was void on the ground that, at the date of his nomination, he had an interest in a contract with the council.

Held, that the advertisement, tender, and acceptance constituted a contract in which the respondent had an interest, and that the ratification of the committee's resolution by the council after the nomination of the respondent did not relate back to the date of the resolution because the interests of persons other than the parties to the contract might be affected; and therefore the respondent having an interest in a contract with the council at the date of his nomination, was disqualified and his election void.—GLOUCESTER ELECTION PETITION, RE, NEWTH v. FORD, K.B.D., 345; [1901] 1 K. B. 683; 70 L. J. K. B. 459; 84 L. T. 354.

3. Parliament — Registration — Right of freeholders of Haverfordwest to vote for borough of Pembroke—Reform Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 45), s. 2, Schedule E—Redistribution of Seats Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 23), ss. 2, 7, 11, Schedules I. and V.—By the Redistribution of Seats Act, 1885, a new parliamentary borough of P. and H. was created, consisting of the parliamentary borough of P. and the places comprised in the area of the parliamentary borough of H., and by the same Act the borough of H., which was a county of itself, ceased to return any member.

Held, that the freeholders of the old borough of H., who had had as such a right to vote for that borough, had no right as freeholders to vote for the new borough of P. and H.—JAMES v. IVEMEY, Q.B.D.; [1901] 1 Q. B. 193; 70 L. J. Q. B. 326; 83 L. T. 587.

EMPLOYER.—See Master and Servant, 1-22, 26, 27.

EXECUTOR:—

1. Administration—Right of retainer—Marriage settlement—Covenant to pay money after decease of testator—Insolvent estate—Right of trustee to sue.—The executor of an insolvent estate, being also tenant for life of a sum covenanted to be paid by the testator's executors or administrators in his marriage settlement, cannot retain such sum out of testator's assets where there are trustees of the settlement who have the legal right to sue for the said sum so covenanted to be paid.

In re Dunning, Hatherley v. Dunning, 33 W. R. 760, 54 L. J. Ch. 900, followed.

Loomes v. Stotherd, 1 Sim. & S. 458, discussed.—HAYWARD, RE, TWEEDIE v. HAYWARD, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 296; [1901] 1 Ch. 221; 70 L. J. Ch. 155; 84 L. T. 256.

2. Administration—Trust for sale and conversion—Appropriation—Leaseholds—Reversionary interest in stock—Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 4.—The power of executors and trustees holding residuary estate upon trust for sale and conversion to appropriate unconverted parts of the personal estate in respect of legacies and shares of residue extends to all personal estate, including chattels real and reversionary interests in stock in a company; and this power has not been taken away or modified by the Land Transfer Act, 1897.

Semble, that this power of appropriation extended—previously to the said Act, and still extends—to real estate, where there is a trust for sale and conversion.

Semble, that, where there is no trust for sale and conversion, the executors had, and have, the same power over the whole personal estate.

Section 4 of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, applies to all the residuary estate, whether personal or real.—BEVERLEY, RE, WATSON v. WATSON, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 343; [1901] 1 Ch. 681; 70 L. J. Ch. 295; 84 L. T. 297.

See also Administration, 2; Building Society, 2; Trustee, 3.

EXTRADITION:—

Extradition treaty with Germany—"Apprehension"—"Sufficient evidence for the extradition" within two months from apprehension—Subsequent investigation of other charges—Jurisdiction to review decision of magistrate—Extradition Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 52), s. 8.—B. was arrested in this country under the extradition treaty with Germany, charged with obtaining money by false pretences from one Wallesch, and evidence was given upon that charge, and B. was remanded from time to time. After the expiration of two months from his arrest, B. was committed for extradition on this charge. He was, however, detained pending the investigation of thirty other charges against him, and he was also committed on those charges.

Held, that there was, in fact, upon the depositions before the expiration of the two months from the date of B.'s arrest, sufficient evidence for his committal on the first charge under the treaty.

Semble, the committal of B. on the subsequent charges was regular.—BLUHM, EX PARTE, REX v. HOLLOWAY (GOVERNOR OF), K.B.D., 464; [1901] 1 Q. B. 764; 70 L. J. K. B. 472.

FACTOR:—

Agreement for sale of goods—Hire purchase agreement—"Person having agreed to buy goods"—Factors Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), s. 9.—By an agreement one Whitting agreed with the defendant to hire goods of the value of £ , "and to pay her the sum of £1 on signing this agreement and the balance in instalments of £1 per month until the full amount of the aforesaid value be paid," when the goods were to become the property of Whitting.

The agreement contained a clause: "But in default being made in payment of such sums of £1 per month," Whitting agreed "to give up all claims to the said goods, and to deliver the same free from damage or injury beyond fair wear and tear" to the defendant or to her agents on demand.

Held that Whitting was a person who had "agreed to buy goods" under section 9 of the Factors Act, 1899.—WYLDE v. LEGGE, K.B.D.; 84 L. T. 121.

FACTORY ACTS:—

1. Definition—Beer bottling works—Factory and Workshop Act, 1878 (41 Vict. c. 16), s. 93 (3)—Premises were used by the respondents for the purpose of washing bottles and bottling beer. Before the bottles were filled, which was done by manual labour alone, they were washed by manual labour with the aid of mechanical power.

Held, that the premises were not a factory within the definition of the term in section 93 (3) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878.—LAW v. GRAHAM, K.B.D., 622; [1901] 2 K. B. 327; 70 L. J. K. B. 608; 84 L. T. 599.

2. Making and finishing of bricks—Girl under age of sixteen—Factory and Workshop Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 16), s. 38, Sched. 1.—Bricks after being baked were taken to dipping sheds, and after being placed in a preparing solution were dipped in glaze and scraped and knifed. They were then stacked, and ultimately baked with a view to setting the glaze. They were then polished, and stacked until wanted for sale.

Held, that this constituted the "finishing of bricks" within the Act.—SQUIRE v. STANLEY, K.B.D.; 84 L. T. 535.

3. Public health—Sanitary conveniences—Default in relation to water-closet—Failure of sanitary authority to take proceedings—Proceedings by factory inspector—Evidence—Jurisdiction of justices—Appeal to quarter sessions—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 38—Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), ss 7, 22—Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 (41 Vict. c. 16), s. 4; 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 75), s. 2; 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 37), ss. 3, 35.—Where a factory inspector, acting under section 4 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, section 2 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1891, section 3 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, and section 22 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, has given notice to the owner or occupier of a factory (in a district in which the last-mentioned section is in force) requiring him to make such alterations or additions in the factory as may be required to give sufficient sanitary accommodation, and the owner or occupier neglects or refuses to comply with the notice, the justices by whom a complaint of such neglect or refusal is heard have no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the sufficiency of the accommodation existing in the factory.

So held by Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Grantham, Bruce, and Darling, JJ. (Phillimore, J., dissenting).

Semble, the notice must specify the alterations or additions required.

Per Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Bruce and Darling, JJ.—An appeal to quarter sessions from the requirement of the factory inspector lies under section 7 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890.—TRACEY v. PRETTY, Q.B.D., 282; [1901] 1 Q. B. 444; 70 L. J. Q. B. 234; 83 L. T. 767.

4. Ventilation—"Dust generated and inhaled by the workers to an injurious extent"—Direction by factory inspector requiring a fan to be provided—Factory and Workshop Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 16), s. 36.—By section 36 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, it is provided that where in a factory any process is carried on by which dust is generated and inhaled by the workers to an injurious extent, an inspector of factories may direct a fan or other mechanical means of a proper construction for the prevention of such inhalation to be provided.

Held, that, in ascertaining whether dust was generated or inhaled to an injurious extent, it is not necessary to prove that the health of any of the workers was actually injured; it is sufficient if the inhalation of the dust has a tendency to injure health.—HOARE v. RITCHIE, Q.B.D., 351; [1901] 1 Q. B. 434; 70 L. J. Q. B. 279; 84 L. T. 54.

5. Workshop—Shop used for process of "adapting for sale"—Factory and Workshop Act, 1878 (41 Vict. c. 16), s. 93.—A shop was used during the daytime for the selling by retail of bonbons and sweetmeats, and after the ordinary shop hours for the purpose of packing such goods in b xes ornamented and tied with ribbons, so as to make them attractive to purchasers.

Held, on these facts, that such packing was an "adapting for sale" of an article within section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, and that the premises were a "workshop" within the meaning of that section.—FULLERS v. SQUIRE, K.B.D., 683; [1901] 2 K. B. 209; 70 L. J. K. B. 689.

See also Master and Servant, 13, 14, 16.

FINANCE ACTS. — See Inland Revenue, 1-11; Practice, 29.

FINES and RECOVERIES ACT. — See Settlement, 2, 8.

FISHERY:—

1. Fishery district—Reservoir within the geographical boundary of a fishery district—Jurisdiction of Board of Trade—Taking trout or char from reservoir—Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 39), s. 6—Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 39), s. 3.—Neither section 6 of the Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1878, nor section 3 of the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1886, give power to the Board of Trade to include an artificial water reservoir frequented by trout and char in a fishing district.—STEAD v. NICHOLAS, K.B.D., 522; [1901] 2 K. B. 163; 70 L. J. K. B. 653.

2. Several fishery—Crown grant—Grant of weirs (gurgites)—Construction of parcels—Grant valid to extent of Crown rights—Right of way appurtenant to several fishery—Acts upon bed of river treated as trespass and not as acts of ownership.—The right to a several fishery in part of a river claimed under a grant from the Crown which purported to give the fishing in that part and a further part is not disproved by showing that the Crown could not have granted the fishery in the further part of the river.

The grant of a fishery in certain waters may confer a several fishery without the use of the word "several." The grant of a weir (gurges) is a grant of the soil, not merely of the place where the weir stands, but in the absence of anything appearing to the contrary of the soil over which the river runs and upon which there is the right to construct weirs for the purpose of taking fish.

A right of way along the banks of a non-tidal river for the purpose of fishing may be appendant or appurtenant to a right of several fishery in the river. The dictum of Lord Coke (Co. Litt. 121*b*) that an incorporeal hereditament cannot be appendant or appurtenant to an incorporeal hereditament not followed. The true test is whether the principal and adjunct so agree in nature and quality as to be capable of union without incongruity.—HANBURY v. JENKINS, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 615.

3. Ship—Oyster beds—Property in oysters—Sea Fisheries Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 45), ss. 51, 53—Jurisdiction—Action in rem—"Damage done by any ship"—Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10), ss. 7, 35.—The plaintiffs, owners of oyster-beds at the mouth of a navigable river, brought an action in rem against the defendants, as owners of a vessel, for so negligently navigating her as to ground on the property of the plaintiffs, and thereby do damage to their oysters and oyster-beds.

Held, that the damage was "done by a ship" within the meaning of section 7 of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, and therefore the action would lie. Secondly, that as the damage was not done by grounding in the ordinary course of navigation, or without notice of the existence of the oyster-beds, the defendants were liable for the negligence of those in charge of their vessel; and, thirdly, that as the plaintiffs had property in the soil, and by section 51 of the Sea Fisheries Act, 1868, in the oysters, they were entitled to enforce their claim for damage not only in respect of the disturbance of the beds, but also in respect of the destruction of the oysters.—"SWIFT," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 168; 70 L. J. P. 47.

FIXTURES:—

Tenant for life and remainderman—Tapestry.—Trade fixtures and articles affixed to the freehold for purposes of ornamentation are exceptions to the rule, "Quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit," equally in the case of a landlord and tenant and in the case of a tenant for life and remainderman.

Where tapestry had been affixed by a tenant for life to the walls of a mansion-house, it was held that the affixing was only for the better enjoyment of the tapestry, and not for the purpose of increasing the value of the freehold. Consequently, the legal personal representatives of the tenant for life were entitled to the tapestry as against the remainderman.

D'Eyncourt v. Gregory, 15 W. R. 186, L. R. 3 Eq. 382, and Norton v. Dashwood, 44 W. R. 680, [1896] 2 Ch. 497, commented on.—DE FALBE, RE, WARD v. TAYLOR, C.A., 455; [1901] 1 Ch. 523; 70 L. J. Ch. 286; 84 L. T. 273.

See also Landlord and Tenant, 3; Mortgage, 3.

FOOD and DRUGS.—See Adulteration.

FRAUDS, STATUTES of:—

1. Contract—For a year from day following—An agreement not to be performed within a year—Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4.—A hiring agreement for a year from the day after that upon which the agreement is made is an agreement "not to be performed within the space of one year from the making thereof" within section 4 of the Statute of Frauds, and therefore it cannot be enforced unless there is a note or memorandum in writing of it signed by the party to be charged.—DOLLAR v. PARKINGTON, K.B.D.; 84 L. T. 470.

2. False representation—Representation as to credit of another person—Company—Signature by agent—Statute of Frauds Amendment Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 14), s. 6.—A limited company incorporated under the Companies Acts comes within section 6 of 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, and is therefore not liable for a false representation signed by an agent of the company as to the credit of another person.—HIRST v. WEST RIDING UNION BANKING CO., C.A., 715.

3. Marriage settlement—Mistake—Parol evidence—Non-execution of power—Rectification—29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 4.—In an action for the rectification of a marriage settlement, parol evidence of a mistake made in drawing up the settlement was offered.

Held, that the Statute of Frauds was no valid defence, as such an action was not one seeking "to charge any person upon any agreement made upon consideration of marriage" within section 4 of the statute.—JOHNSON v. BRAGGE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 198; [1901] 1 Ch. 28; 70 L. J. Ch. 41; 83 L. T. 621.

4. Specific performance—Alternative offers—Verbal acceptance—Agreement for yearly tenancy.—Specific performance will be decreed of a verbal and written acceptance of one of two alternatives contained in a duly signed offer, if the offer accepted can be identified, and of an agreement to let on a yearly tenancy.—LEVER v. KOFFLER, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 506; [1901] 1 Ch. 543; 70 L. J. Ch. 395; 84 L. T. 584.

See also Landlord and Tenant, 12.

FRIENDLY SOCIETY:—

1. Industrial insurance companies—Transfer of members—Notice to society whence a member is sought to be transferred—Collecting Societies and Industrial Insurance Companies Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 26), s. 4 (2).—It is provided by section 4 (2) of the Collecting Societies and Industrial Insurance Companies Act, 1896, that, where a member of, or person insured with, a collecting society or industrial assurance company is sought to be transferred to any other such society or company, the society to which the member or person is sought to be transferred shall, within seven days of his application for admission to that society or company, give notice thereof in writing to the society or company from which he is sought to be transferred, and by section 14 (1) (c), failure to give such notice is made an offence under the Act.

A person insured with an industrial assurance company applied, through an agent, for admission to a collecting society. At the time of the application he was still insured in the company.

Held, that he was a person who was sought to be transferred to the society, and that the society, having failed to give the notices required by section 4 (2) of the above-mentioned Act, was guilty of an offence under section 14 (1) (c).—PEARL ASSURANCE CO. v. SCOTTISH LEGAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, K.B D., 493; [1901] 1 Q. B. 528; 70 L. J. K. B. 360; 84 L. T. 153.

2. Life policy—Assignment—Mortgage by deposit.—Policies of life insurance issued by a friendly society constituted under the Friendly Societies Acts, 1875-1896, are not assignable otherwise than by nomination according to the provisions of those Acts. Consequently, the mere deposit of a policy to secure a loan, unaccompanied by the nomination of the lender or his nominee, will not create a valid charge on the policy moneys.—REDMAN, RE, WARTOR v. REDMAN, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 70 L. J. Ch. 669.

GAME:—

"Entering or being, in the daytime, upon any land in search or pursuit of game"—Game Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32), s 30.—By section 30 of the Game Act, 1831, it is unlawful for any person to trespass by entering or being, in the daytime, upon any land in search or pursuit of game.

The appellant, having been convicted under this section, on appeal contended that the conviction was bad, because he went upon the land for the purpose of raising a question of right, and no evidence was offered that he had gone upon the land with intent to search for or kill game at the time.

Held (dismissing the appeal), that the justices were right in convicting, and that the words "search" and "pursuit" in the section could not be limited to searching and pursuing with an intent to kill at the time.—STIFF v. BILLINGTON, K.B.D., 486; 84 L. T 467.

GAMING:—

1. Betting—Advertisement of house kept for purpose of receiving money in connection with betting—Betting House Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), s. 7—Betting House Act, 1874 (37 Vict. c. 15), s. 3.—By an agreement entered into by the plaintiff and the defendants the defendants agreed to print and publish a certain paper on the plaintiff's behalf every week on certain terms and conditions, one of which was that they were only to be called on to fulfil the contract if the said newspaper contained matter which was neither libellous nor illegal. The plaintiff called upon the defendants to print and publish for circulation in England with the said newspaper and as part of it an advertisement relating to a "coupon competition"—that is to say, of a promise by the plaintiff to pay a sum of money to such persons as should correctly guess the result of a certain horse-race then shortly about to be run, and should write their guesses upon certain forms, called "coupons," which were issued with each number of the newspaper, and should return the coupons so filled up to the plaintiff's office in Holland, together with the sum of one penny in respect of each guess made. The defendants refused to print the advertisement, contending that the publication was illegal and constituted an offence against the Betting Acts, 1853 (section 7) and 1874 (section 3). The plaintiff thereupon brought an action to recover damages from the defendants for breach of contract.

Held, that the publication of the said advertisement did not constitute an offence under section 7 of the Betting House Act, 1853, or section 3 of the Betting House Act, 1874, as the advertisement did not relate to a house to which persons physically resorted for the purpose of betting.—STODDART v. ARGUS PRINTING CO., K.B.D., 666; [1901] 2 K. B. 470; 70 L. J. K. B. 711.

2. Betting—Criminal law—Keeping an office for receiving money in consideration of promise to pay on the event of a horse-race—"Coupon competition"—Betting Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), s. 1.—The defendant was the proprietor of a newspaper published at her office, and sold for one penny, each number of which contained advertisements of a "coupon competition" and a number of forms or coupons to be cut out and used by intending competitors and sent to the defendant's office. Each competitor inserted in one or more coupons the names of horses which he thought likely to win or obtain places in a specified race or races, and a large money prize was paid by the defendant, after the races had been run, to the competitors whose guesses were correct. One coupon could be filled up and sent in free of charge by any purchaser of the newspaper; with each other coupon a penny stamp had to be sent to the defendant's office. Large sums were received by the defendant in this way.

The defendant was convicted upon an indictment under section 1 of the Betting Act, 1853, charging her with having kept an office for the purpose of receiving money as the consideration for a promise to pay money on an event or contingency of or relating to a horse-race.

Held, that whether or not the transaction amounted to betting the defendant had committed an offence under the section and was rightly convicted.—REG. v. STODDART, C.C.R., 173; [1901] 1 Q. B. 177; 70 L. J. Q. B. 189; 83 L. T. 538.

3. Betting—Money paid in respect of gaming contract—Money advanced as partnership capital for purpose of betting—Gaming Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 9), s. 1.—V. advanced £500 for the purpose of working a scheme invented by the defendant for making money by backing horses. The working of the scheme was left to the defendant, who undertook to be responsible for half the amount advanced. Profits were to be divided between V. and the defendant. The whole sum having been lost, the defendant gave V. promissory notes for £250. An action on the notes was brought by the trustee in V.'s bankruptcy. At the trial the judge found that the sum of £500 was in the nature of partnership capital.

Held, that the sum advanced by V. was money paid "in respect of" a gaming contract, and that, therefore, by reason of the Gaming Act, 1892, the action was not maintainable.

Tatam v. Reeve, 41 W. R. 174, [1893] 1 Q. B 44, approved. — SAFFERY v. MAYER, C.A., 54; [1901] 1 Q. B. 11; 70 L. J. Q. B. 145; 83 L. T. 304.

4. Betting—Principal and agent—Bets lost but unpaid by agent—"Any sum of money paid."—The words "any sum of money paid" in section 1 of the Gaming Act, 1892, are not confined to money actually paid, but apply also to money to be paid; and a betting agent who has lost, but not paid, bets made on behalf of his principal cannot maintain an action against his principal to recover his unpaid losses or to indemnify him against his liability to pay them. — LEVY v. WARBURTON, K.B.D.; 70 L. J. K. B. 708.

See also Bankruptcy, 3.

GAS.—See Nuisance, 1.

HACKNEY CARRIAGE.—See Local Government, 6.

HIGHWAY:—

1. Dangerous locality—Removal of protecting fence—Misfeasance—Liability of highway authority—Local government.—A fence had been formerly erected, by the then existing highway authority, to protect the public using a highway which was dangerous, owing to its liability to be flooded by a stream that ran by the side of the road. The stream was diverted, but the ditch where the former bed of the stream had been was still liable to be filled in time of flood, and the water then flowed over the road. After the fence had been in existence for a number of years, the defendants, adopting the report of their surveyor that the fence was in bad repair, that it was no longer necessary, and that all that was required was the erection of a short length at each end, ordered that the work should be done. The fence was removed, and three weeks later and before any new fence had been put up the road was flooded. A man driving along the road drove into the ditch and was drowned. In an action by his administratrix to recover damages for his death, the jury found that the removal of the fence under the circumstances, and in the way in which it had been done, was inconsistent with reasonable regard for the safety of persons using the road. Judgment was given for the plaintiff. On appeal, Held, that the defendants were liable.—WHYLER v. BINGHAM RURAL COUNCIL, C.A.; [1901] 1 Q. B. 45; 70 L. J. Q. B. 207; 83 L. T. 652.

2. Dedication to public use—Obstructions—Embayments—User by public—Cleaning and repairing by highway authority—Evidence of dedication—Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 34), s. 69.—A building erected in 1869 upon land leased from the corporation of L., who were the owners of the freehold, was built with recessed windows or embayments on the ground floor and the main wall of the building on either side projected beyond the embayments, and overhung them above the windows, the embayments being some eleven inches deep. In 1899 the tenant of the house reconstructed these windows so as to cause them to project three inches beyond the main wall, and so as to fill up the embayments. During the period from 1869 till the reconstruction in 1899, the paving of the embayments was not distinguishable or marked off from the paving of the footway, and had been cleaned and repaired by the corporation, as the highway authority, at the same time as the paving of the footway, and the public were in the habit without any objection by any lessee of entering upon and passing in and out of the embayments, the windows of which were used for the exhibition of shop goods.

Upon an information against the tenant for causing an obstruction in the street by building so as to fill up the embayments,

Held, that neither the user by the public nor the fact that the paving of the embayments was not marked off from the paving of the footway, and was cleaned and repaired by the corporation as highway authority was any evidence of the dedication of the embayments to the public use as part of the highway, and that therefore no obstruction had been committed.—PIGGOTT v. GOLDSTRAW, Q.B.D.; 84 L. T. 94.

3. "Drain"—Pouring water from highway on to adjoining land—Easement—Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), s. 67.—A pipe whereby rain-water from the surface of a highway is poured on adjoining land is not a "drain" such as is contemplated by section 67 of the Highway Act, 1835.

A right of way over a highway is not a dominant tenement to which an easement to pour rain-water through a pipe from the highway on to adjoining land can be attached. — ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. COPELAND, K.B.D., 489; [1901] 2 K. B. 101; 70 L. J. K. B. 512; 84 L. T. 562.

4. Land alongside road—Evidence of user—Presumption.—An uninclosed strip of land, of varying breadth, adjoined a highway for the space of 300 yards. The road authorities had made no use of it, but the owner of the adjoining land had, as far as living memory went, exercised acts of ownership over it.

Held, that there was no presumption of dedication of the strip to the public; and even if there had been any such presumption, it was rebutted by the surrounding circumstances and by the evidence. —BELMORE v. KENT COUNTY COUNCIL, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 459; [1901] 1 Ch. 873; 70 L. J. Ch. 501; 84 L. T. 523.

5. Light locomotive—Excessive speed of driving on highway—"Having regard to the traffic on the highway"—Motor tricycle—Light Locomotives on Highways Order, 1896, art. 4 (1).—Article 4 (1) of the Light Locomotives on Highways Order, 1896, provides that a person driving or in charge of a light locomotive when used on a highway shall "not drive the light locomotive at any speed greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic on the highway."

Held, that, in order to constitute an offence under this section, it is not necessary to prove that any vehicle or person was interrupted, interfered with, incommoded, or affected by the speed at which the accused was driving the light locomotive.—SMITH v. BOON, K.B.D., 480; 84 L. T. 593.

6. New or substituted highway—Formalities required by Highway Act, 1835—Presumption of compliance with, after lapse of time—Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), ss. 23, 84, 85.—Upon the hearing by a court of summary jurisdiction, under section 8 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, of objections to the proposals of an urban sanitary authority as to works to be executed by them under the Act, on the ground that the street was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, it appeared that in 1842, pursuant to a resolution of the vestry, a new road was substituted for an older public highway repairable by the inhabitants at large; the old highway was then closed, and from that date the new road had been used by the public as a highway. Upon one occasion the new road had been repaired by the surveyor for the parish, though it was uncertain whether in so doing he had acted in his capacity of surveyor. No evidence was given that the formalities required by section 23 of the Highway Act, 1835, in the case of new highways, or by sections 84 and 85 in the case of substituted highways, had been complied with.

Held, that there was evidence upon which the justices might properly find that the new road was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, and that the formalities required by the Highway Act, 1835, might after the lapse of time be presumed to have been complied with.—LEIGH URBAN COUNCIL v. KING, K.B.D.; [1901] 1 K. B. 747; 70 L. J. K. B. 313; 83 L. T. 777.

7. Obstruction—Indictment—Practice—Verdict of acquittal — Motion to stay entry of judgment—Misdirection.—Where a verdict of not guilty has been returned upon an indictment for an obstruction to a highway, the court will not order the entry of judgment to be stayed, on the ground of a misdirection of the judge before whom the indictment was tried, for the purpose of giving an opportunity for the question to be raised again upon a fresh indictment.

Rex v. Inhabitants of Wandsworth, 1 B. & Ald. 63, considered.—REX v. NORTH-EASTERN RAILWAY CO., K.B.D., 524; 70 L. J. K. B. 548; 84 L. T. 502.

8. Repairs—Extraordinary traffic—Person "by or in consequence of whose order" traffic has been conducted—Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), s. 23—Locomotives Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 29), s. 12, sub-section 1 (c).—The defendants, on the 2nd of March, 1898, entered into a contract with a firm of contractors to carry out for them certain building operations. On the 16th of March, 1898, they entered into another building contract with another firm. The site of both buildings was in the plaintiffs' district, and the works involved the carriage of exceptionally heavy traffic along certain roads within the plaintiffs' highway district, and they were put to extraordinary expenses in repairing them. The work under the first contract was completed on the 5th of April, 1899, and under the second contract on the 23rd of September, 1899. The writ in this action was issued on the 22nd of December, 1899.

Held, that the defendants were persons "by or in consequence of whose order" the traffic was conducted within the meaning of section 12 of the Locomotives Act, 1898, and were liable for the extraordinary expenses incurred by the plaintiffs in repairing the roads, but that the proceedings to recover the amount in respect of the damage caused in carrying out the first contract were too late, having been commenced more than six months after the completion of that contract.—EPSOM DISTRICT COUNCIL v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, Q.B.D., 302; [1900] 2 Q. B. 751; 83 L. T. 284.

9. Tramway crossing — Nuisance — Sanction of authority—Evidence—Injunction.—The soil of roads is vested in a highway authority simply to the extent necessary for the purpose of preserving and maintaining and using them as roads. A highway authority has no general power to break up a road; so that Permission given by a highway authority for a tramway to cross a highway is of no effect when in the opinion of the court the crossing is a nuisance.

Semble, otherwise, if no nuisance is proved.

The principles upon which the court proceeds to discover whether or not a nuisance has been committed on a highway explained.

Where the relators join the Attorney-General as co-plaintiffs they are entitled on proof of special damage to an injunction in their own right, although they could not have succeeded if the Attorney-General had not.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. BARKER, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 83 L. T. 345.

See also Local Government, 7; Metropolis, 7; Nuisance, 2.

INCLOSURE:—

Private road—Pasturage—Ownership of soil—User in excess of award—Prescription—Presumption of lost grant.—By an award made under an Inclosure Act of 1812 it was provided that all the grass and herbage which should from time to time grow upon all the private roads therein set out should belong to and be the property of the surveyor of the highways for the time being, to be by him let annually for the depasturing of sound and healthy sheep, but of no other cattle or stock whatever, at the best rent or rents that could reasonably be obtained for the same.

Plaintiff was the occupier of a farm, allotted under the award, on one side of a private road. Since 1846 the pasturage of this private road, along with other roads, had been let out annually pursuant to directions given at public vestry meetings, and with conditions (contrary to the restriction of the award) providing a varying limit as to the number of cattle or horses which might be grazed upon this road. Plaintiff was party to many such lettings. On a claim by him for an injunction restraining the rural district council (the successors of the surveyor of highways) from so letting or using the road,

Held, that, there having been an open and regular and unchallanged dealing with the herbage of the road in a manner and to an extent not authorized by the award, and which was apparently to the advantage of the owners and occupiers of the allotted lands, a lawful origin must be presumed from the long usage, based on a lost grant from the owner of the soil.

Held, that, having regard to the Inclosure Act, the soil of the road became vested in the owners of the adjoining allotments, subject to a right of way and to the right of herbage.

Poole v. Huskinson. 11 M. & W. 827, and Haigh v. West, [1893] 2 Q. B. 19, 41 W. R. Dig. 87, referred to.—NEAVESON v. PETERBOROUGH DISTRICT COUNCIL. Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 154; [1901] 1 Ch. 22; 70 L. J. Ch. 35; 83 L. T. 496.

INCOME TAX ACTS.—See Inland Revenue, 12-15.

INDUSTRIAL SOCIETY:—

1. Winding up—Recovery of debts from members—Lien on shares—"Set off"—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 164—Industrial and Provident Societies Act. 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 39), s. 23—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 154.—By section 23, sub-section 1, of the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893, it is provided that "all moneys payable by a member of a registered society shall be a debt due from such member to the society . . . ." and by sub-section 2 "a registered society shall have a lien on the shares of any member for any debt due to it by him, and may set off any sum credited to the member thereon in or towards the payment of such debt." An industrial society, as long as it is carrying on business, may bonâ fide avail itself of the provisions of the above sub-section 2, notwithstanding that the society is at the time in financial difficulties and is wound up within three months of such time.—GWAWR-Y-GWEITHYR INDUSTRIAL SOCIETY, RE, DOVEY v. MORGAN, K.B.D, 655; [1901] 2 K. B. 477; 70 L. J. K. B. 614; 84 L. T. 824.

See also Friendly Society, 1.

INFANT:—

1. Accumulation—Maintenance—Mansion-house—Subscription to charities.—Where a testator directs payment of an annual sum for the maintenance and education of a tenant for life, or in tail, and directs accumulation of the residue for his benefit if he shall attain full age, and, in the event of his death, on specified trusts,

The court has jurisdiction to allow the expenditure of a larger annual sum if, on the true construction of the will, there is a paramount intention which authorizes it.—WALKER, RE, WALKER v. DUNCOMBE, Ch.D. Farwell. J., 394; [1901] 1 Ch. 879; 70 L. J. Ch. 417; 84 L. T. 193.

2. Contract—Necessaries.—In the case of an infant who was entitled to an income of between £7 and £8 a week, during his minority, such things as (a) cartridges, (b) champagne, and (c) jewellery presented to a lady to whom the infant was engaged without the consent of his guardian, but who did not become his bride, will not be allowed as necessaries.—HEWLINGS v. GRAHAM, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; 70 L. J. Ch. 568; 84 L. T. 497.

3. Mortgage—Mortgagee in possession—Right to recover possession—Infants' Relief Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 62)—Building Societies Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 42), ss. 21, 38.—A mortgagor is not entitled to recover possession of land which has been taken by the mortgagee without repaying the advance, even though the mortgage was made by the mortgagor while an infant.—THURSTAN v. NOTTINGHAM BUILDING SOCIETY, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 56; [1901] 1 Ch. 88; 83 L. T. 424.

INJUNCTION.—See Divorce, 3; Highway, 9; Nuisance, 3; Practice, 22, 23; Trade Name, 2, 3; Trade Union, 1.

INLAND REVENUE:—

1. Corporation duty—Real property—"Annual value, income, or profits"—Inland Revenue Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 51), s. 11.—The Surrey County Cricket Club, an unincorporated body of persons, was possessed of real and personal property, the real property consisting of a building and land held under a lease for years, and used by them for the purposes of a cricket club. Their receipts included money paid as gate-money and other payments received from persons admitted to view the cricket matches played on the ground. The club was carried on at a profit.

Held, that the gate-money and other payments received from the public were not "annual value, income, or profits of the property" within section 11 of the Inland Revenue Act, 1885; that the annual value of the real property should be arrived at in the same way as upon an assessment of annual value made for the purposes of the property tax under Schedule A of the Income Tax Act, 1842, and that the club were entitled to include the estimated cost of repairs as a permissible deduction from that annual value.—SURREY COUNTY CRICKET CLUB, RE, K.B.D.; [1901] 2 K. B. 400.

2. Estate duty—Interest in expectancy—Sale or mortgage—Value of property passing on death of tenant for life—Deduction—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 21, sub-section 3.—The petitioner, being then a tenant in tail in remainder, by indenture executed before the date of the Finance Act, 1894, created, for good consideration, an annuity or clear yearly rent-charge, charged upon and to issue out of the settled property, with power to enforce payment by entry, distress, and sale. On the death of the tenant for life in 1896, the petitioner claimed (1) to deduct from the value of the property passing to him on the death the capitalized value of the annuity, on the ground that it represented the sale of an interest in expectancy, on which, by section 21, sub-section 3, of the Finance Act, 1894, no estate duty was payable; or (2), in the alternative, if the transaction was not a sale, but a mortgage, that, under the same section, estate duty was only payable on the value of the equity of redemption.

Held, that the transaction was not a sale, but a mortgage; and that estate duty was payable by the petitioner on the whole value of the settled property without any deduction in respect of the value of the annuity.—VERNON, RE, Q.B.D., 192; [1901] 1 Q. B. 297; 70 L. J. Q. B. 202; 83 L. T. 535.

3. Estate duty—Policy of life insurance—Settled property—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 50), ss. 1, 2, 3.—A. was tenant for life of certain estates, and B., his son, was tenant in tail in remainder. A. had effected several mortgages on his life interest to secure payment of certain debts, and he had also effected several policies on his life by way of further security. A family arrangement was entered into, under which B. concurred in the execution of a disentailing deed, and a further deed of resettlement was executed by A., B., and certain trustees. Under the said arrangement a sum of money was raised by way of mortgage on the estates to pay off A.'s incumbrances, and the aforesaid policies were assigned to the said trustees, who were to receive all moneys (if any) which should, during the life of A., become payable under any of the policies and apply the same towards the discharge of the mortgages, and A. undertook, out of the income of his life estate, to pay the premiums on the policies and the interest on the mortgage. The residue of the income was to be paid, as to two-thirds to A., and as to one-third to B. On the death of A. in 1898, the trustees received all the moneys due under the policies and paid the same to B.

Held, that, on A.'s death, B. was liable under the Finance Act, 1894, to pay estate duty on the policy moneys, they being an "interest purchased or provided by the deceased" within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 1 (d).—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. HAWKINS, Q.B.D., 320; [1901] 1 Q. B. 235; 70 L. J. Q. B. 195.

4. Estate duty—property passing on death—Devise by father to son—Death of son in lifetime of father—Payment of estate duty in respect of death of father—Liability to further estate duty in respect of death of son—Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 33—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 1, 2 (1) (a).—A father by his will devised freehold property to his son, who died in the lifetime of the father, leaving a daughter who was living at the death of the father. By virtue of section 33 of the Wills Act, 1837, the devise did not lapse, but took effect as if the son had survived the father. The son had by his will devised his residuary estate to trustees. Estate duty was duly paid on the devised freehold property as being property which passed on the death of the father.

Held, that estate duty was also payable on the devised freehold property as being property which passed on the death of the son.

Judgment of Darling and Channell, JJ. (48 W. R. 205, [1901] 1 Q. B. 372), affirmed.—SCOTT, RE, C.A., 178; [1901] 1 Q. B. 228; 70 L. J. Q. B. 66; 83 L. T. 613.

5. Estate duty—Settled property—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 1, 2 (a), and 5, sub-section 2.—A wife on her marriage settled certain funds, whereby a life interest was given to her husband followed by a life interest to herself, with an absolute reversion to herself. She predeceased her husband, and estate duty was paid on the principal value of her settled property.

Held, that by section 5, sub-section 2, of the Finance Act, 1894, upon the husband's death estate duty was not again payable on the settled funds.

Semble, that no estate duty was payable in respect of the husband's life interest.

Judgment of Rigby, L.J., in Attorney-General v. Dodington, 45 W. R. 657, [1897] 2 Q. B. 373, approved.

Decision of the Court of Appeal in Ireland, [1900] 2 Ir. R. 400, affirmed.—INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. PRIESTLEY, H.L., 657; [1901] A. C. 208; 70 L. J. P. C. 41; 84 L. T. 700.

6. Estate duty—Succession duty—Property situate abroad—Disposition by foreigner domiciled abroad—Gift to English company on trust for foreign beneficiaries—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 2—Succession Duty Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51), ss. 2, 16, 44.—A foreigner domiciled abroad, by a deed made in the English language and in English form, but executed abroad, gave to the defendants, an English company registered under the Companies Acts, and having its registered office in London, certain stocks, shares, and securities on the terms that the defendants would, during the life of the donor, permit him to receive the income thereof, and after his death would apply the said stocks, shares, and securities for the benefit of Russian Jews generally, and principally for the promotion of their emigration and settlement in North and South America and other countries, which was the object for which the company had been formed. The stocks, shares, and securities were duly transferred by direction of the donor to the account of the defendants. The defendants, under their articles of association, carried on business in Paris, but the annual general and other meetings were held in London. The defendants paid the income of the property to the donor during his life. At the date of his death the greater part of the property was situate abroad, and only a small portion in England.

Held, that, the deed being an English deed enforceable by the English courts, all the property comprised therein was property to which section 2 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853, applied; and that the defendants were therefore liable to pay estate duty and succession duty thereon.

Judgment of Ridley and Darling, JJ. (ante, p. 59, [1900] 2 Q. B. 556), affirmed.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. JEWISH COLONIZATION ASSOCIATION, C.A., 230; [1901] 1 Q. B. 123; 70 L. J. Q. B. 101; 83 L. T. 561.

7. Estate duty—Settlement estate duty—Incidence—Will—Contingent legacies and annuities—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 5, 7, 9, 14, 22—Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28), s. 19—Finance Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 10), s. 14.—A testator by his will gave certain contingent legacies and annuities, and directed that they should be primarily charged upon and payable out of his personal estate, but, if this was insufficient, he charged his real estate in aid, but not in exoneration, of the personal estate; and, after devising his real estate in strict settlement he declared that, if his residuary personal estate should be insufficient for payment of funeral and testamentary expenses, debts, legacies, and annuities, the trustees might raise the deficiency by mortgage of the real estate, but so that the annuities should be paid out of rents and profits and not by raising a capital sum to provide for the same, and he charged the residuary personalty with the payment of the legacies and annuities, and directed that the ultimate residue of the personalty was to be invested and was to follow the limitations of the real estate. The executors had paid estate duty and settlement estate duty in respect of the contingent legacies and annuities, but there was a probability that the personalty would be insufficient to pay the funeral and testamentary expenses, debts, legacies, and annuities.

Held, that the contingent legacies were to be treated as settled, and that the settlement estate duty must be borne by the legatees, as in In re Maryon-Wilson, 48 W. R. 338, [1900] 1 Ch. 565; and that, as to the annuities, the decision in Attorney-General v. Owen, [1899] 2 Q. B. 253, 47 W. R Dig. 73, applied to personalty, and therefore the annuitants must bear the proper proportion of the settlement estate duty, in accordance with the rule established in In re Parker-Jervis, Salt v. Locker, 47 W. R. 147, [1898] 2 Ch. 643.—ST. ALBANS (DUKE), RE, LODER v. ST. ALBANS, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 74; [1900] 2 Ch. 873; 69 L. J. Ch. 863.

8. Estate duty—Trust property—Income to children subject to annuity to widow—Division on widow's death—Testator died before 1894—Time when property passed—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c 30), s. 10. —A testator, who died in 1892, by his will gave his real and personal estate to trustees on trust to invest, and out of the income of the invested fund to pay an annuity to his wife and to pay the residue of the income of the said trust fund during his widow's life to his eight children; and after his widow's death, if the trust fund exceeded £9,600, to pay eight-ninths of such excess to his eight children in equal shares, and the remaining one-ninth of such excess to the children of a ninth child who had predeceased him. The testator's widow died in 1900.

Held, that the testator's estate (save one-ninth of the excess above £9 600), subject to the widow's annuity, passed to his children upon his death, and that estate duty was consequently not payable on the death of the testator's widow.—TOWNSEND, RE, K B.D., 600; [1901] 2 K. B. 331; 70 L. J. K. B. 764; 84 L. T. 714.

9. Estate duty—Will—Appointed fund—Residue.—The estate duty on a fund appointed by a will made in execution of a testamentary power of appointment, must be borne by the appointed fund and not by the residue.—MADDOCK, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 70 L. J. Ch. 660.

10. Estate duty—Will—Exercise of general power of appointment—Appointed fund—General residue —Property "passing to executor as such"—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 9, sub-section 1.—Apart from any special direction by the testator a fund appointed by the testator under a general power of appointment is not property that passes to the testator's executor as such, and consequently the fund appointed and not the general residue must bear the estate duty payable in respect of such fund.

In re Treasure, 48 W. R. 696. [1900] 2 Ch. 648, and In re Maddock, (1901) W. N. 118, followed.

In re Moore. ante, p. 373, [1901] 1 Ch 691, not followed.—POWER, RE, ACWORTH v. STONE, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 678.

11. Estate duty—Will—Incidence of estate duty as between an appointed fund and residuary estate—Property passing to the executor as such—Finance Act, 1894, ss. 6 (2), 9 (1).—A fund appointed by will pursuant to a general power of appointment is property which passes to the executor as such within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1894, so that, apart from a direction to the contrary in the will, the estate duty payable in respect of the fund is payable out of the general residuary estate of the deceased rather than out of the appointed fund.

In re Treasure, 48 W. R. 696. [1900] 2 Ch. 648, not followed.—MOORE v. MOORE. Ch.D. Buckley, J., 373; [1901] 1 Ch. 691; 70 L. J. Ch. 321.

12. Income tax — Company — Profits or gains— Interest from foreign investments—Receipt in the United Kingdom—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 100), Schedule D, Fourth Case—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), s. 2, Schedule D.—An insurance society carried on their business in the United Kingdom, and, by means of local agents or managers, in foreign countries. The business was entire and indivisible, and was managed by a board of directors in London. The society possessed funds invested in foreign countries in which they did no business. The interest on these investments was either reinvested in those countries, remitted directly to other foreign countries for investment, or remitted to London. They also possessed funds invested in foreign countries in which they carried on business. The interest on these investments was either reinvested in those countries, applied in establishment and other charges in those countries, remitted direct to other foreign countries for investment or for the general purposes of the society, or remitted to London. Yearly accounts were prepared in which all the interest on investments in foreign countries was included, and out of the profits shown by the accounts a dividend was paid yearly to the shareholders. The surplus funds of the society divisible as profits were ascertained by actuarial valuation once in three years, and all the interest on investments in foreign countries was included in the triennial account.

Held, that all the interest on foreign investments was received in the United Kingdom within the meaning of the fourth case of section 100 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, and was liable to income tax under Schedule D.—GRESHAM LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY v. BISHOP, C.A.; [1901] 1 Q. B. 153; 70 L. J. Q. B. 298; 83 L. T. 654.

13. Income tax—Deductions—"Call of licences"— Necessary annual trade expense—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), s. 2, Schedule D.—Expenses incurred by brewers in applying for new and additional licences for houses owned and leased by them, including payments made to owners of public-houses for the surrender of licences in order to enable the brewers to obtain a new licence, cannot be deducted from the profits made by the brewers and assessable to income tax under Schedule D of the Income Tax Act. 1853.—SOUTHWELL v. SAVILL, K.B.D., 682; [1901] 2 K. B. 349; 70 L. J. K. B. 815.

14. Income tax—Deduction of tax from interest or annuities—"Payable out of profits or gains brought into charge to such tax"—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 8), s. 24, sub-section 3.—The London County Council raised money on loan by the creation and issue of Metropolitan Consolidated Stock, which with the dividends and sinking fund were charged on the lands, rents, and property of the council, and in addition the stockholders had the security of the rates. In the year 1897-8 the council claimed exemption from income tax on rents received by them and on interest on advances by them to other public bodies, as having been paid out "of profits or gains already brought into charge."

Held, that section 24, sub-section 3, of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, entitled them to do so, for the income tax assessed under the various schedules is one tax, and not a collection of taxes essentially distinct.

Decision of Court of Appeal (48 W. R. 294, [1900] 1 Q. B. 192) reversed.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, H.L., 686; [1901] A C. 26; 70 L. J. Q. B. 77; 83 L. T. 605.

15. Income tax—Profits accruing by reason of office —Voluntary grants by charitable fund.—A clergyman is not assessable to income tax in respect of grants made to him as a beneficed incumbent by the council of a charitable fund for providing adequate remuneration for beneficed clergy, which council reserves to itself the entire control over the apportionment of grants and the right to consider whether any such grant should be made; for such grants do not accrue to the clergyman by reason of his office within the meaning of section 146 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, Schedule E, although the holding of the office is a condition of his receiving the payment.—HERBERT v. MCQUADE, K.B.D.; 70 L. J. K. B. 725; 84 L. T. 661.

16. Inhabited house duty—Assessment—"Full and just yearly rent"—Poor rate—Licensed house—Competition of brewers—"Tied" houses—43 Geo. 3, c. 161, s. 10—48 Geo. 3, c. 55. Sched. B, r. 8—House Tax Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 36), ss. 1, 2.—In assessing premises, situated outside the metropolitan area, for inhabited house duty, regard need not be had to the poor rate assessments where such assessments are not based upon the full rental value of the premises.

In assessing a public-house for inhabited house duty, a covenant entered into by the tenant to deal exclusively with his landlords, who were a firm of brewers, for exciseable and other articles, and covenants by the tenant to pay additional rent in any year in which he should deal for those articles with persons other than the landlords, and also in any year in which his indebtedness to the landlords should exceed a certain sum, should be taken into consideration.—WALKER v. BRISLEY, GRINTER v. FLEMING, Q.B.D., 23; [1900] 2 Q. B. 735; 69 L. J. Q. B. 875; 83 L. T. 347.

17. Inhabited house duty — Blocks of shops—Buildings used partly as shops and partly for residence of staff—House Tax Acts, 1808 (48 Geo. 3, c. 55), Schedule B, r. 3, and 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 36).—The appellants appealed against an assessment made upon certain blocks of buildings used by them partly as shops and partly for the residence for their staff.

Held, dismissing the appeal, that the blocks of premises were assessable to the Inhabited House Duty as a whole because the business part of the premises communicated with the residential part, and the fact that the communication was closed at night by iron doors made no difference.—MAPLE v. WILSON, K.B.D., 670.

18. Legacy duty—Heirlooms—Person chargeable—Absolute interest—Legacy Duty Act, 1796 (36 Geo. 3, c. 52), s. 14.—A testator directed that certain chattels should be considered as heirlooms and enjoyed by the person or persons for the time being beneficially entitled to a certain mansion-house under the limitations of settlements whereby the mansion-house and certain estates were settled upon A. for life, with remainder to the eldest son of B. (who predeceased the testator) in tail male. A. and C. (B.'s eldest son) resettled the mansion-house and estates on A. for life, with remainder to C. for life, with remainders over, and assigned the chattels to the trustees of the resettlement in trust to allow them to devolve as heirlooms with the mansion-house and estates.

Held, that legacy duty became payable upon the death of A. in respect of the chattels, with the payment of which the trustees of the resettlement were chargeable, being persons having "an absolute interest therein" within the meaning of section 14 of the Legacy Duty Act, 1796.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. BRUCE, K.B.D., 519; [1901] 2 K. B. 391; 70 L. J. K. B. 767.

19. Stamp duty—Conveyance on sale—Sale of right not before in existence—Railway company—Statutory right to prevent working of minerals under railway—Payment of compensation to mine-owner—Receipt and undertaking to leave minerals unworked—Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 78—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 60.—The owners of coal lying under a railway, having been required by the railway company, under section 78 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, to leave the coal unworked, and having received compensation therefor, signed a document acknowledging the receipt of the compensation money, and undertaking to leave the coal unworked and to do all things necessary for vesting the same in the railway company.

Held, that the company was not chargeable with ad valorem stamp duty under section 60 of the Stamp Act, 1891, as the transaction between the parties was not a sale of a "right not before in existence."

Judgment of Darling and Phillimore, JJ. (48 W. R. 170, [1899] 2 Q. B. 652), affirmed.—GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, C.A., 261; [1901] 1 K. B. 416; 70 L. J. K. B. 336; 84 L. T. 183.

20. Stamp duty—Family arrangement—Conveyance on sale—Consideration—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), ss. 54, 57.—By two deeds made between B. and H. (who was the heir to B.'s unsettled estates), after reciting that H. had undertaken the payment of a mortgage on the estates and that B. was indebted to H. in certain sums, it was witnessed that in pursuance of a family arrangement B. conveyed his unsettled estates to H. subject to the mortgages, and also certain specified chattels; but power was reserved to B. and H. to cancel, alter, or make void the family arrangement at any time.

Held, that the deeds were liable to ad valorem duty as being conveyances on sale.—BRISTOL (MARQUIS) v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, K.B.D. 718; [1901] 2 K. B. 336; 70 L. J. K. B. 759; 84 L. T. 659.

21. Stamp duty—Goodwill—Agreement executed in England—Sale of foreign business—"Property situate locally out of the United Kingdom"—Stamp Act. 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 59, sub-section 1.—For the purposes of the Stamp Act, 1891, an agreement for sale executed in this country by the purchasers is made in England.

The goodwill of a business situated and carried on abroad is "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom," and an agreement executed in England for the sale of such goodwill is excepted from duty under section 59, sub-section 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891.

Decision of Court of Appeal, [1900] 1 Q. B. 310, 48 W. R. Dig. 77 (Earl of Halsbury, L.C., dissenting), affirmed.—INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. MULLER, H.L., 603; [1901] A. C. 217; 70 L. J. K. B. 677; 84 L. T. 729.

22. Stamp duty—Lease of tramways—Rent—Additional payments—Covenants "relating to the matter of the lease"—Assessability—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 77, sub-section 2; Schedule, "Lease or Tack," "Bond or Covenant."—The corporation of a borough in whom certain tramways were vested, under section 19 of the Tramways Act, 1870, and in consideration of the yearly rent and other payments reserved, demised to the appellants as lessees the right of user of the tramways for the conveyance of passengers for the term of twenty-one years, subject to the power of determination by the corporation in certain events.

The amount of rent payable, being 6½ per cent. on the cost of purchase, was to be £3,250 per annum; and the lessees were to pay, as from the date of the certificate of the Board of Trade authorizing electric traction, £100 per annum per mile in lieu of repairing the roads, with the proviso that the sum so paid should not be less than £900 per annum; and the corporation were to repair and maintain the roads. A further uncertain sum was reserved as rent in certain contingencies. The lessees were to purchase from the corporation all their electrical energy, and were to pay the corporation, as from the date of the commencement of electric traction, for the electrical energy supplied at a certain specified rate, with the proviso that the sum so paid should not be less than £4,000 per annum. There was also a provision that the rent and the minimum sum of £900 per annum, but not the minimum sum of £4,000 per annum, might be recovered by distress and entry.

The commissioners having assessed the lease to ad valorem stamp duty under "Lease or Tack," No. (3) in the Schedule to the Stamp Act. 1891, on the rent of £3,250 plus £900; to a fixed duty of 10s. in respect of the rent which was uncertain; and to ad valorem duty on the minimum sum of £4,000 a year under "Bond, Covenant," &c., in the schedule; and there being no dispute as to the ad valorem duty on the rent of £3,250 per annum and the fixed duty of 10s.,

Held, that these minimum sums of £900 and £4,000 per annum were not assessable to ad valorem stamp duty under "Bond, Covenant, or Instrument," No. (1) in the schedule.

Held, also (Phillimore, J., dissenting), that these minimum sums of £900 and £4,000 per annum were not rent and were not assessable to stamp duty as rent under "Lease or Tack." sub-head (3), but that the covenants to pay the same were "covenants relating to the matter of the lease" within section 77 (2) of the Act, and were therefore exempt from further duty.—BRITISH ELECTRIC TRACTION CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, C.A.; 84 L. T. 84.

23. Stamp duty—"Marketable security"—Bond of foreign company—"Issue" in United Kingdom—"Offered for subscription" in United Kingdom—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 82, sub-section 1 (b) (i.) (ii.).—A scheme for the re-oganisation of an American railway company was prepared, by which it was proposed that an executive committee should be formed in America to carry out the scheme, that a new company should be formed in America to take over the undertaking of the old company, and that the new company should issue new bonds in order to take up the bonds of the old company and provide further capital for the new company.

The English holders of bonds of the old company were invited by circular to accept the scheme and to deposit their bonds with named depositaries in London, in exchange for which they would subsequently receive bonds of the proposed new company.

The scheme was carried out. The new company executed and delivered to the appointed trustee in America the stipulated number of new bearer bonds, which were duly certified by the trustee and then handed to the executive committee.

The executive committee had full power to deal with any of the new bonds, by sale, pledge, or otherwise, for the purposes of the scheme and for the uses of the new company, in its discretion and without accountability to the new company.

The new bonds in question were forwarded by the executive committee to the depositaries in London, by whom they were handed to the persons who had deposited bonds of the old company.

Held, that the new bonds given to the holders of old bonds in England were neither "issued" nor "offered for subscription" in England within the meaning of section 82, sub-section 1 (b) (i.) (ii.) of the Stamp Act, 1891.—BROWN v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, C.A.; 84 L. T. 71.

24. Stamp duty—"Marketable security"—"Instrument to bearer . . . by means of which stock" is transferred—Finance Act. 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 9), ss. 4 (1) (2), 6.—A certificate for 4 per cent. debenture stock of a foreign railway certified that the appellant was the owner of a certain amount of such stock, and there was indorsed on such certificate a form of transfer signed by the appellant, the name of the transferee being left in blank. It was admitted that such certificates with the transfer in blank therein were by usage treated as sufficient for the purpose of effecting the sale in the stock markets of the United Kingdom of the stock referred to therein; but such stock was really transferable only in the books of the railway company upon production of such certificate. The debenture stock was share capital of the railway company, enabling the holder to vote at the election of directors, but it was secured or preferred under a trust deed which enabled the holders of the debenture stock, if the interest on their stock was not duly paid, to take the management of the railway out of the hands of the directors and vest it in a finance committee elected by themselves.

Held, that the certificate as indorsed was a marketable security within section 4 (1) of the Finance Act. 1899.—NOAKES v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D.; 83 L. T. 714.

25. Stamp duty—"Property," interest in—Sale of benefit of contract—Agreement with regard to land situate out of United Kingdom—Property not situate out of the United Kingdom—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 59, sub-section 1.—By a contract dated the 25th of January. 1899, a foreigner resident in Roumania undertook to transfer to F. or his nominees a certain quantity of land, suitable for the erection of a sugar factory, to be situated in a certain locality in Roumania, but the exact situation of which was to be selected by F. or his nominees; he further undertook to procure a certain quantity of land in the same locality, and to cultivate thereon in a certain manner beetroot, which he was to supply for the purposes of the sugar factory at fixed prices.

By an agreement under seal dated the 14th of April, 1899, made in England, the benefit of the contract of the 25th of January, 1899, was sold to an English company.

Held, that the benefit of the contract of the 25th of January, 1899, was "property" within the meaning of section 59, sub-section 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891, and that it was not within the exception therein contained as being "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom"; and that an ad valorem duty was therefore payable on the agreement of the 14th of April, 1889.—DANUBIAN SUGAR FACTORIES (LIMITED) v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS., C.A.; [1901] 1 Q. B. 245; 70 L. J. Q. B. 211; 84 L. T. 101.

26. Stamp duty—Railway company—Increase of nominal share capital—Conversion of stock—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 113.—The Midland Railway Co., in pursuance of a special Act, converted certain rent-charge stock and certain preference stock into stock of an increased nominal amount chargeable with interest at a correspondingly lower rate, and converted their ordinary stock into preferred and deferred ordinary stock, the nominal amount of both the preferred and deferred stock being the same as the nominal amount of the original ordinary stock.

Held, that the increase in the nominal amount of the stock of the company was an "increase of the amount of nominal share capital" within the meaning of section 113 of the Stamp Act, 1891.

Judgment of Ridley and Darling, JJ. (ante, p. 138, [1900] 2 Q. B. 353), affirmed.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. MIDLAND RAILWAY CO., C.A., 243; [1901] 1 Q. B. 220; 70 L. J. Q. B. 254; 84 L. T. 15.

27. Stamp duty—Settlement—Instrument of appointment—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 6, sub-sections 1, 2; First Schedule, "Settlement"—Exemption.—By a deed of settlement dated the 26th of June, 1895, the settlor granted to trustees certain funds, and by a deed dated the 12th of December, 1896, certain other funds, upon trust for his five children, but so nevertheless that the share of each child should be held by the trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to such child during his or her life, and after his or her death upon trust for such one or more of the others as such child should by will appoint, and in default of appointment for the other children in equal shares. It was further provided in the deed that the trustees should have power, on or subsequent to the marriage of any of the children, to revoke the trusts of the settlement and to declare, as they thought fit, new trusts by way of resettlement for the benefit of such child, or any wife or husband of such child, or such child's children or remoter issue, or the next-of-kin of such child, but not in favour of any other person or persons, and to transfer the funds to the trustees of such resettlement. These deeds were stamped with ad valorem duty as settlements.

By two deeds both dated the 10th of April, 1899, the trustees of the settlements of the 26th of June, 1895, and the 12th of December, 1896, revoked the trusts of those settlements so far as they concerned the share of C. E. H. R., one of the children, who was then about to be married, and declared that such share should, from and after the solemnization of the intended marriage, be held upon trust to pay the income thereof to C. E. H. R. during his life, and after his decease to transfer such share to the trustees of the marriage settlement of C. E. H. R., to be held by them upon the trusts declared in the marriage settlement. Each of these deeds were stamped with a duty of ten shillings.

By the marriage settlement, a deed of even date with the two last-mentioned deeds, it was provided that after the death of C. E. H. R. the trustees of the settlement should stand possessed of his share of the funds comprised in the settlements of the 26th of June, 1895, and the 12th of December, 1896, upon the trusts of the settlement, which were, as regards the husband's fund, to pay the income to the intended wife during her life, and after her death upon trust for the children or remoter issue of the intended marriage as the intending husband and wife jointly, or the survivor of them, should appoint, and in default of appointment in trust for the children in equal shares.

Held, that the marriage settlement was not as regards the share of C. E. H. R. in the funds comprised in the settlements of the 26th of June, 1895, and the 12th of December, 1896, exempt from the payment of settlement duty, either under the exemption under the heading "Settlement" in the schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, or under section 106, sub-sections 1 or 2, of the Act.—HAMILTON-RUSSELL v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, K.B.D., 569; [1901] 2 K. B. 342; 70 L. J. K. B. 715; 84 L. T. 716.

INSURANCE:—

1. Bullion—Seizure by government of assured's country—Subsequent declaration of war—Insurance of property of enemy.—Gold bullion, the property of a company registered and carrying on business in the Transvaal, was insured at Lloyd's during transit from the Transvaal to the United Kingdom by a policy which covered the usual risks of capture and detention. The gold, while in transit, was seized on the 2nd of October by the order of the Transvaal Government. At that date negotiations were proceeding between this country and the Transvaal which might result in war. On the 9th of October the Transvaal Government addressed an ultimatum to the British Government and declared war on the 11th of October. In an action on the policy, it having been agreed that the case was to be dealt with as if the war was over,

Held, by A. L. Smith, M.R., and Romer, L.J., Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting, that it was not contrary to public policy to allow the contract of insurance to be enforced, and that the underwriters were liable.

Judgment of Mathew, J. (48 W. R. 619, [1900] 2 Q. B. 339), affirmed.—DRIEFONTEIN CONSOLIDATED MINES v. JANSON, C.A., 660; [1901] 2 K. B. 419.

2. Life—Life assurance company—Grant of annuities in connection with tea dealing business—Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 61), ss. 2, 3.—N. & Co., tea dealers, in order to promote the sale of their tea, offered to every woman who should have become a widow since Christmas, 1897, and who since that date should have purchased not less than a specified quantity of tea per week for the last five consecutive weeks previously to her becoming a widow, a pension payable as long as she remained a widow, and they offered a similar pension to every woman who became a widow previously to Christmas, 1897, or previously to her commencing to purchase N. & Co.'s tea, provided she should have purchased a specified quantity of tea per week for ten years. Cards were issued to women who desired to qualify for a pension at a charge of 1d. The holder of a card entered the purchases of tea made by her, and the entries were checked from time to time by N. & Co.'s manager. Records of the purchases were also kept in N. & Co.'s books. By a trust deed N. & Co. undertook to pay to trustees a proportion of their profits for the purpose of forming a fund for the payment of this pension.

Held, upon these facts, that justices were justified in finding that N. & Co. carried on the business of "granting annuities upon human life," and were a life assurance company within the meaning of the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870.—NELSON v. BOARD OF TRADE, K.B.D., 590; 84 L. T. 565.

3. Marine—"Actual collision with another vessel"—Fouling anchor in bed of river attached to ship—Liability of insurance corporation under policy.—An insurance of a tug against damage arising from actual collision with another vessel, wharf, mooring, pier, or similar structure,"

Held to cover damage caused to the tug by striking upon an anchor in the bed of the river attached by a length of chain to a vessel.—MARGETTS v. OCEAN ACCIDENT CORPORATION, K.B.D., 669; 70 L. J. K. B. 762.

4. Marine—"Advances"—Security of freight—Freight payable pro rata—Insurance against total loss only—Construction of policy.—The master of an Italian ship at Pensacola obtained from the plaintiffs an advance for disbursements, giving as security a document by which he promised to pay £760 ten days after the arrival of the ship at Southampton, and pledged the ship and her freight. The plaintiffs effected an insurance with the defendants upon "advances valued £775" from Pensacola to Southampton, and expressed to be "free of all average." The ship was lost at the Azores but the cargo was saved, and by Italian law, subject to which the contract of affreightment was made, £790 freight pro rata was paid.

Held, that as there had not been a total loss of the freight, and therefore not a total loss of the charge on freight, the plaintiffs could not recover on the policy.—PRICE v. MARITIME INSURANCE CO., C.A., 645; [1901] 2 K. B. 412; 70 L. J. K. B. 780.

5. Marine—General average—Ship and cargo belonging to same owner—Sacrifice of mast—Liability of underwriters on cargo.—In the case of an action on a policy of marine insurance on the cargo of a ship to recover a general average loss incurred by the cutting away of the mainmast under circumstances constituting a general average sacrifice, the fact that the vessel and the cargo both belonged to the plaintiffs is no defence to the action.

The Brigella, [1898] P. 189, 41 W. R. Dig. 92, dissented from.—MONTGOMERIE v. INDEMNITY MUTUAL MARINE INSURANCE CO., Q.B.D., 221; [1901] 1 Q. B. 147; 70 L. J. Q. B. 45; 84 L. T. 57.

6. Marine—Ship—Valued policy—Salvage and general average contribution—Real value of ship—Liability of underwriters.—A ship was insured by a policy for £33,000, and was valued in the policy at £33,000. During the currency of the policy salvage services were rendered and general average expenses were incurred. For the purpose of the salvage award, and in making up an average statement, the value of the ship was taken to be £40,000.

Held, that the underwriters on the policy were only liable to pay to the owners 33-40ths of the amount due from the ship for salvage and general average.—BALMORAL STEAMSHIP CO. v. MARTEN, Q.B.D., 137; [1900] 2 Q. B. 748; 83 L. T. 282.

7. Marine—War risks—Blockade of port of destination—Ship returning to port of loading—Liability of underwriter for expenses.—The plaintiffs effected a policy of insurance with the defendants upon 810 bags of rice by a vessel from Liverpool to any port in Cuba. The policy was expressed to be against "all consequences of . . . hostilities or warlike operations." The vessel sailed from Liverpool to Havana, and in the course of the voyage war was declared, and hostilities begun between the United States and Spain, and Havana was blockaded. On learning this at a port of call the master, under powers conferred on him by the bill of lading, refused to proceed with the voyage, and returned to Liverpool. The plaintiffs paid the freight and incurred other expenses.

Held, that the defendants were not liable on the policy as the plaintiffs' loss was due to a proper exercise by the master of his discretion.—NICKELS v. LONDON GENERAL INSURANCE CO., Q.B.D.; 70 L. J. Q. B. 29.

See also Sale of Goods, 2.

JOINT TENANCY:—

Settlement—Trustees—Tenancy in common—Assignment—Commensurate estates, legal and equitable—Merger.—A leasehold property settled by a testator on his two daughters in equal shares as tenants in common was, at their request, assigned by the trustee to them as joint tenants for the residue of the lease, they entering into a joint covenant with him to pay the rent, &c., and to indemnify him. One of the daughters having died.

Held, that the assignment created a joint tenancy, the original tenancy in common not raising a presumption against the merger of the equitable estate of such tenancy in common in the legal estate; the entirety, therefore, belonged to the surviving daughter.

The rule that one person cannot be trustee for himself (Selby v. Alston, 3 Ves. 339) applies also to a case of two or more absolute owners.—SELOUS, RE, THOMSON v. SELOUS, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 440; [1901] 1 Ch. 921; 70 L. J. Ch. 402; 84 L. T. 318.

See also Will, 29.

JUSTICES:—

1. Certiorari—Confirming authority, order of—Justices—Disqualification—Bias, likelihood of.—The Corporation of Sunderland having, for the purpose of a street improvement, purchased certain premises licensed for the sale of intoxicating liquors, an agreement was entered into between the corporation and a brewery company, by which the company agreed to pay to the corporation a sum of money in the event of a licence being granted to the company for the sale of intoxicating liquors on certain premises belonging to them, and the corporation agreed to close the before-mentioned licensed premises, and not to make, or allow to be made, any application for a renewal of the licence in respect of them. Certain justices for the borough, who were also members of the borough council, had taken an active part in the council in support of the proposal that the before-mentioned agreement should be entered into by the corporation. These justices subsequently sat on the hearing of an application to the licensing committee on behalf of the brewery company for a licence in respect of their before-mentioned premises, which was granted. On the application to the confirming authority under the Licensing Act, 1872, for a confirmation of the grant of the licence, the same justices again sat to hear the application, which was granted. A rule nisi having been obtained for a certiorari to bring up and quash the order of the confirming authority on the ground of bias on the part of the before-mentioned justices, the Divisional Court discharged the rule on the authority of Reg. v. Stockport Justices, 60 J. P. 552.

Held, that a certiorari would lie to bring up the order of the confirming authority; and that, there being a real likelihood of bias on the part of the justices, the writ ought to be issued. The appeal was therefore allowed.—REX v. SUNDERLAND JUSTICES, C.A.; [1901] 2 K. B. 357.

2. Justices' clerk—Power to appoint—Payment of salary—Fines and fees payable to county treasurer—Borough without separate commission of the peace—Justices' Clerks Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 43), s. 5—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 154, 159.—Courts of petty sessions cannot be held for a borough without a separate commission of the peace except as courts for the petty sessional division in which the borough is situate.

A separate clerk cannot be appointed by the justices usually acting in a borough in which petty sessions are so held, but the justices of the petty sessional division may appoint a separate clerk in respect of each place appointed for holding petty sessions in the division, under section 5 of the Justices' Clerks Act, 1877.

The salary of every clerk so appointed is payable by the county council; and the unappropriated fines and fees must be paid to the county treasurer.

—HUNTINGDON CORPORATION v. HUNTINGDON COUNTY COUNCIL, K.B.D.; [1901] 2 K. B. 257; 70 L. J. K. B. 755.

3. Licensing law—Conviction—Continuing offence—Averment of commission of offence on different days.—Motion ex parte, on behalf of B., the licensed occupier of a public-house, for a certiorari to bring up to be quashed a conviction of the said B. for having, on the 26th, 28th, 29th and 31st days of January, and the 1st, 4th, 5th and 6th days of February, 1901, permitted his premises to be used as a brothel, contrary to section 15 of the Licensing Act, 1872. The objection to the conviction was that it was bad on the face of it as being one conviction for eight separate offences committed upon eight separate and discontinuous days, whereas section 10 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, provides that every information "shall be for one offence only and not for two or more offences."

Held, that, notwithstanding that the days mentioned in the conviction were not continuous, the offence stated was one continuing offence, and that the conviction was good.—BURNBY, EX PARTE, K.B.D.; [1901] 2 K. B. 458; 70 L. J. K. B. 739.

4. Unsound meat—Exposure of for sale—Aiding and abetting exposure—Negligence—Sufficiency for conviction—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 5—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 117.—Negligence on the part of a veterinary surgeon in making an examination and giving a certificate that meat which is in fact unsound is sound and healthy is not of itself sufficient to justify a conviction against the veterinary surgeon for aiding and abetting the exposing of the unsound meat for sale although such negligence in fact causes the exposure of the meat.—CALLOW v. TILLSTONE, Q B.D.; 83 L. T. 411.

See also Married Woman, 4-6.

LANDLORD and TENANT:—

1. Agricultural holding—Compensation for improvements—Retrospective effect of statute—Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 62)—Market Gardeners Compensation (Scotland) Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 22), s. 4.—The Market Gardeners Compensation (Scotland) Act, 1897, is not retrospective, and does not entitle tenants under leases current at the commencement of the Act to compensation in respect of market garden improvements executed prior to the commencement of the Act.

Decision of Court of Session, [1900] 2 F. 1140.—SMITH v. CALLANDER, H.L.; [1901] A. C. 297; 70 L. J. P. C. 53; 84 L. T. 801.

2. *Distraint of patented article—Sale—*2 & 3 Will. & Mary, c. 5. s. 1—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 16—Infringement of patent—Injunction.—A patentee's right is distinct from the right of property in a chattel.

On a sale by a landlord under a distress, a purchaser only acquires such a chattel interest as the landlord could and did seize.

It is essential to a distress that the property distrained should be capable of physical possession.

A patent right is not a chose in possession. A chose in action is incapable of manual seizure.—BRITISH MUTOSCOPE, &c., CO. v. HOMER, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 277; [1901] 1 Ch. 671; 70 L. J. Ch. 279; 84 L. T. 26.

3. Fixtures—Removable fixtures—Fruit trees—Glasshouses—Compensation—Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 61), ss. 3, 34, 54, 55, 60—Market Gardeners Compensation Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. 27), ss. 3, 4, 6.—Where a market gardener has erected glasshouses for the purposes of his trade he may, in the absence of a covenant in his lease to the contrary, remove them as trade fixtures at the end of his tenancy.

Where a clause in a lease gives power to the tenant to convert meadow-land into an orchard, such a clause constitutes the consent in writing of the landlord required by section 3 of the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, and entitles the tenant to claim compensation for orchard trees planted by him.

If the said Act is excluded by the lease, such exclusion is good as regards section 34 of the Act, and is not, to that extent, hit by section 55.

Section 4 of the Market Gardeners Compensation Act, 1895, gives no right to compensation except in respect of improvements made after the Act.—MEARS v. CALLENDER, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 584; 70 L. J. Ch. 621; 84 L. T. 618.

4. Lease, construction of—Covenant to pay taxes, &c.—Under a demise of premises for sixteen years the lessee covenanted that he would "pay and discharge all taxes, rates, including sewers and main drainage assessments, and impositions whatsoever which now are, or which at any time or times hereafter may during the continuance of the said term hereby granted, be taxed or rated, assessed, charged or imposed upon or in respect of the said premises or any part thereof, on the landlord, tenant, or occupier of the same premises by authority of Parliament or otherwise howsoever (landlord's property tax and tithe only excepted)." There was no covenant to repair on either side.

Held, that expenses incurred by the landlord in complying with a notice of the sanitary inspector to abate a nuisance by the execution of structural alterations on the premises were not expenses which he was entitled to charge to the lessee under the covenant.—FOULGER v. ARDING, K.B.D., 442; [1901] 2 K. B. 151; 70 L. J. K. B. 580; 84 L. T. 467.

5. Lease to company of public-house—Condition for re-entry on liquidation—Forfeiture—Underlessee—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 14—Conveyancing Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 13), s. 4—Waiver.—A voluntary winding up by a solvent company for the purpose of amalgamating with another company works a forfeiture under a condition for re-entry on liquidation.

On forfeiture of the head lease the court has power, under section 4 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, in granting relief to an underlessee, to vary (even by way of increase) the amount of rent reserved by the underlease, and will direct an inquiry for that purpose.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (48 W. R. 443), affirmed.—EWART v. FRYER, C.A., 145; [1901] 1 Ch. 499; 70 L. J. Ch. 138; 83 L. T. 551.

6. Lease—Lease of house—Collateral warranty as to condition of drainage—Right of action for breach of warranty.—An action lies for breach of a collateral warranty, on the granting of a lease of a house, that the drainage is in good condition.—DE LASALLE v. GUILFORD, C.A., 467; [1901] 2 K. B. 215; 70 L. J. Ch. 533; 84 L. T. 549.

7. Lease—Lease of theatre—Covenant not to assign—Grant of right to supply refreshments—Breach of covenant.—The lessee of a theatre covenanted "not to assign, demise, or otherwise part with the indenture" of lease, "or any estate or interest therein," without the licence of the lessor. Subsequently the lessee granted to a third person the free and exclusive licence and right to use the refreshment rooms and bars in the theatre.

Held, that the lessee had not assigned any estate or interest in the premises so as to give rise to any breach of his covenant.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (48 W. R. 360), affirmed. DALY v. EDWARDES, C.A., 244; 83 L. T. 548.

8. Lease—Surrender—Possession of old lease and counterpart.—Where a lease is surrendered and a new lease for the same property is granted, the lessor cannot require the lessee to hand the old lease over to him, nor can the lessee demand possession of the counterpart of the old lease.—KNIGHT v. WILLIAMS, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 427; [1901] 1 Ch. 256; 70 L. J. Ch. 92; 83 L. T. 730.

9. Lease—Underlease—Covenant by sub-lessee on obtaining extension from freeholder to grant new lease—Covenant running with land—Perpetuity—32 Hen. 8, c. 34, s. 2.—A covenant by an underlessee to grant a new lease on obtaining an extension from the freeholder is not strictly a covenant running with the land, and is not an exception from the rule against perpetuities.

The statute 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, s. 2, applies to a reversion which is vested in the covenantor at the time he enters into the covenant.

Held, that a person who was an assignee of an underlessee, and who had acquired a new lease from the freeholder, was not bound by the covenant to grant a new lease entered into by the underlessee—MULLER v. TRAFFORD, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 132; [1901] 1 Ch. 54; 70 L. J. Ch. 72.

10. Licence—Revocation—Notice—Agreement—Advertising station—Tenancy from year to year.—By an agreement in writing the defendant agreed to let the plaintiff erect a hoarding upon the forecourt of a cottage and to allow him the use of a gable end for a bill-posting station at a yearly rent payable on the usual quarter-days from the then ensuing quarter-day.

Held, that this was not a tenancy from year to year, but a licence revocable at will on reasonable notice, and that a quarter's notice terminating at the end of a year of the currency of the agreement was a reasonable notice.—WILSON v. TAVENER, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 578; 70 L. J. Ch. 263; 84 L. T. 48.

11. Mortgagor in possession—Breach of covenant by lessee—Ejectment—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-section 5—Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 10.—A mortgagor in possession of land subject to a lease is not entitled, by section 25, sub-section 5, of the Judicature Act, 1873, to sue for re-entry on breach of covenants by the lessee.—MATTHEWS v. USHER, C.A., 40; [1900] 2 Q. B. 535; 69 L. J. Q. B. 856; 83 L. T. 353.

12. Parol agreement to rent furnished flat—Payment of one week's rent in advance—Before entry defendant repudiates agreement—Part performance—Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4.—The defendant verbally agreed to hire the plaintiff's flat for thirteen weeks at £4 10*s.* a week, and paid the first week's rent in advance, but in fact never took possession.

Held, in an action to recover rent for the full period, that the payment of one week's rent in advance on a parol agreement was not such a part performance as would take the case out of the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, and that the action could not be maintained.—THURSBY v. ECCLES, Q.B.D., 281; 70 L. J. Q. B. 91.

See also Bankruptcy, 14-16; Company, 36.

LANDS CLAUSES ACTS:—

1. Charity—Compulsory purchase of lands—Payment into court—Costs of investment—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), ss. 69, 76, 80.—Where a corporation acquired, under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, compulsory powers for the purchase of lands owned by a charity—the legal estate in the lands being vested in the official trustee—and after arbitration deposited the purchase-money in court, Held, that the corporation must pay the costs of the investment of the purchase-money.—LEEDS GRAMMAR SCHOOL, RE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 120; [1901] 1 Ch. 228; 70 L. J. Ch. 89; 83 L. T. 499.

2. Common—Extinction of commonable rights—Land taken for public undertaking—Compensation—Apportionment—Machinery provided by Acts—Jurisdiction of court—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 104—Inclosure of Land Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 97), ss. 15, 16, 17.—Action by a person as commoner against committees of commoners claiming moneys in their hands received from a local body as compensation for extinction of commonable rights. The defendants objected to the jurisdiction of the court, and desired to proceed under section 104 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, which empowers committees to apportion compensation moneys among those interested, sections 15, 16, and 17 of the Inclosure of Land Act, 1854, which empowers committees, if they cannot satisfactorily apportion, to apply to the Inclosure Commissioners to call meetings and award compensation as therein set out, and other Acts of Parliament.

Held, that, machinery being provided by the above sections for the determination of claims, the court had no jurisdiction now to interfere, and that the action must be dismissed.—RICHARDS v. DE WINTON, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 84 L. T. 831.

3. Compensation—Capital moneys—Ecclesiastical law—Application of capital money—Repairs to chancel—Parliamentary costs—Jurisdiction.—The court has jurisdiction to order purchase-money for a churchyard, taken compulsorily under statutory powers, to be applied towards the repairs of the chancel of the church, and also towards payment of the rector's Parliamentary costs.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, RE, PENNINGTON, EX PARTE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 84 L. T. 808.

4. Compensation—Interest in land—Taken or injuriously affected—Right of lessee of minerals to sink pits—Reasonable approval of lessor—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 68.—The owner of land on which there was a colliery demised by lease for a term of years the colliery, with its buildings, pits, and shafts, and also the minerals in and under the adjoining land. The lease contained a proviso that the lessee might at any time during the term, on giving notice, sink a pit or pits on any part of the land the surface of which was not demised, but so that the position of such pit or pits should be subject to the reasonable approval of the lessor, his heirs or assigns. The lessor afterwards agreed to sell a portion of the surface to a railway company, and the company gave notice to the lessee to treat in respect of any interest which he might have in such portion. On the same day the lessee gave the lessor notice of his intention to sink a pit in that portion of the land.

Held, that the lessee, under the proviso in the lease, had an interest in the land taken by the company, for the loss of which he was entitled to compensation under section 68 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845.

Decision of the Divisional Court (ante, p. 29. [1900] 2 Q. B. 677) affirmed.—MASTERS v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY Co., C.A., 499; [1901] 2 K. B. 84; 70 L. J. K B. 516; 84 L. T. 515.

5. Compulsory purchase of land—Property held for term to secure annuity for lives—Cessor of term on dropping of last life—Annuitant in possession—Reversioner unknown—Investment of purchase-money—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 79.—By indenture dated the 1st of September, 1810, A. H. covenanted to pay S. H., his executors, administrators and assigns, during the lives of nine persons and the lives and life of the survivors and survivor of them, an annuity of £100, and for better securing the annuity A. H. demised certain premises to S. H. for the term of 200 years upon trust, in case default should be made in payment of the annuity, that S. H., his executors, administrators and assigns, should out of the rents and profits, or by selling, demising, or mortgaging the premises, raise sufficient to satisfy the annuity and suffer A. H., her heirs and assigns, to receive the residue of the rents and profits for their own use and benefit; provided that, after the termination of the annuity by the dropping of the last life, the trusts aforesaid should cease. Default was made in the payment of the annuity, and from 1829 to 1900 S. H. and his successors in title had been in continuous receipt of the rents of the premises, and the surplus over and above the amount of the annuity had been retained by the person for the time being entitled to the annuity without any claim on the part of any reversioner. The last life dropped on the 31st of May, 1895. In 1900 the premises were compulsorily acquired by the London County Council, who paid the purchase-money into court. Upon a petition by the successor in title of S. H. for payment out, the court declined to order the fund to be paid out, and directed it to be invested and the dividends only to be paid to the petitioner until the lapse of twelve years from the 31st of May, 1895, or further order.—HARRIS, RE, LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, EX PARTE, Ch D. Joyce, J; [1901] 1 Ch. 931; 70 L. J. Ch 432; 84 L. T. 203.

6. Notice to treat—Withdrawal of notice—Power to give fresh notice—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), ss. 18, 92, 123.—Where notice to treat for the compulsory purchase of land is given under the Lands Clauses Act, and such notice is subsequently withdrawn, a second notice to treat may be given in respect of the same property, or a part thereof.—ASHTON VALE IRON Co. v. BRISTOL CORPORATION, C.A., 295; [1901] 1 Ch. 591; 70 L. J. Ch. 230; 83 L. T. 694.

7. Practice—Costs—R. S. C., ord. 22, r. 17—Cost of interim investment—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, ss. 70, 80.—Where money has been paid into court under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and has been invested in securities authorized by R. S. C, ord. 22, r. 17, the whole of the costs of such investment must be paid by the promoters of the undertaking under section 80 of the said Act as though such securities had been expressly authorized by the Act.—GASELEE v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, Ch.D Buckley, J., 372; [1901] 1 Ch. 923; 70 L. J. Ch. 441; 84 L. T. 386.

8. Railway company—Notice to treat—Rights of landowner in respect of adjoining land.—Where land has been taken by a railway company under ordinary compulsory powers and not under a special Act, the landowner may between the time the notice to treat is given, and the time the damages are actually assessed, deal with his adjoining lands; and persons who bonâ fide thus acquire interests in such adjoining lands are not deprived of their claim to compensation for being injuriously affected by works subsequently executed, simply because the railway company have made a settlement with their vendor in respect of the land taken and the injurious affection of his other property.—MERCER v. LIVERPOOL AND SOUTH LANCASHIRE RAILWAY Co., K.B D.; 70 L. J. K. B. 775.

LAND TAX:—

Exemption—Hospitals — Land in occupation of tenants—Land Tax Act, 1797 (38 Geo. 3, c. 5) s. 25. —Any houses or lands, which on or before the 25th of March, 1693, belonged to any of the hospitals mentioned by name in section 25 of the Land Tax Act, 1797, are exempt from land tax, whether they form part of, or are appurtenant to the sites of the hospitals or not, and whether they are in the occupation of the hospitals themselves or are let on lease to tenants.—ST. THOMAS' HOSPITAL v. HUDGELL, Q.B.D.; [1901] 1 Q. B. 364; 70 L. J. Q. B. 115; 83 L. T. 677.

LAND TRANSFER ACTS. — See Executor, 2; Practice, 26; Probate, 4; Vendor and Purchaser, 11.

LEASE.—See Bankruptcy, 14-16. 33; Landlord and Tenant, 4-9; Land Clauses Acts, 4; Mortgage, 5; Settled Land, 5-7; Trustee, 9.

LIBEL:—

1. Publication—Post-card—Privileged occasion.—The defendant employed an architect to draw up a specification and to take out the quantities for certain building work. The architect instructed the plaintiff, a quantities surveyor, to take out the quantities, and these were sent to certain builders in order that they might tender for the work. The defendant, having discovered mistakes in the quantities, sent post-cards to two of the builders stating that the quantities were wrong. The quantities surveyor thereupon brought an action for libel against the defendant.

Held, that there was no publication of and concerning the plaintiff until the cards reached the builders, as the plaintiff's name was not mentioned, and there was no evidence that anyone into whose hands the cards might fall prior to reaching the builders would know to whom the statements referred; further, that, as between the defendant and the builders, the occasion was privileged; and that the mere fact that the statements were made on post-cards did not avoid that privilege.—SADGROVE v. HOLE, C.A., 473; [1901] 2 K. B. 1; 70 L. J. K. B. 455; 84 L. T. 647.

2. Slander—Words spoken of a solicitor imputing insolvency—"Money scrivener"—Imputation not upon him in his business—Words not per se actionable —No action lies in absence of proof of special damage. —Words imputing to a solicitor that he had "gone for thousands" and had "lost thousands," in the absence of proof of special damage, held not capable of bearing a meaning defamatory to the plaintiff in relation to his business or profession as a solicitor; and that there was, therefore, no case to go to the jury.—DAUNCEY v. HOLLOWAY, C.A. 546; [1901] 2 K. B. 441; 70 L. J. K. B. 695; 84 L. T. 649.

LICENSING LAW:—

1. Appeal to quarter sessions—Refusal to renew licence—Costs of licensing justices—Alehouse Act,

1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), s. 29.—Where licensing justices have been served with notice of appeal to quarter sessions against their refusal to renew a licence, and have appeared and successfully resisted the appeal, they are entitled, under section 29 of the Alehouse Act, 1828, to an order for the payment to them by the appellant of such a sum as shall, in the opinion of the court of quarter sessions, indemnify them against the costs to which they were put in consequence of the service upon them of the notice of appeal.—REG. v. WORCESTERSHIRE JUSTICES, C.A., 89; [1900] 2 Q. B. 576; 69 L. J. Q. B. 826; 83 L. T. 272.

2. General annual licensing meeting—Adjournment beyond September—Certiorari—Aggrieved person—Alehouse Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), s. 3—Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 29), s. 11.—Licensing justices, in counties other than Middlesex and Surrey, have no power to hold a meeting, or an adjourned meeting, for the purpose of hearing original applications for the grant or renewal of licences after September.

Section 11 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1870, which enables the justices to adjourn a meeting or an adjourned meeting beyond September where "the applicant for the grant or renewal of a certificate has, through inadvertence or misadventure, failed to comply with any of the requirements" of the Act, does not enable them to adjourn an application for an alehouse licence.

A brewer having licensed premises in the district within which a licence has been granted, who has opposed the grant of the licence and the order confirming the same, is a person aggrieved by such order, and is entitled to a writ of certiorari ex debito justitiæ.—REX v. GROOM, K.B.D., 484; [1901] 2 K. B. 137; 70 L. J. K. B. 636; 84 L. T. 534.

3. Licence, lapse of—Value of house—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 45.—A licence for the sale of beer had been held for a house from a date before the 10th of August, 1872, continuously down to the 10th of October, 1886, when it expired, the tenant's application for a renewal having been refused in September. On the 12th of October, 1886, a new tenant applied to the justices in special session for a transfer of the licence under 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 14.

Held, that, notwithstanding the licence had changed hands, and there had been a break in the continuity of the licence since the 10th of August, 1872, the justices could not refuse to renew the licence on the ground only that the house was not of the annual value required by section 45 of the Licensing Act, 1872, in the case of premises not licensed at the time of the passing of the Act.—IGOE v. SHANN, K.B.D., 559; 84 L. T. 656.

See also Justices, 3.

LIGHT:—

Prescription—Extent of right—User of premises—Purpose requiring extraordinary quantity of light.—The plaintiffs' windows had enjoyed the access of an extraordinary quantity of light for over twenty years; during the earlier part of that time they had been used for a business requiring ordinary light only; during the latter part and at the time of the obstruction complained of they had been used for a business requiring an extraordinary quantity of light. The defendant, by erecting a building, diminished the access of light to the windows, but left sufficient light for ordinary purposes.

Held, that the plaintiffs had no cause of action.—WARREN v. BROWN, Q.B.D., 208; [1900] 2 Q. B. 722; 83 L. T. 318.

See also Easement, 1, 2.

LIMITATION STATUTES:—

1. "Concealed fraud"—Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), s. 26—Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), s. 1.—"Concealed fraud," to bring into operation section 26 of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, must be the fraud of the person setting up the statute or of his predecessor in title.

The section does not apply where neither the person sued nor his predecessors in title were party or privy to the fraud at the time when it was perpetrated.—MCCALLUM v. MCCALLUM, C.A., 129; [1901] 1 Ch. 143; 70 L. J. Ch. 206; 83 L. T. 717.

2. Land tax—Redemption—Interest, recovery of—42 Geo. 3, c. 116, s. 123—3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 1—Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), ss. 1, 8.—The yearly sum payable, under section 123 of 42 Geo. 3, c. 116, by way of interest on the sum paid as a consideration for the redemption of land tax, is "rent" within the meaning of section 1 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874; so that an action to recover the same is barred unless it is brought within the times limited by section 1 in respect of actions to recover any land or rent.—SKENE v. COOK, K.B.D.; [1901] 2 K. B. 7; 70 L. J. K. B. 556; 84 L. T. 684.

3. Mortgage—Person claiming under a mortgage—Possession adverse to mortgagor—Real Property Limitation Acts, 1833, ss. 2, 20; 1837; 1874, s. 9.—The plaintiff, the sister of the defendant, sought to recover possession of a house which was held by their father under a lease expiring in 1922.

In 1876 the father demised and assigned this and other premises to a mortgagee for the whole term except the last day; and in 1882 he assigned all the premises to a second mortgagee for the whole term, subject to the first mortgage.

The father died on the 1st of January, 1885, having by his will bequeathed the lease to trustees in trust to secure an annuity to his widow for her life, and after her death an annuity to his daughter (the plaintiff) for her life, and subject thereto in trust for the defendant.

After the father's death the widow was allowed to reside in the house until her death in July, 1899, under circumstances which the plaintiff alleged gave her a title by possession, under the Real Property Limitation Acts, 1833 and 1874, for the remainder of the term. By her will the mother bequeathed all her property to the plaintiff, who continued to reside in the house until December, 1899, when the defendant took possession and excluded her.

In 1888 the defendant paid off the second mortgage, and in 1893 the first mortgage, and obtained a transfer of the property. In 1894 he purchased the reversion subject to the lease on the whole of the premises. It was admitted that, up to the transfer in 1893, interest upon the mortgage debts had been duly paid by the mortgagor or his assigns, and therefore within twelve years of the son taking possession.

Held (reversing the decision of Grantham, J.), that as the mortgage was not extinguished, the defendant was entitled to rely upon the Real Property Limitation Act, 1837, and to take possession as mortgagee, the mortgage having been created before the possession of the mother commenced; and further, that section 20 of the Act of 1833 did not apply.—LUDBROOK v. LUDBROOK, C.A., 465; [1901] 2 K. B. 96; 70 L. J. K. B. 552; 84 L. T. 485.

4. Mortgage—Payment of interest by person liable to the mortgagor to pay—Real Property Limitation

Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), s. 8.—The payment to the mortgagee of interest due upon the mortgage debt by a person who, as between himself and the mortgagor, is bound to make the payment, is a sufficient payment within section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, to prevent time running against the mortgagee under the statute. — BRADSHAW v. WIDDRINGTON, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 698.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT:—

1. Buildings—Bye-laws—Wooden structure—Stable—"New building"—Local Government Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c 98), s. 34.—Under the powers given by section 34 of the Local Government Act, 1858, a local board made a bye-law that every person intending to erect any "new building" should give fourteen days' notice to the local board of such intention, and should at the same time deliver detail plans and sections of the proposed new building.

Held, that a wooden structure, being under 20ft. each way and with a slanting roof of 12ft. high, intended for a stable and erected in the centre of inclosed private ground of nearly an acre in extent, was a "new building" within the meaning of this bye-law.—SOUTH SHIELDS (MAYOR) v. WILSON, K.B.D.; 84 L. T. 267.

2. Building—New building—Shelter for weighing machine—Movable shop for sale of refreshments.—A movable wooden structure 10ft. long, 7ft. broad, 10ft. high in front and 8ft. high behind, having shutters in front and a door at one side, not fixed in the soil, without sanitary arrangements or provision for artificial lighting or heating, was erected at Southend-on-Sea as a shelter for a weighing machine, and it contained beside the machine a table and two chairs, and was open in the day during the summer months and visited by persons using the weighing machine.

Held, this was not a "new building" within the meaning of the bye-law of the Borough of Southend-on-Sea, which provided that "every person who shall erect a new building shall cause such building to be enclosed with walls constructed of good bricks, stone, or other hard and incombustible materials."—SOUTHEND-ON-SEA CORPORATION v. ARCHER, K.B.D.; 70 L. J. K. B. 328; 84 L. T. 264.

3. Building—Refusal to approve—Plans of proposed building—Grounds of refusal—Mandamus.—A prerogative writ of mandamus will not be granted to compel a local authority to approve plans of a proposed building which the local authority has in good faith refused to approve upon the ground that the building would contravene the provisions of the Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888, by being brought forward beyond the front main wall of the building on one side thereof in the same street.—WRIGHT v. EASTBOURNE CORPORATION, C.A.; 83 L. T. 338.

4. Burial Acts—Transfer of powers of burial board to urban district council—Burial expenses—Moneys borrowed under the Burial Acts—Poor rate—General district rate—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), ss. 53 (3), 62 (1), 67 (3).—Where an urban district council takes over the powers and duties of a burial board under section 62 of the Local Government Act, 1894, the expenses incurred by the council in carrying into execution the Burial Acts and the payment of interest upon, and the repayment of moneys borrowed in pursuance of the Burial Acts, are chargeable to the poor rates of the parish or parishes for which the burial board was formed, and are not payable out of the general district rate.—REX v. CONNAH'S QUAY OVERSEERS, K.B.D., 463; [1901] 2 K. B. 174; 70 L.J. K. B. 651; 84 L. T. 601.

5. Fire brigade of urban district—Superintendent—Implied authority to call in other fire brigade—Remuneration—Town Police Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 89), s 32—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 171.—The superintendent of the fire brigade of an urban district has, in the absence of express regulations to the contrary, an implied authority from the district council to call in, where necessary for the proper discharge of his duties, the services of another fire brigade, and the fire brigade so called in, in the absence of evidence showing that the services were rendered gratuitously, are entitled to receive from the district council reasonable remuneration for the work of the members and for the use of the fire engine and other necessary implements.

"Purchase or provide" fire engines, &c., in section 32 of the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, enable an urban district council not merely to buy, but, where necessity arises, to hire temporarily fire engines, &c. —JANES v. STAINES URBAN COUNCIL, Q.B.D.; 83 L. T. 426.

6. Hackney carriage—Standing or plying for hire—Licensed carriage sent from yard to execute booked order only — Number-plate covered over—Bye-law—Towns Police Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 89), ss. 38, 68.—A "hackney carriage" within the meaning of section 38 of the Towns Police Clauses Act, 1847, is a carriage which is in fact used by the proprietor from time to time for the purpose of standing or plying for hire in any street within prescribed boundaries.

Held, therefore (dismissing the appeal), that the appellant had rightly been convicted for sending out a licensed hackney carriage from his yard to execute only a booked order, without showing the number-plate as required by the bye-law, as, in the opinion of the court, the words of the section, "every wheeled carriage used in standing or plying for hire," were not limited to the period of time during which such carriage was actually standing or plying for hire in the streets, as a hackney carriage remained subject to the bye-laws applicable thereto at all times, so long as the license was in force.—HAWKINS v. EDWARDS, K.B.D.; 487; [1901] 2 K. B. 169; 70 L. J. K. B. 597; 84 L. T. 532.

7. Highway—Defect in sewer causing hole under surface of road—Subsidence—Nuisance—Highway authority—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 13, 15, 19.—In an action against an urban sanitary authority for damages for injury sustained by a horse while passing along a highway, owing to one of its feet going through the crust of the road into a hole underneath, it was proved that this hole was caused by a defect in a mortar joint in a sewer running under the highway, which defect was caused by rats working through the mortar. The sewer had been constructed by a private body, and had been taken over by the defendants many years before the accident. Under the weight of the horse the crown of the road gave in, thereby causing the injury. Nothing had occurred to give the defendants warning that there was anything wrong with the sewer, and there was no evidence of negligence on their part.

Held, that, in the absence of negligence on the part of the defendants, the action was not maintainable. The responsibility of the defendants to maintain the sewer rested upon the Public Health Act, 1875, and no action would lie for injury caused by the execution of that statutory duty unless it had been negligently performed.—LAMBERT v. LOWESTOFT (MAYOR), K.B.D., 316; [1901] 1 K. B. 590; 70 L. J. K. B. 333; 84 L. T. 237.

8. London County Council—Statutory powers—Omnibus business—Ancillary business—Incidental powers—Ultra vires—Attorney-General, action by—Ratepayers—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s 10, sub-section 1—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), ss. 1, 2, 68, 79—London County Tramways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. li.), ss. 2, 10—London Tramways Company (Limited) Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. clxxxix.), s. 31—London County Council (Vauxhall Bridge Tramways) Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. ccxi.), s. 21.—A county council, being incorporated under section 79 of the Local Government Act, 1888, is a purely statutory body, and does not possess, under section 2 of that Act coupled with section 10, sub-section 1, of the Municipal Corporations Act, the wide powers of a municipal or common law corporation.

Consequently, where a county council had statutory powers to own and work "tramways" only,

Held, that the council was acting ultra vires in becoming omnibus proprietors and running omnibuses as feeders to the tramways, the omnibus business not being covered by the council's statutory powers as being a business by necessary implication incidental or ancillary to the tramway business.

Held, also, that an action for injunction was properly brought in the name of the Attorney-General by rival omnibus proprietors who were also ratepayers in the county.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, C.A.; [1901] 1 Ch. 781; 70 L. J. Ch. 367; 84 L. T. 245.

9. Nuisance—Abatement—"Owner" of premises—Appeal—Case remitted—"Owner" ceasing to be owner before rehearing—Jurisdiction to make order on "owner"—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 4, 94, 96, 98, 104.—The court having held, upon a case stated by justices, that the respondent, a person receiving the rack-rents as agents for the landlord, was the "owner" of the premises upon whom an order could be made under sections 94 and 96 of the Public Heath Act, 1875, to abate a nuisance thereon arising from structural defects (see ante, p. 205), the agent resigned before the case came again before the justices, who, under the change of circumstances, refused to make the order.

Held, that the justices should have made the order on the agent, for it would not be entirely nugatory, as, if disobeyed, it would have enabled the local authority to enter on the premises and do the work itself and charge the expenses on the person liable.—BROADBENT v. SHEPHERD (No. 2), K.B.D., 521; [1901] 2 K. B. 274; 70 L. J. K. B. 628; 84 L. T. 844.

10. Nuisance — Liability to abate — Structural defects—Collector of rents—"Owner"—Liability of collector—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 4, 94, 95.—A collector of the rents of property who is acting merely as agent for another person, is "owner" within sections 4 and 94 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and may be served under the latter section and required to abate nuisances on the premises arising from structural defects.—BROADBENT v. SHEPHERD, Q.B.D., 205; 83 L. T. 504.

11. Nuisance by sewage—Use of drain—Sewer—Notice—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 21.—Certain inhabitants of a village were in the habit of sending slops, &c., down what was originally a highway drain, which had become vested in the local authority. The defendant, without notice to the local authority, connected a water-closet with this drain and sent fœcal matter down it. He thereby created a nuisance on the plaintiff's land.

Held, that, even assuming the drain in question to be a sewer within the meaning of section 21 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the defendant, not having complied with the statutory requirement as to notice, could not avail himself of the provisions of that section, and might be restrained by injunction from sending fœcal matter down the drain.—GRAHAM v. WROUGHTON, C.A., 643; 84 L. T. 744.

12. Public health—Powers of local authority—Drainage of new house—Requirements "for the effectual drainage of such house"—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 25.—Section 25 of the Public Health Act, 1875, enacts that "it shall not be lawful in any urban district to erect any house unless and until a covered drain or drains be constructed of such size and materials, and at such level, and with such fall as on the report of the surveyor may appear to the urban authority to be necessary for the effectual drainage of such house."

Held, that in considering what is necessary for the effectual drainage of a house the urban authority are not entitled to take into consideration the general requirements of their district in regard to the means of disposing of the sewage.

An urban council, in order to facilitate the ultimate disposal of the sewage in its district, formed a scheme for conveying the sewage and the surface water by means of separate sewers and constructed separate sewers accordingly. With a view to carry out this scheme the council ordered a person proposing to build a new house to construct two main drains in connection with his house, one for conveying sewage only, to be connected with their sewage sewer, and the other for conveying surface water only, to be connected with their surface water sewer.

Held, that the order was bad.—MATTHEWS v. STRACHAN, K.B.D., 651; 70 L. J. K. B. 806.

13. Public health — Unsound food — Order for destruction—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 47.—Where an article has been seized by a medical officer or sanitary inspector under section 47 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, and application is made to a magistrate under that section to condemn it and to order its destruction, the duty of the magistrate is ministerial only, and he is bound to make the order on being satisfied that the article is in fact unsound or unwholesome, or unfit for the food of man; and he has no jurisdiction to inquire whether it was intended for food, or exposed or deposited for sale or preparation for sale.

White v. Redfern, 28 W. R. 168, 5 Q. B. D. 15, followed.—THOMAS v. VAN OSS Q.B.D., 57; [1900] 2 Q. B. 448; 69 L. J. Q. B. 665; 82 L. T. 845.

14. Rating—Exemption—Land reclaimed from the Thames—7 Geo. 3, c. 37, s. 51—City of London Sewers Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. clxiii.), s. 169.—Section 51 of 7 Geo. 3, c. 37, which vested certain land in the City of London reclaimed from the River Thames in the owners of the land abutting thereon "free from all taxes and assessments whatsoever," only exempts the reclaimed land from rates and assessments that were in existence at the time of the passing of the Act, and therefore does not exempt the land from the consolidated rate imposed on the occupiers of land in the City of London under section 169 of the City of London Sewers Act, 1848, the consolidated rate being substantially a new rate imposed by that Act.—

SION COLLEGE v. LONDON (MAYOR), C.A., 361; [1901] 1 Q. B. 617; 70 L. J. K. B. 369; 84 L. T. 133.

15. Rating—Exemption—Society instituted for purposes of science exclusively—Manufacture and sale of scientific remedies—Annual voluntary contributions—Donations—Scientific Societies Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 36), s. 1.—A society was instituted for the purposes of advancing the study and application of preventive medicine. It taught and examined students, undertook original investigations, and prepared and sold certain scientific remedies. The sale of these remedies did not cover the expense of their manufacture. It was supported partly by the payments received for medicines sold, partly by large donations, some of which had been devoted to the erection of buildings for the purposes of the society, and partly by fees paid by students. Certain rooms were sub-let to the Local Government Board at a yearly rent, which rooms, by the terms of the tenancy, were to be used exclusively for investigations in connection with vaccination, and for the manufacture of pure lymph.

Held, that as the society carried on the manufacture and sale of preventive medicines, it was not a society instituted for purposes of science exclusively, within section 1 of the Scientific Societies Act, 1843, and was therefore not entitled to have its premises exempted from rates.

Per Channell, J.: The occupation of the Local Government Board of part of the assessed premises was not such an occupation as would make the board capable of being separately assessed in respect thereof, and therefore on this ground also the society was liable to rates.

Query, Whether the society was supported by voluntary contributions within section 1.—JENNER v. ST. GEORGE'S, HANOVER-SQUARE, UNION, Q.B.D.; 83 L. T. 344.

16. Rating—General district rate—Shop closed during winter months—Stock removed—Fixtures and articles left in shop—Occupation—Liability to rate—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 211, sub-section 2.—The respondent held certain premises under a lease or licence for a term of years, and had entered into possession and used the premises as a shop. As the business was remunerative only during the summer, the respondent at the end of the summer locked up and left the shop with the intention of not reopening the same for business until the beginning of the following summer, and during this interval he had not in fact returned to the shop and no one lived therein. Before he left he removed all his stock, but left in the premises certain fixtures and other articles. He was entitled under his lease to occupy the premises and carry on his business continuously throughout the year except for certain hours during the night. A general district rate was made for the half-year during the whole of which the shop was so closed in the winter. The respondent having objected to pay the rate made in respect of the shop on the ground that in law the premises were unoccupied by him during the time the shop was closed, Held, that the respondent was in occupation of the premises during the time they were so closed, and was liable to pay the half-year's rate accordingly.—SOUTHEND-ON-SEA (CORPORATION) v. WHITE, Q.B.D.; 83 L. T. 408.

17. Rating—Machinery—Cranes in docks—Warehouses in different parish—Docks in different parishes in same union—Deductions.—The London and India Docks used cranes worked by hydraulic power communicated to them by means of mains laid under the surface of the docks in which they were used alongside the rails upon which the cranes travelled. The cranes could be made to travel along the rails upon which they rest by means of hand gearing attached to them, or by means of hydraulic capstans, or by means of levers. When in use such cranes were firmly and securely attached, by means of a flexible tube capable of resisting a pressure of 700lb. to the square inch, to the hydraulic main by the side of the rails. While so attached the cranes could be moved along the rails 6ft. in either direction, but in order to move them from one quay to another new lines of rails would have to be laid, or they would have to be moved by floating derricks.

Held, that these cranes must be treated as enhancing the rateable value of the dock undertaking, as they were on the premises for the purpose of making them fit as premises for the purpose for which they were used.

The London and India Docks also used certain warehouses, situate outside the parishes in the Poplar Union, in connection with and for the purposes of their undertaking. These warehouses were separately assessed in the parishes in which they were situate, and they did not adjoin the dock warehouses or docks.

Held, that the net receipts derived from these warehouses should be deducted from the net receipts derived by the London and India Docks from their whole undertaking, inclusive of such warehouses, when ascertaining the rateable value of the premises of the London and India Docks within the parishes in the Poplar Union.

Where one system of docks is situated in different parishes in the same union, the rateable value ought to be ascertained upon the parochial principle as laid down in Sculcoates Union v. Hull Dock Co. (71 L. T. Rep. 642).

Expenses of one company, such as superannuation allowances or rents of premises made payable by such company, upon an amalgamation of several companies to form one undertaking, ought not to be deducted from receipts in order to arrive at the net revenue of the undertaking.—LONDON AND INDIA DOCKS v. POPLAR UNION, Q.B.D.; 83 L. T. 371.

18. Rating—Waterworks—Intake—Payment under statutory obligation for user of intake—Cost of land and works—Assessment.—The proper principle of assessment of the property of the New River Co. is for the valuer to see what the site and construction of the works costs, and then to take a percentage on the capital amount so expended as representing the rent a hypothetical tenant would give; and to exclude the amount paid and payable by the company under their Acts for the user of the intake as being no part of the cost of construction nor a condition precedent to the construction of the works.

Liverpool Corporation v. Llanfyllin Union, [1899] 2 Q. B. 14, 47 W. R. Dig. 148, followed.—NEW RIVER CO. v. HERTFORD UNION, K.B.D., 619; 70 L. J. K. B. 740.

19. Right of way—Obstruction to—Duty of district council to take legal proceedings for protection of public right of way—Transfer of duty to county council—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 26, sub-sections 1, 3, 4.—In an action by the owners of an estate against private persons for an alleged trespass in removing certain obstacles, erected by the plaintiffs, to an alleged public right of way over such estate, the county council, where the parish council have appealed under section 26 of the Local Government Act, 1894, to the rural district council for assistance in protecting such right of way, and the rural district council have refused or failed to take any proceedings in consequence, are authorized under such section, on petition by the parish council, to pass a resolution that the powers and duties conferred upon the rural district council by such section shall be transferred to the county council, and that the county council shall contribute towards the costs of the defendants in the action.—REX v. NORFOLK COUNTY COUNCIL, GREEN, EX PARTE, K.B.D, 542; [1901] 2 K. B. 268; 70 L. J. K. B. 575; 84 L. T. 822.

20. "Sewer" — "Drain" — "Building"—Semi-detached houses—Effect of laying sewer in another person's land—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 4, 13.—The plaintiff and the defendent were the owners respectively of two plots of land adjoining a road in which there was a public sewer vested in the local authority. Each of them was also the owner of one-half of the road so far as it ran with his plot. The defendant first acquired his plot, and built thereon a pair of semi-detached houses. The drains from each of the houses joined at a point on the defendant's land, and from that point the sewage was carried by one culvert into the public sewer. Part of the culvert was carried through the portion of the road which then belonged to the plaintiff's predecessor in title, and was constructed under circumstances which made its construction a trespass. The plaintiff, having purchased his plot and the adjoining half of the road, required the defendant to remove the portion of the culvert which lay under the latter.

Held, (1) that the defendant's pair of semi-detached houses constituted "one building only" within the meaning of section 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and that the culvert, from the point of junction of the drainage of the two houses, was a "drain" and not a "sewer" within the meaning of that section; (2) that even if the culvert was a sewer the defendant could not by his wrongful act vest in the local authority the part of it which lay in the plaintiff's land, and that the plaintiff was entitled to have that part removed.—HEDLEY v. WEBB, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1901] 2 Ch. 126; 70 L. J. Ch. 663; 84 L T. 526.

21. Sewers—Prescriptive right of drainage—Trade effluents—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss, 17, 21—Public Health Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 17—Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), ss. 4, 7, 16.—Where the owners of buildings have acquired a right to discharge drainage into a public sewer through a connection lawfully made, that right extends to the discharge of trade and manufacturing effluents, and section 7 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, does not justify a local sanitary authority in cutting off the connection with their sewer, even although it is shown that the discharge of the trade effluent prejudicially affects the disposal of the sewage matter conveyed through the sewer.

Decision of Byrne, J. (48 W. R. 614), affirmed.—EASTWOOD v. HONLEY DISTRICT COUNCIL, C.A., 308; [1901] 1 Ch. 645; 70 L. J. Ch. 313; 84 L. T. 169.

22. Sewer—Sewage matter—Pollution of stream—Trade effluent—Pollution of river—Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), s. 7—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55).—A district council, having taken over a sewage farm from a local board, their predecessors in title, collected and treated on such farm the sewage of the district and discharged the effluent therefrom into a river. By a contract between the board and the owner of a margarine factory it was agreed that the said owner should be entitled to discharge the liquids and effluents from the said factory into the sewers of the board, subject to the condition that the said owner before so doing should extract all solid fat or fatty matters in suspension from the said liquids and effluents. This condition was not efficiently fulfilled, and the result was that the effluents, containing fat and fatty matter, became mixed with the sewage on the farm and the land became clogged with the fat and was not capable of filtering the sewage. On a summons being taken out under the Middlesex County Council Act, 1898, by the county council against the district council for "causing and suffering" sewage and other injurious and offensive matter to flow and pass from the said farm into the river the justices ordered the district council to discontinue such flow or passage.

Held, on appeal, that such order was rightly made, and that the district council had "caused or suffered" the filthy effluent to pass into the river. The district council were not compelled to receive into their sewers liquid containing fat or fatty matters, and if they did receive it they were bound to adopt some process on their farm which would effectually purify the effluent therefrom.—SOUTHALL NORWOOD DISTRICT COUNCIL v. MIDDLESEX COUNTY COUNCIL, Q.B.D., 376; 83 L. T. 742.

23. Street—Naming of new street by local authority—Right of owner of the estate—Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 34), s. 64.—The appellant, the owner of a building estate situate within the respondents' district, laid out a new street and submitted plans thereof and of the houses he proposed to erect in such street to the respondents, who approved of the same. The appellant on the plans named the street "Midhurst-avenue," and also put up a board with such name affixed thereon at one end of the street. After several houses had been erected the respondents proposed calling the street "Collingwood-avenue," and put up a board on one of the houses with that name upon it. The appellant objected to the latter name and removed the board put up by the respondents. On an information preferred against the appellant under section 64 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, the justices convicted him.

Held, that section 64 gave the local authority the right to decide and fix up the name of a new street, and that the appellant had committed an offence under that section in removing such name.—COLLINS v. HORNSEY DISTRICT COUNCIL, K.B.D., 620; [1901] 2 K. B. 180; 70 L. J. K. B. 802; 84 L. T. 839.

24. Working classes — Dwelling-houses — Closing order—Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 70), ss. 29, 32 (2).—Where proceedings under section 32 of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, are taken by the local authority against the owner of any dwelling-house for closing of the same, on the ground that it is unfit for human habitation, the fact that such dwelling-house has already been voluntarily closed by the owner to human habitation, and has been kept so closed, is no objection to a closing order being made.

Section 29, which defines "dwelling-house" as "any inhabited building," was not intended to negative the natural meaning of sections 32 and 33.—ROBERTSON v. KING. K.B.D., 542; [1901] 2 K. B. 265; 70 L. J. K. B. 630; 84 L. T. 842.

See also Charity, 5; Poor Law, 8.

LONDON BUILDING ACTS.—See Metropolis, 1-6, 18.

LUNACY:—

1. Jurisdiction of master—Appointment of person to exercise power of appointing new trustees—Vesting order—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 116, sub-sections 1 (c), 2; ss. 128, 129, 135—Lunacy Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 65), s. 27, sub-section 1.—A master in Lunacy has jurisdiction under the Lunacy Act. 1891, s. 27, sub-section 1, and the Lunacy Act, 1890, ss. 128, 129, to make an order appointing a person to exercise a power, vested in a person of unsound mind not found lunatic by inquisition, of appointing new trustees and to vest property in the trustees when appointed.—FULLER, RE, Lunacy, 90; [1900] 2 Ch. 550; 69 L. J. Ch. 638; 83 L. T. 208.

2. Jurisdiction of master—Vesting order—Trust property—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5) ss. 116-130, 136—Lunacy Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. 65), s. 27, sub-section 1.—A master in Lunacy has no power to make an order vesting in new trustees already appointed trust property standing in the names of old trustees, one of whom is a lunatic—the making of the order under such circumstances not being part of the "administration" or "management" of the lunatic's estate within section 27, sub-section 1, of the Lunacy Act, 1891, which gives jurisdiction to the master.

In re Fuller, ante, p. 90, [1900] 2 Ch. 551, distinguished.—LANGDALE, RE, Lunacy, 177; [1901] 1 Ch. 3; 70 L. J. Ch. 38; 83 L. T. 451.

3. Lunatic—Private international law—English domicil—Committee appointed by foreign court—Personal estate in England—Right to recover—Next friend—R. S. C., ord. 16, r. 17.—A lady of English domicil, confined in an asylum at New York, is adjudged by an order of the Supreme Court of New York to be of unsound mind, and committees are appointed authorized to take proceedings in England to recover and obtain payment of certain trust personal estate in this country to which she was entitled. In this action, brought by the committees and the lunatic lady suing by a "next friend" against the trustees, Held, that the court had a discretion to order the moneys claimed to be paid to the committees; and, in the circumstances of this case, the proceedings being for the benefit of the lady, an order was made recognizing the title of the co-plaintiffs to recover the property.—NEW YORK SECURITY CO. v. KEYSER Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 371; [1901] 1 Ch. 667; 70 L. J. Ch. 330; 84 L. T. 43.

4. *Lunatic debtor—English lunacy—Committee—*Curator bonis—Scottish jurisdiction—Locus standi—Bankruptcy proceedings by committee—Right to represent lunatic—Lunacy jurisdiction—Procedure—Consent of court in Lunacy to bankruptcy proceedings—Directions, summons for—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 148.—Where, in an English lunacy, a committee has been appointed, a curator bonis appointed by the Scottish Court of the lunatic's estates in Scotland (especially where appointed, prior to the lunacy, on account of physical incapacity) has no locus standi, under section 148 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883—which provides that, for the purposes of the Act—"a lunatic may act by his committee or curator bonis"—to intervene in English bankruptcy proceedings by the committee in the name and on behalf of the lunatic. The committee is, when appointed, the only person entitled under the section to represent the lunatic in the proceedings, and the curator bonis is only entitled to act therein for the lunatic where there is no committee.

Where the committee of a lunatic debtor has been authorized by the Court in Lunacy to take preliminary proceedings with a view to making him bankrupt, by filing in his name a declaration of insolvency, no subsequent steps, such as admitting the debt of a creditor who may have presented the bankruptcy petition, or consenting to an adjudication, should be taken by the committee without first obtaining the sanction of the Court of Lunacy.—R. S. A., RE, C.A.; [1901] 2 K. B. 32; 70 L. J. K. B. 475; 84 L. T. 477.

5. Pauper lunatic—Maintenance—Receiver—Debt—Death of lunatic—Administration action—Creditors, rights of—Jurisdiction.—A pauper lunatic, while being maintained by the guardians of a union, became entitled to a fund, whereupon, on a summons in Lunacy by the guardians, who claimed six years' arrears for past maintenance, an order was made by the Court in Lunacy appointing a receiver of the fund, and directing him to pay thereout to the guardians part of the arrears, and to apply the balance for future maintenance. While under the care of the guardians the lunatic died. There then being a surplus in the hands of the receiver, the guardians commenced a creditors' administration action in the Chancery Division against the lunatic's administrator to obtain payment of the balance of the six years' arrears.

Held, reversing the decision of Kekewich, J., that the balance of arrears was a valid legal debt enforceable after the lunatic's death, and that the order in Lunacy was no bar to the action.—TAYLOR, RE, EDMONTON UNION v. DEELY, C.A.; [1901] 1 Ch. 480; 70 L. J. Ch. 332; 84 L. T. 35.

6. Practice—Appeal, special leave to—Victoria Lunacy Act, 1890—Construction.—Neither under the Victoria Lunacy Act of 1890 nor under a habeas corpus is a person lawfully detained as a lunatic entitled as of right to have the question of his lunacy decided by means of a jury.

Special leave to appeal from certain orders of court refused, the petitioner's object being to obtain a jury's decision as to his lunacy.—GREGORY, EX PARTE, P.C.; [1901] A. C. 128; 70 L. J. P. C. 19.

See also Divorce, 4; Probate, 16; Vendor and Purchaser, 22.

MANOR:—

Tenure of ancient demesne—Tenants—Freehold—Custom of manor—Fine on alienation—Quia Emptores (18 Edw. 1, c. 1)—Act of 8 Edw. 2 (Parliament Roll, vol. 1, p. 298).—A lord of the manor claimed a fine in respect of the alienation to, or purchase by, a defendant of a piece of land held to be within the ambit of the manor. The manor originally belonged to the Crown, and lands in it were held by the tenure of ancient demesne.

Held, that the freehold was in the tenants, and not in the lord.

Held, that the alleged custom, even if it could be proved, was bad in law, as it was inconsistent with the statute 18 Edw. 1, c. 1, Quia Emptores, and a statute of 8 Edw. 2 (Parliament Roll, vol. 1, p. 298).—MERTTENS v. HILL, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 408; [1901] 1 Ch 842; 70 L. J. Ch. 489; 84 L. T. 260.

MARKET:—

Statutory remedy—Construction of Act of Parliament—Jurisdiction of the High Court—Injunction.—Where there is a liability existing at common law which is re-enacted by statute with a special form of remedy, unless the statute contains words necessarily excluding the common law remedy, the plaintiff has his election of proceeding either under the statute or at common law.

Wolverhampton New Waterworks Co. v. Hawkesford, 7 W. R. 464, followed.

Where a remedy in Chancery is wider than the old common law remedy, the Court of Chancery has jurisdiction to grant an injunction, unless the statute deprives it of such jurisdiction.

The enactment of special penalties or remedies by a statute does not exclude the jurisdiction of the High Court unless it is so expressly provided.—STEVENS v. CHOWN, STEVENS v. CLARK, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 460; [1901] 1 Ch. 894; 70 L. J. Ch. 571; 84 L. T. 796.

MARRIED WOMAN:—

1. Bankruptcy of husband—Proof of debt—Wife surety for husband's debt—Payment of debt by wife—Right of exoneration—Money lent by wife to husband—Onus of proving whether lent for purpose of husband's business—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 3.—A wife at the request of her husband (a trader) deposited with his bankers the title deeds of her separate real estate as security for advances to be made by them to him for the purpose of his business. The bankers made advances to him on the security of the deeds and a memorandum of deposit signed by the wife. She afterwards paid off his debt to the bankers. After his death an order was made for the administration of his estate in bankruptcy.

Held, that section 3 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, did not apply, and that the wife was entitled to prove against the estate for the amount which she had paid to the bankers, with interest thereon.

The wife also lent a sum of money to her husband, and she claimed to prove against his estate for that sum. She did not in her affidavit say that the loan was not made for the purpose of the husband's business, and the trustee of the estate adduced no evidence that it was made for that purpose, and he did not cross-examine the wife.

Held, that the proof ought to be admitted.

Per Vaughan Williams, L.J.—In re Genese, 16 Q. B. D. 700, must not be understood as a decision that section 3 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, in every case throws on a wife who is claiming to prove in her husband's bankruptcy for money lent by her to him the onus of showing that the loan was not made for the purpose of his business.—CRONMIRE, RE, CRONMIRE, EX PARTE, C.A.; [1901] 1 Q. B. 480; 70 L. J. K. B. 310; 84 L. T. 342.

2. Carrying on a trade—Bankruptcy—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1, sub-section 5.—A married woman who has once carried on business apart from her husband continues, even after she has ceased to carry it on, to be subject to the bankruptcy laws in respect of debts incurred by her during the period of her trading.

In re Dagnall, 45 W. R. 79, [1896] 2 Q. B. 407, followed.—WORSLEY, RE, LAMBERT, EX PARTE, C.A., 182; [1901] 1 Q. B. 309; 70 L. J. Q. B. 93; 84 L. T. 100.

3. County court—Costs—"Proceeding instituted"—Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 63), s. 2—County Court Rules, 1889, ord. 26, rr. 1, 2, 4 (a)—A written claim by a married woman to goods taken in execution under the process of a county court, and served by her on the high bailiff, is a "proceeding instituted" by her within section 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893.

Where, therefore, she fails, in subsequent interpleader proceedings, to establish her claim, the court has jurisdiction under that section to order payment of the execution creditor's costs of the interpleader proceedings, out of the property of the married woman, which is subject to a restraint on anticipation, and to enforce payment by the appointment of a receiver.—NUNN v. TYSON, K.B.D.; [1901] 2 K. B. 487.

4. Divorce—Allowance for wife—Husband's earnings—Mode of assessing proportion to be allowed—Separation order—Justices—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39).—In assessing the amount which a husband is to be ordered to pay for the support of his wife who has obtained a separation order against him under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39), courts of summary jurisdiction are to be guided by the principles and practice upon which allotments of alimony are made in cases of judicial separation in the High Court.—COBB v. COBB, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1900] P. 294; 83 L. T. 716.

5. Divorce—Appeal—Husband's appeal—Effect of withdrawal of previous summons—Technical objection not taken in court below—Appeal allowed—Wife's costs—Justices—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39).—The withdrawal of a summons under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, has the effect of putting an end to the complaint in respect of which it is issued, and, after the withdrawal, no fresh summons can be issued upon the same cause of complaint.

A ground of objection, however technical, is not waived by the omission to take the objection on the hearing of a summons under the Act, but where such an objection is taken by the husband for the first time on the hearing of an appeal and is allowed, the wife (respondent) will be allowed her costs of the appeal.—PICKAVANCE v. PICKAVANCE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 60; 70 L. J. P. 14; 84 L. T. 62.

6. Divorce—Desertion—Justices—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, s. 4—Costs.—If a wife leaves her husband in consequence of a mere expression on his part that she can go where she likes and do what she likes, and then refuses to return home at his request, the husband is not guilty of desertion.

To constitute desertion by the husband there must be an intention on the part of the husband to break off matrimonial relations.—CHARTER v. CHARTER, P.D. & Ad.D.; 84 L. T. 272.

7. Election—Restraint on anticipation—Married woman becoming discovert—Will—Intention.—A testator by his will, after directing the proceeds of sale of his Turkish real estate to go into his personal residue, gave a life interest in a share of his personal residue to each of his two married daughters, upon whom he placed a restraint on anticipation. By Turkish law the testator's Turkish real estate devolved on his next-of-kin in certain shares. Since the testator's death one of the married daughters became discovert. Upon petition to decide whether, if the married daughters elected to take their shares in the Turkish real estate by inheritance, they were bound to compensate out of their life interests in the personal estate those who lost benefits under the will by such election,

Held, that the restraint on anticipation excluded the application of the doctrine of election, and, being a declaration by the testator of a particular intention that the married daughters should not be able to alienate, was not affected by the fact with respect to one of them that she was now discovert; and that both the married daughters were therefore entitled to take their shares of the Turkish real estate by inheritance without making compensation out of their life interests under the will.—HAYNES v. FOSTER, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 327; [1901] 1 Ch. 361; 70 L. J. Ch. 302; 84 L. T. 139.

8. Restraint on anticipation—Increase of income—Court investments—Absolute interest, subject to restraint—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 39.—Under a will a married woman, being past child-bearing, had become, in the events that had happened, absolutely entitled to certain settled trust funds subject only to a restraint on anticipation by the will imposed upon her during coverture. These funds were now in court, under the Trustee Relief Act, to her separate account, invested in court securities. Under her marriage settlement certain other funds settled by her were in the hands of trustees upon trust, during the joint lives of herself and her husband, for her separate use without power of anticipation, and after the death of either to the survivor for life, and after the death of the survivor to the children of the marriage; and in default of children, then upon the usual trusts for the benefit of the wife. The settlement contained a covenant for the settlement of other and after-acquired property of the wife. The investments allowed by the settlement were much wider than the court or statutory investments. With a view to her and her husband obtaining a larger income, the wife applied to have the funds in court transferred to the trustees of her settlement in pursuance of her covenant, and for that purpose for the removal of her restraint on anticipation under section 39 the Conveyancing Act, 1881. The application was supported by a scheme, verified by affidavit, of the proposed investments of the funds under the wide powers of the settlement, which would result in a considerable increase of income. Farwell, J., refused the application.

The Court of Appeal held that no case had been made out justifying any interference with the decision of Farwell, J. Increase of income was not a sufficient reason for allowing a change from court securities to securities of a speculative nature. The benefit of a larger income would be bought at the expense of a greater risk to the capital; and the court was not satisfied that the proposed change of investments would really be for the benefit of the lady, even having regard to the fact that, in the events that had happened, she was all but mistress of the property.—BLUNDELL, RE, C.A.; [1901] 2 Ch. 221; 70 L. J. Ch. 522; 84 L. T. 706.

9. Restraint on anticipation — Wife's contracts during coverture—Judgment after cessation of coverture—Separate property—Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 63), s. 1.—A married woman, who was possessed of separate property the income of which she was restrained from anticipating, entered into a contract, and was subsequently divorced. Judgment having then been obtained against her, it was sought to enforce it by means of a garnishee order attaching income which had accrued due to her from this property subsequently to the divorce.

Held, that this income was protected by the proviso to section 1 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, and could not be attached.—BARNETT v. HOWARD, C.A.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 784; 83 L. T. 301.

10. Separation deed—Breach of covenant—Subsequent cohabitation — Accord and satisfaction.—Where a husband and wife are living apart under a deed of separation, and the husband has made default in payment of instalments due to the wife under the deed, a resumption of cohabitation subsequent to such default does not of itself amount to accord and satisfaction of the cause of action already accrued in respect of the arrears of the instalments.—MACAN v. MACAN, Q.B.D.; 70 L. J. Q. B. 90.

11. Wife's tort—Contract—Husband's liability in damages—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1, sub-section 2.—In May, 1898, the defendant G. K., the wife of the defendant H. K., induced the plaintiff, a widow, to lend her £5,300, the only security being her I O U. In July, 1898, the plaintiff was asked by G. K. to join her in the purchase of some shares which she said had been recommended to her by a financier, and for that purpose she asked the plaintiff to raise a sum of £2,000 to be invested in the purchase. The plaintiff, at first unwilling, consented to raise the £2,000 when the shares had been purchased. Shortly after, the plaintiff, relying on the representation of G. K. that she had bought the shares, signed two promissory notes for £1,000 each, and, her solicitor having discounted them, paid the proceeds to G. K., and the plaintiff paid the notes on maturity. G. K. never in fact purchased any shares at all with the moneys. The defendant H. K. was made a co-defendant by amendment. In an action for damages by the plaintiff against the defendants, Held, by Byrne, J., and the Court of Appeal, that the contract was effected prior to and independently of the misrepresentation; that the misrepresentation was not the means of effecting or inducing the contract; and that the husband was liable in damages for his wife's tort.

There is nothing in the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, which deprives a plaintiff in such a case, by giving him a right against the separate estate of the wife which may or may not exist, of the right to go against the husband in respect of a tort committed by the wife after the marriage.

The distinction between Liverpool Adelphi Loan Association v. Fairhurst, 2 W. R. 233, 9 Exch. 422, and Wright v. Leonard, 9 W. R. 944, 11 C. B. N. S. 258, explained and approved.

Seroka v. Kattenburg, 34 W. R. 542, 17 Q. B. D. 177, followed.—EARLE v. KINGSCOTE, C.A., 3; [1900] 2 Ch. 585; 69 L. J. Ch. 725; 83 L. T. 377.

12. Will—Reversionary interest in personalty—Assent of husband after death—General grant of administration with will annexed—Old probate practice—Construction of will and of assent—Costs.—When a married woman dies entitled to a reversionary interest in personal estate, it vests beneficially in her surviving husband immediately upon her death, and whether he takes administration to her estate or not; and if someone else becomes administrator, this latter holds the interest upon trust for the husband. And this is so, even if the wife has made a will not dealing with the reversionary interest, and the husband has assented to a grant of administration with the will annexed being made in general terms to the executors named in the wife's will.

It is not necessary for the validity of the assent that it should have been given before the death of the wife.

The defendants, being the residuary legatees as well as the executors, ordered to pay costs.—

ELLIOT v. NORTH, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 247; [1901] 1 Ch. 424; 70 L. J. Ch. 217.

See also Divorce, 12, 13; Power, 1; Settlement, 3-5.

MASTER and SERVANT :—

1. Contract of employment—Salesman—Refusal of master to provide work—Readiness to pay salary—Extent of master's obligation.—By an agreement in writing the defendants agreed to engage and employ the plaintiff as their representative salesman for four years and to pay him a salary of £250 a year, and the plaintiff agreed to devote his time to the service of the defendants. The defendants, considering that they had ground to complain of the plaintiff's conduct, ceased to avail themselves of his services during the term of four years, but offered to pay him his full salary.

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain an action against the defendants for breach of the contract to employ him.—TURNER v. SAWDON, C.A., 712.

2. Employers' Liability—Accident—Compensation—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1 (1).—A workman was employed by the defendants in the work of lifting and removing planks from a stack of timber; one night there was rain and frost, and the planks became frozen together, the planks lower in the stack being more firmly frozen together than those above; on the next day the workman began the work in the morning, and lifted and removed planks all day; about 4 p.m., while trying to lift a plank, he ruptured himself.

The workman claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and the county court judge found that the injury was caused by the lifting of the plank, and was an injury by "accident" within the meaning of the Act.

Held (dismissing the appeal), that there was evidence of something fortuitous and unexpected upon which the county court judge might properly find that the injury was caused by "accident" within the meaning of the Act.—TIMMINS v. LEEDS FORGE CO., C.A.; 83 L. T. 120.

3. Employers' Liability—Accident—Compensation—Blood poisoning—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1.—A miner was employed in hewing coal, and while so employed a piece of coal worked itself into his knee, with the result that blood poisoning set in and the workman died.

Held, that his death was the result of an "injury by accident" within section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—THOMPSON v. ASHINGTON COAL CO., C.A.; 84 L. T. 412.

4. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Building — Scaffolding — Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that, at the time of the accident, the workman was standing on a structure of trestles and boards in one of the rooms of an unfinished house, and was engaged in plastering the ceiling. The arbitrator found that the structure was not a "scaffolding" within section 7 of the Act. The county court judge set aside that finding.

Held, that, though Maude v. Brook, 48 W. R. 290, [1900] 1 Q. B. 575, showed that such a structure of trestles and boards might be a "scaffolding" within section 7, yet the question whether it was a "scaffolding" within the section was a question of fact for the arbitrator, and that his finding was not open to review.—FERGUSON v. GREEN, C.A., 105; [1901] 1 Q. B. 25; 70 L. J. Q. B. 21; 83 L. T. 461.

5. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Building exceeding thirty feet in height—Building being constructed or repaired by means of a scaffolding—Scaffolding inside building—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict c. 37), s. 7, sub-section 1.—A building over thirty feet high, measured to the top of the roof, was being stiffened with iron stays some months after its completion according to the original specifications. Planks supported on ledgers and trestles, inside the building and about eight feet from the ground, were used for the purposes of the work, and while lifting material on this platform one of the workmen was injured.

Held (Lord Shand and Lord Lindley dissenting), that the building was being constructed by means of a scaffolding within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (47 W. R. 499, [1899] 1 Q. B. 1018) reversed.

The meaning of "building being constructed or repaired by means of a scaffolding" considered.—HODDINOTT v. NEWTON, H.L., 380; [1901] A. C. 49; 70 L. J. Q. B. 150; 84 L. T. 1.

6. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Building—Repair of building—Whitewashing—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—Whitewashing the ceilings of a house held to be "repairing" a building within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Wood v. Walsh, 47 W. R. 504, [1899] 1 Q. B. 1009, is overruled by Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers, & Co., ante, p. 380, [1901] A. C. 49.—DREDGE v. CONWAY, C.A., 518; [1900] 2 K. B. 42; 70 L. J. K. B. 494; 84 L. T. 345.

7. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—"Claim for compensation"—Initiation of proceedings—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), ss. 1, 2 (1)—The claim for compensation required under section 2, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act to be made within six months of the accident causing the injury, refers not to the filing a request for arbitration in the county court, but to the actual claim made by the workman upon his employer.

Decision of Court of Appeal (48 W. R. 534, [1900] 2 Q. B. 145) reversed.—POWELL v. MAIN COLLIERY CO., H.L., 49; [1900] A. C. 366; 69 L. J. Q. B. 758.

8. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Continuous employment—Weekly earnings—Contract to work two days in the week—Casual earnings from same employers—Earnings from other employers—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I. (1).—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that the applicant entered into a contract of employment with his employers to work for them on two days in every week at certain wages. He was injured by an accident in the course of such employment in the third week of his service. On the other days of each week he was free to work as he pleased; sometimes he did casual work for the same employers, sometimes he did work for other employers.

Held, that the applicant's contractual employment was continuous employment, and that his "average weekly earnings" within the meaning of the First Schedule to the Act were the wages he received weekly under his contract of employment, and that he was not entitled to have taken into account either the earnings he received from other employers or the earnings he received for casual work for the same employers.—HATHAWAY v. ARGUS PRINTING CO., C.A., 113; [1901] 1 Q. B. 96; 70 L. J. Q. B. 12; 83 L. T. 465.

9. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Course of the employment—Disobedience to master's orders—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1.—A workman was employed as a carpenter, part of his duty being to sharpen his tools at a grindstone, which was worked by means of a leather band passed over shafting connected with an engine. While sharpening his tools the band slipped off the stone. In trying to replace it he was caught by it and injured. He had been told not to touch the machinery, and in trying to replace the band he was acting contrary to his orders. The county court judge having awarded him compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897,

Held, that, in the circumstances, it could not be said as a matter of law that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of the employment.—WHITEHEAD v. READER, C.A., 562; [1901] 2 K. B. 48; 70 L. J. K. B. 546; 84 L. T. 514.

10. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Dock—"Factory"—"Undertakers"—Repair of ship—Factory and Workshop Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 37), s. 23—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—The appellant's husband was at work on a vessel which was being repaired by the respondents in a dry dock hired by them for the purpose. In the course of his employment, when crossing from the vessel by a plank to the side of the dock the plank tilted, and he was thrown into the dock and killed.

Held (reversing the decision of the Court of Appeal), that the dock was, by section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, a "factory," and that the respondents as occupiers thereof were liable to pay compensation.—RAINE v. JOBSON, H.L., 705; 70 L. J. K. B. 771.

11. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—"Earnings"—Deduction from wages—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Sched. I., cl. 1 (a).—A workman was employed as a miner, and, in the course of such employment, was killed by an accident. In accordance with the practice of the mine, a sum of sixpence was always deducted from his weekly wages to defray the cost of the oil for a lamp used by him at his work, the oil being provided by the employers.

On an application for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the county court judge decided that the sixpence a week for oil could not be deducted in ascertaining the weekly "earnings" of the deceased, and that compensation must be based upon the full amount of the wages.

Held, on appeal, that the principle on which the county court judge based his award was correct—HOUGHTON v. SUTTON HEATH COLLIERIES CO., C.A., 196; [1901] 1 Q. B. 93; 70 L. J. Q. B. 61; 83 L. T. 472.

12. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Enforcement of award—Committal order—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62). s. 5—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Sched. II., cl. 8.—A county court judge has jurisdiction to enforce an award under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, by means of an order of committal under section 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869.—BAILEY v. PLANT, C.A., 103; [1901] 1 Q. B. 31; 70 L. J. Q. B. 63; 83 L. T. 459.

13. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—"Factory"—Ship unloading at quay—"Undertakers"—Factory and Workshop Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 37), s. 23, sub-section 1—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—A ship carrying cattle and other cargo was moored alongside a quay not belonging to the shipowners. The shipowners were going to discharge the ship by their own men. A workman in the employment of the shipowners was on the quay engaged in getting a gangway from the quay on to the ship when he slipped and fell between the ship and the quay wall, and was killed. The gangway was for the purpose of enabling the workmen and crew to get to and from the ship, but was not used, or about to be used, in the process of unloading. The cattle were, on the day in question, discharged into lighters on the other side of the ship. No other cargo was discharged on that day.

In an application for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the county court judge held that the deceased man was employed on or in or about a ship, and that, therefore, the employment was not within the Act.

Held, that the employment, at the time of the accident, was on the quay, and therefore on a "factory" within section 7 of the Act; that the shipowners had at the time the "actual use" of that part of the quay where the ship was moored, and were, therefore, the occupiers of it, and came within the definition of "undertakers" in section 7, sub-section 2, of the Act; and that the Act applied.

Held, also, that the gangway was not plant used in the process of unloading on to the quay, and was not, therefore, a "factory" within section 7 of the Act, as defined by section 23, sub-section 1 (a), of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895.—MERRILL v. WILSON, C.A., 161; [1901] 1 Q. B. 35; 70 L. J. Q. B. 97; 83 L. T. 490.

14. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Factory—Steam-engine on farm—Mill for grinding meal—"By way of trade or for purposes of gain"—Factory and Workshop Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 16), s. 93—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—A workman employed on a farm to drive a steam-engine for working a mill used to grind meal for the farm stock is not employed in a "factory" within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, so as to come within section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—NASH v. HOLLINSHEAD, C.A., 424; [1901] 1 Q. B. 700; 70 L. J. K. B. 571; 84 L. T. 483.

15. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—"Machinery connected with or used in the business of the employer"—Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 42), s. 1 (1).—A workman was injured while assisting on a Sunday in the removal of a machine in his employers' workshop. The machine, which was defective to the knowledge of the foreman, had broken down on the previous day and had finally ceased to be used in the employers' business at the time of the accident; it was being removed from its place in the centre of the workshop out of the way until it could be finally removed from the premises.

Held, that the machine was not "machinery or plant connected with or used in the business of the employers" within section 1, sub-section 1, of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, and that the employers were not liable.—THOMPSON v. CITY GLASS BOTTLE CO, K.B.D.; [1901] 2 K. B. 483.

16. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Machinery used in loading from a quay—Occupier —Person using machinery—"Undertaker"—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7—Factory and Workshop Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 37), s. 23, sub-section 1. — The person using machinery in the process of loading a ship from a quay is an occupier of a factory within section 23, sub-section 1, of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, and therefore an "undertaker" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, s. 7.—CARRINGTON v. BANNISTER, C.A.; [1901] 1 Q. B. 20; 70 L. J. Q. B. 31; 83 L. T. 457.

17. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Order on insurance company—Appeal—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 5; Sched. II. (4).—There is no appeal to the Court of Appeal from the refusal of a county court judge to make an order on an insurance company under section 5 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—LEECH v. LIFE ASSURANCE ASSOCIATION, C.A., 482; [1901] 1 Q. B. 707; 70 L. J. K. B. 544; 84 L. T. 414.

18. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—"Railroad"—Construction of railway signal box—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7, sub-sections 1, 2.—A workman was accidentally injured in the course of his employment on the construction of a signal box on a new line of railway.

Held, that his employment was on, in, or about a work of construction of a "railroad" within the meaning of the definition of "engineering work" in section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, so as to entitle him to compensation under the Act.—FULLICK v. EVANS, C.A.; 84 L. T. 413.

19. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Strain of unusual exertion—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1 (1).—A woman, who was employed as a box maker, was ordered to work upon boxes which were larger and heavier than those upon which she had previously worked. When she had finished some of the boxes and was working upon another, she suffered internal injury from the strain of the unusual exertion.

The county court judge found that the injury did not arise from an "accident" within the meaning of section 1 (1) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Held, that the judge had properly found that the injury did not arise from an "accident" within the meaning of the Act.—ROPER v. GREENWOOD, C.A.; 83 L. T. 471.

20. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Sub-contracting — Work ancillary to business of undertakers — Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c 37), s. 4.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that the workman's employers, who were engineers, had contracted with a firm of cotton spinners to supply and fix a driving-wheel for a steam-engine on their factory, and that the workman was accidentally killed while engaged in the operation of lifting the wheel into its place.

Held, that the cotton spinners were not liable to pay compensation under section 4 of the Act, because the work of fixing the wheel was merely ancillary or incidental to, and was no part of or process in, their business.—WRIGLEY v. BAGLEY, C.A., 472; [1901] 1 K. B. 780; 70 L. J. K. B. 538; 84 L. T. 415.

21. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Weekly earnings—Average weekly earnings before accident—Review of weekly payment—Average amount workman able to earn after accident—Apprentice—Value of tuition—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), 1*st Schedule* (2), (12).—An apprentice sustained an injury to his right hand which prevented his working as a skilled artizan, and the indenture of apprenticeship was cancelled. On an application for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, he obtained an award of a weekly payment based on his wages for the previous year. He returned to the employment of the same employers as a workman, at weekly wages higher than his wages at the time of the accident, but less than those that would be ordinarily paid to a workman employed on the same class of work, since the injury he had sustained affected his ability to earn full wages. On an application by the employers for the review and termination of the weekly payment, the county court judge dismissed the application, on the ground that the workman was earning less, by a sum equal to the amount of the weekly payment awarded, than if he had had the use of his right hand. On appeal, Held, that on a review of a weekly payment made by award under the Act, the test to be applied is the difference between the amount of the average earnings before the accident and the average amount which the workman is able to earn after the accident; that in the absence of evidence of advantages incidental to the employment, and capable of being appraised at a money value, the earnings before the accident must be determined by the wages received; that the county court judge was therefore wrong in refusing to review the weekly payment; but that the weekly payment should be continued at a nominal amount, in order to preserve the right of the applicant to make any further application that might become necessary.

Semble, that the value of the tuition given to an apprentice should not be taken into account in arriving at the amount of his average weekly earnings. — POMPHREY v. SOUTHWARK PRESS, C.A.; [1901] 1 Q. B. 86; 70 L. J. Q. B. 48; 83 L. T. 468.

22. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Weekly earnings—Employed less than two weeks—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1; Schedule—Loading and unloading a vessel.—It is not necessary for a workman to be two weeks in the service of his employer in order to be entitled to the benefit of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The 1st section of the Act gives the compensation; the schedule the method of computing it.

Where a stevedore was killed on a vessel whilst engaged in placing the beams which support the hatchway, and this took place after the cargo had been stowed from the wharf or quay,

Held (Lord Lindley dissenting), that the process of loading was not then completed within the meaning of the Act.

Decisions of the Court of Appeal (48 W. R. 408, [1900] 1 Q B. 780, and 48 W. R. 598, [1900] 2 Q. B. 95) reversed.—LYSONS v. KNOWLES; STUART v. NIXON, H.L., 636; [1901] A. C. 79; 70 L. J. Q. B. 170; 84 L. T. 65.

23. Factory—Fine for breach of rule as to good order and decorum.—Truck Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 44), s. 1, sub-section 1 (b) (c).—The respondents, who were corset manufacturers, and were the occupiers of a factory within the meaning of the Factory Acts, 1878 to 1895, entered into a contract with a girl, Helen Robbins, and employed her as a machinist in their factory. The following rule (inter alia) formed part of the contract: "All workers shall observe good order and decorum while in the factory, and shall not do anything which may interfere with the proper and orderly conduct of the business thereof, or of any department thereof, and shall in all respects obey the lawful commands of the general manager, forewoman, or superintendent of their respective departments. A fine of sixpence (or less, at the discretion of the manager) shall be paid by each worker who shall be guilty of any infringement of this rule."

The employees were, if they wished, allowed to have their dinners in the workroom. On one occasion the clerk in charge of the factory heard a considerable noise in the workroom, and on going there discovered disorder, the girl Robbins playing a small harp and the other girls dancing. For this disorder Robbins and some of the others were fined the sum of twopence each.

The appellant, an inspector of factories, thereupon by an information made complaint that the respondents had committed breaches of section 1, sub-section 1 (b) and (c), of the Truck Act, 1896, on the ground that the said rule did not specify the acts or omissions in respect of which a fine might be imposed, and that the fine imposed was not in respect of some act or omission within the meaning of sub-section 1 (c).

The justices found that good order and decorum were not observed, and that dancing and disorder were likely to cause loss or damage to the respondents, and that the said rule constituted a reasonable contract, and complied with section 1, sub-section 1 (b) and (c), of the said Act, and they accordingly dismissed the information. On appeal by the inspector of factories,

The court held that the justices had decided rightly; the rule was good and was not too general, and there had been such a breach thereof as justified a fine being imposed. The words "good order and decorum" must be construed with reference to the special circumstances under which a particular business is carried on, having regard to the place in which any alleged disorder takes place.—SQUIRE v. BAYER, K.B.D., 557; [1901] 2 K. B. 299; 70 L. J. K. B. 705.

24. False imprisonment — Arrest by servant — Liability of master.—The plaintiff, a barman, who was employed by the defendant, the owner of a public-house, was given into custody on the charge of stealing whisky belonging to the defendant by M., who was the manager of the said public-house and the servant of the defendant. M., in giving the plaintiff into custody, acted under a complete misapprehension, and withdrew the charge as soon as they arrived at the police-station.

There was no evidence that any whisky had been stolen, or that it was necessary to give the barman into custody in order to protect the property of his master. The defendant was in the habit of visiting his public-house nearly every day.

The plaintiff brought an action against the defendant for false imprisonment.

Held that no action lay against the defendant, and that, under the circumstances of the case, there was no evidence that there was any implied authority on the part of the manager to give the plaintiff into custody.—HANSON v. WALLER, Q.B.D., 445; [1901] 1 Q. B. 390; 70 L. J. Q. B. 231; 84 L. T. 91.

25. Hire of horse, brougham, and driver from jobmaster at so much a week to include driver's wages —Brougham used by hirer's traveller for his rounds— Theft from brougham of jewellery through negligence of driver leaving carriage unattended—Master parting with control of servant—Control of hirer—Non-liability of jobmaster to hirer.—The plaintiff, a wholesale jeweller, hired from the defendant a jobmaster, a horse, brougham, and driver for £3 a week, to include the man's wages. The brougham was for the use of his traveller.

The brougham was out one day and the driver left it unattended while he had his dinner. During his absence it was driven away, and jewellery to the value of some £460 was stolen.

Held, that, although the loss was due to the negligence of the coachman in leaving the brougham unattended, yet that, under the contract, the defendant did not accept the duty of taking care of the goods, and, therefore, was not liable for the loss.—ABRAHAMS v. BULLOCK, K.B.D., 653.

26. Mine—Person employed by contractor in coal mine—Conditions of employment—Liability of mine owner—"Workman"—Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 58)—Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 90), s. 10—Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 42), s. 8.—By section 8 of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, the expression "workman" means any person to whom the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, applies; and by section 10 of that Act of 1875 a "workman" means "any person who, being a labourer, . . . miner, or otherwise engaged in manual labour . . . has entered into or works under a contract with an employer," whether the contract be express or implied.

By the special rules of a colliery framed under the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1875, conditions of employment were made, No. 5 of which was for "drawers and persons working under contractors only," and was as follows: "Every drawer employed by any miner, and every workman or other person employed by a contractor at the colliery, shall, at the request of such miner or contractor, obtain a copy of these conditions from the officer whose duty it is to provide such copies, and such drawer, workman, or other person shall, in consideration of being employed at the works, be bound, both as between himself and the miner or contractor, and between himself and the owner, by the terms of these conditions."

M. entered into a contract with the owners of the colliery to sink a shaft in their coal mine and to provide the labour for doing so. F., a workman, was engaged by M., and, while engaged upon the said work, was killed by an accident, and the father of the deceased then brought an action against the colliery owners under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, to recover damages for his death.

Held, that, although the above condition created a privity of contract between the mine owners and the deceased workman of the contractor, it was only collateral and in addition to the contract he entered into with M., and that it did not make him a servant or workman of the mine owners within the meaning of section 10 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875; and that, therefore, the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, did not apply.—FITZPATRICK v. EVANS, K.B.D., 491; [1901] 1 K. B. 756; 70 L. J. K. B. 353; 84 L. T. 233.

27. Negligence—Personal injury—Accident caused by defendant's servant—Action against defendant—Notice of accident previously given by plaintiff to his employers—Wages paid as before—No further proceedings taken against employers under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, ss. 2, 6—Right of plaintiff to sue defendant.—The plaintiff, a sawyer, who worked for Messrs. Jones Brothers, met with an accident caused by the negligence of a servant in the employment of the defendant.

Having given notice of the accident to his employers, Messrs. Jones Brothers, they continued to pay the plaintiff the same wages as before, and no further steps were taken by him to obtain compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

In a common law action against the defendant for damages,

Held, the action was maintainable, because a mere notice of an accident given under section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, to the employer was not a "proceeding" against the employer within the meaning of section 6, and did not, therefore, preclude the plaintiff from bringing an action against a person, other than his employer, whose negligence caused the injury.—PERRY v. CLEMENTS, K.B.D., 669.

See also Scotland, Law of.

MERCHANDIZE MARKS.—See Sale of Goods, 6; Trade-mark, 2-4.

METROPOLIS:—

1. Building—District surveyor—Fees—Builder in default—Right to recover fees from owner or occupier—Limitation of time—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 11—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), ss. 154, 157 (1) (2).—A district surveyor can take summary proceedings to recover his fees from the owner of a building under section 157 of the London Building Act, 1894, within six months from the date of the receipt of the bill of fees by the owner.—CORBETT v. BADGER, K.B.D., 539; [1901] 2 K. B. 278; 70 L. J. K. B. 640; 84 L. T. 602.

2. Building—Electric lighting—Boxes in street—Notice to district surveyor—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict c. ccxiii.), s. 145.—Where a local authority within the meaning of the Electric Lighting Acts, 1882 and 1888, in pursuance of those Acts, has been granted a provisional order confirmed by a statute, and under the provisions of that order has constructed in a street boxes for the purposes in connection with the supply of electric energy, such boxes are buildings, structures, or works, within section 145 of the London Building Act, 1894, and a notice under that section must be served on the district surveyor before they are commenced.—WHITECHAPEL BOARD OF WORKS v. CROW, K.B.D.; 84 L. T. 595.

3. Building—General line of buildings—"Projection"—Electric sign affixed to wall of house—Lapse of time between offence and information—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), s. 73, sub-section 8—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 11.—By an agreement in writing the appellant let to an advertiser's agent a position covering the first-floor window of a house in the Seven Sisters-road for the purpose of erecting an electric advertising sign. The sign consisted of a wooden case with a glass front, which was attached to the external wall of the house by iron brackets, a space of six inches intervening between the back of the case and the level of the front wall. The cornice of the shop-front, which was below the sign, projected twenty inches beyond the external wall of the premises so that the sign projected four inches less than the existing projection of the premises.

More than six months after the sign completely erected, the respondents laid information against the appellant for an offence under section 73, sub-section 8, of the London Building Act, 1894, in extending a projection beyond the general line of buildings, without the respondents' permission. The summons was heard by a metropolitan magistrate, and at the hearing a further point was raised by the appellant, whether the prosecution of the alleged offence was barred under section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, by lapse of time, the sign having been erected on the 20th of June, 1899, notice to remove served on the 16th of March, 1900, and the information laid on the 17th of May, 1900, which information alleged that the offence was committed on or about the 19th of December, 1899, the date when the sign was first brought to the attention of the council. The magistrate decided in favour of the council, and convicted the appellant.

Held (allowing the appeal), that the erection of the sign was not an offence within section 73 (8) of the London Building Act, 1894, which section only extended to such projections as were part of the architectural structure of the building itself.

Held, also, that if this sign were a "projection," nevertheless the information was barred by lapse of time under section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act. 1848.

Held, further, that the tenancy would have been no answer to the charge.—HULL v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL. K.B.D., 394; [1901] 1 K. B. 580; 70 L. J. K. B. 364; 84 L T. 160.

4. Building—Hospital—Building used for a public purpose—Home for defective children—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), s. 5 (27).—In order to provide effectually for the education of children of defective intellect within their district, the Metropolitan Asylums Board established homes close to board schools specially equipped and adapted for the education of children of that class, in which it was intended the children should live while attending such schools.

Held, that a building acquired by the board for this purpose, not having a cubical capacity of more than 250,000 feet, or sleeping accommodation for more than 100 persons, was not a "public building" within the London Building Act, 1894, not being a "hospital" or a building "used or constructed, or adapted to be used, for any other public purpose" within section 5 (27). — MOSES v. MARSLAND, Q B.D., 217; [1901] 1 Q. B. 668; 70 L J. Q. B. 261; 83 L. T. 740.

5. Building—Prevention of danger from fire—Music-hall licensed prior to 1878—Powers of London County Council to require alterations—Second exercise of power—Metropolis Management and Building Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 32), s. 11.—When the London County Council or their predecessors, the Metropolitan Board, have exercised the powers conferred on them by section 11 of the Metropolis Management and Building Act, 1878, for the prevention of danger from fire in theatres, music-halls, and other public buildings which had been licensed for the first time prior to 1878, by requiring alterations to be made in a building, and such requirements have been duly complied with, they cannot again exercise the powers of the section by requiring further alterations, unless, in the meantime, the owner has so altered the building as in the opinion of the council to increase the danger from fire.—ST. JAMES'S HALL CO. v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, K.B.D, 572; [1901] 2 K. B. 250; 70 L. J. K. B. 610; 84 L. T. 568.

6. Building—Public-house—Separation of part used for trade from part used as dwelling-house—Fire- resisting materials—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), s. 74, sub-section 2.—On the hearing of an objection by a district surveyor that the erection of a proposed beerhouse without the use of fire-resisting materials would be in contravention of section 74, sub-section 2, of the London Building Act, 1894, the magistrate found as a fact that part of the building was intended to be used for the purposes of the trade of a beerhouse, and that part was intended to be used as a dwelling-house for the licensed occupier, but he held that the case was governed by Carritt v. Godson, [1899] 2 Q. B. 193, 47 W. R. Dig. 126, and he accordingly overruled the objection.

Held (reversing the decision of the King's Bench Division, ante, p. 523), that on the finding of the magistrate the objection must be held to be good. —DICKSEE v. HOSKINS, C.A., 693.

7. Management Acts — Highway — Obstruction—Lamp-post—Use of street by adjoining occupier—Private right—Special individual interest—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 130. —The placing of a post in a highway which interferes with the use of the highway by the occupier of premises abutting on the highway to the maximum of his convenience is not an interference with his private right, but with his public rights, if any, although he has such a special individual interest as to be able to sue to enforce those public rights, if any, without joining the Attorney-General as a party.

A local authority, acting in good faith and making a reasonable use of their statutory authority, cannot be sued by an adjoining occupier for interfering with his convenient use of the highway.

The defendants, acting under section 130 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, proposed to set up a lamp-post in a particular place in a London street where the plaintiffs occupied business premises. The plaintiffs alleged that a lamp-post in that place would interfere with the use they had been accustomed to make of the highway for loading and unloading their goods, and they asked for an injunction to restrain the defendants.

Held, that in the absence of bad faith being shown on the part of the defendants, the court would not interfere with their discretion, and the injunction was refused.—CHAPLIN v. WESTMINSTER (MAYOR), Ch.D. Buckley, J., 586; [1901] 2 Ch. 329.

8. Management Acts—Order of vestry—Sufficiency—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 76.—The respondent having applied to the vestry for permission to lay a drain according to an annexed plan, received from the surveyor to the vestry the following communication: "I have considered your application . . . and have to inform you that, subject to the conditions mentioned below, and which I have placed upon your notice, the work can be proceeded with, and I shall report to that effect to my vestry. . . ."

The vestry subsequently passed a resolution approving the report of the surveyor.

Held, that this was a sufficient "order" of the vestry within section 76 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855.—STOKES v. HAYDON, K.B.D.; 84 L. T. 531.

9. Management Acts—Sewer—Drain—Nuisance—Drainage of group of houses by combined operation—Order of Commissioners of Sewers—Departure from plan authorized—Increased burden on pipe—Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 250—Metropolis Local Management Acts Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), s. 112.—In 1855 an order of the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers was obtained for draining four houses in the metropolis by a combined operation. The work was carried out before the 1st of January, 1856, but not in accordance with the plan authorized by the commissioners. From the group of four houses one was left out, and two others were added. A nuisance having arisen in regard to the pipe draining the group, and the owner of the houses having been required to abate the nuisance, Held, that the departure from the plan authorized was material, and, there being no evidence that such departure was sanctioned by the commissioners, the pipe was not a drain but a sewer, and that therefore the owner was not liable to abate the nuisance.—BULLOCK v. REEVE, Q.B.D., 93; 70 L. J. Q. B. 42; 84 L. T. 53.

10. Management Acts—Street—New street—Paving expenses—Apportionment of—Strip of land added to old highway—Cost of paving added part—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 105 —Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), ss. 77, 112.—An old public highway of 16ft. in width, which, prior to and since 1855 had existed as a formed road, with some houses on the south side thereof, and had been repaired by the district board of works, was widened in 1898 by the addition thereto on the north side of a strip of land of 24ft. in width, thereby making the width of the whole road 40ft., and there were buildings on both sides of the roadway. The board resolved to pave the road as a "new street" under the Metropolis Management Acts, and they apportioned the expenses of paving the added part amongst the owners of houses and lands on the north side only, exempting the owners on the south side.

Held, that the added part of 24ft. was the "new street" within the meaning of the Metropolis Management Acts, and that the expenses of paving the added part were properly apportioned on the owners on the north side only, as the houses and lands on the south side of the roadway abutted on the old highway, and not on the "new street."—PROPERTY EXCHANGE v. WANDSWORTH BOARD OF WORKS, K.B.D.; 84 L. T. 689.

11 Management Acts—Street—New street—Paving expenses—Open space—Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 105, 250—Metropolis Local Management Act Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), s. 77—Metropolitan Open Spaces Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 35), s. 1—Metropolitan Open Spaces Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 34), s. 5—Open Spaces Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 32), s. 6—London Open Spaces Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. lxxi.), s. 25.—By virtue of section 1 of the Metropolitan Open Spaces Act, 1877, and section 6 of the Open Spaces Act, 1887, metropolitan vestries have power to acquire open spaces of land within their parishes, and to hold the same "in trust for the perpetual use thereof by the public for exercise and recreation."

By section 5 of the Metropolitan Open Spaces Act, 1881, metropolitan vestries have power to acquire open spaces of land "in trust to allow, and with a view to, the enjoyment by the public of such open space . . . in an open condition free from buildings . . . and for no other purpose."

By the London Open Spaces Act, 1893, the vestry may "erect and maintain on any of the open spaces belonging to them or under their control buildings for the accommodation of keepers, constables, and other persons employed by them in connection with the maintenance and management of such open spaces and also such other convenient and ornamental mental buildings and such appliances as they may think requisite for the purposes of exercise and recreation and for refreshment-rooms, band-stands, conveniences, and for other like purposes."

An open space of land was conveyed to a metropolitan vestry in 1894 "to the end and intent that it should at all times be kept and maintained as an open space for the perpetual use thereof by the public for exercise and recreation." In pursuance of the powers given by the Metropolitan Open Spaces Act, 1893, the vestry erected on the land a band-stand, a cloak-room, and a refreshment stall. They let the refreshment stall to a caterer and the seats near the band-stand to a contractor.

Held, that the land must be deemed to have been acquired under the more beneficial Acts of 1877 and 1887, and not under that of 1881, and that the vestry were "owners" of the land within the meaning of the Metropolis Local Management Acts, 1855 and 1862, and were liable to contribute to the expenses of paving a new street on which the land abutted.—FULHAM VESTRY v. MINTER, Q.B.D., 415; [1901] 1 Q. B. 501; 70 L. J. K. B. 348; 84 L. T. 49.

12 Management Acts — Street — "New street" —Sewering — Expenses — New buildings on one side of old street—Sewer put in on new side —Liability of frontagers—Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), ss. 52, 53.—An old highway, in the centre of which was the boundary between the parish of H., in the county of M., and the parish of C., in the county of London, had buildings erected on the H. side of it for almost its whole length before 1856, when the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, came into operation. On the C. side there were then only a few houses, but recently this side also has been covered with buildings; and in 1898 a sewer was constructed on the C. side to receive the drainage of the houses on that side. It was found as a fact that the road, taken as a whole, was sufficiently built upon to be a street before the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, came into operation.

Held, that, for the purpose of determining whether the C. side of the road was a "new street" within the Metropolis Management Acts, so as to render the frontagers on that side liable to the expenses of sewering, the road must be taken as a whole, and the portion of the road on the C. side could not be taken by itself, and could not, therefore, form a "new street" so as to render the frontagers liable—ST. JAMES, CLERKENWELL, VESTRY v. EDMONDSON, Q.B.D., 171; [1901] 1 Q. B. 264; 83 L. T. 501.

13. Management Acts—Street—Widening street—Compulsory purchase—Power of vestry to take part of houses—Injunction to restrain proceeding under notice to treat—Michael Angelo Taylor's Act (57 Geo. 3, c. 29), ss. 80, 82.—Where the authority having control of the streets in a metropolitan district has adjudged that part of a house obstructs and prevents the widening of a street, sections 80 and 82 of 57 Geo. 3, c. 29, give such authority power, under some circumstances, to purchase and take compulsorily such part from the owner; but where the part so desired to be taken is a substantial portion the taking of which will substantially injure the use of the house and prevent it from being occupied and enjoyed as the kind of building it was before, the authority has no such power, and can be compelled by an owner who is able and willing to sell and convey the whole to them, to take the whole.

A limitation is to be placed on the word "part" in the construction of section 80 of 57 Geo. 3, c. 29.

Gordon v. Vestry of St Mary Abbott's, Kensington, [1894] 2 Q. B. 742, discussed.—GIBBON v. PADDINGTON VESTRY, Ch.D. Stirling, J. 8; [1900] 2 Ch. 794; 69 L. J. Ch. 746; 83 L. T. 136.

14. Public health—Houses let in lodgings—Byelaws—Artizans dwellings—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 94.—A building was divided into a number of separate two-roomed and one-roomed tenements, each of which were occupied by a separate family. The passages and staircases were used in common, and there was a water-closet, sink, water-tap, and dust shoot for the use in common of each set of three or four tenements. There was a front door at the entrance of the building, but there was no means of fastening it beyond a Norfolk latch. The landlord did not live on the premises, but a caretaker lived on the ground floor, who attended to minor repairs and cleaned the common passages, staircases, and water closets.

Held, that the building was not a house let in lodgings or occupied by members of more than one family within the meaning of section 94 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, or of bye-laws made thereunder.—WEATHERITT v. CAUTLAY, K.B.D., 568; [1901] 2 K. B. 285; 70 L. J. K. B. 799; 84 L. T. 768.

15. Public health—Nuisance—Sending forth black smoke—No evidence offered that any particular individual or property was annoyed or injured thereby—Necessarily a nuisance—Public Health (London) Act, 1871 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 24 (b).—The appellant company was convicted under section 24 (b) of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, of sending forth black smoke "in such quantities as to be a nuisance."

Held, that as the evidence proved that black smoke was sent forth in such quantity and for such periods as must necessarily amount to a nuisance, the conviction must be affirmed, as it was not necessary in such circumstances to show that the black smoke was a nuisance or an injury to any particular individual or property—SOUTH LONDON ELECTRIC SUPPLY CORPORATION v. PERRIN, K.B.D., 539; [1901] 2 Q. B. 186; 70 L. J. K. B. 643; 84 L. T. 630.

16. Rating—Appeal—Valuation list—Alteration in list striking out whole amount of rate—Rates paid during appeals—Right to recover—Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 67), s. 44.—The plaintiff, an advertising contractor, was entered in a provisional valuation list as the occupier of an advertising station and hoarding. He appealed against the valuation list to the assessment committee and the quarter sessions, on the ground that he was not the rateable occupier. The quarter sessions confirmed the assessment, subject to a case for the opinion of the High Court. The High Court held that the plaintiff was not the rateable occupier, and ordered the entry of the plaintiff as occupier to be struck out in the valuation list. While these proceedings on appeal were pending, the plaintiff had paid several rates, two of which were paid after summonses to enforce the payment of the same had been taken out.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled, under section 44 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, to recover the whole amount of the rates so paid, including those paid after summonses had been taken out, as the entire alteration of the whole amount of the rate was an "alteration in such valuation list" within the meaning of the section.—

BURTON v. ST. GILES, BLOOMSBURY, VESTRY, Q.B.D., 334; [1900] 1 Q. B. 389; 70 L. J. Q. B. 127; 84 L. T. 30.

17. Rating—Supplemental valuation list—Alteration in value—Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 67), ss. 43, 46, 47.—To justify the inclusion in a supplemental list of an alteration in the value of a hereditament, as required by section 47 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, the alteration must be one arising from a cause which directly affects the value of the particular hereditament; and it lies upon those who desire to alter the assessment to prove the nature and cause of the alteration in value.

The fact that, after the quinquennial valuation, a premium was paid for the lease of the premises is not of itself sufficient evidence of alteration within the meaning of the statute.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (48 W. R. 162, [1900] 1 Q. B. 68) affirmed. — CAMBERWELL ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE v. ELLIS, H.L., 239; [1900] A. C. 570; 83 L. T. 201.

18. Surveyor's fees—Land of school board—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), ss. 21, 154.—By section 21 of the London Building Act, 1894, any building to be erected upon any lands belonging, at the time of the coming into operation of the Act, to the London School Board, may be erected in accordance with the provision of any Act in force immediately before the passing of the Act.

Held, that the fees payable to the district surveyor were also regulated by such earlier Act.—MARSLAND v. WALLIS, Q.B.D.; 83 L. T. 761.

See also Common; Sheriff.

MINE:—

1. Coal mine—Order of Secretary of State—Notice of—Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict c. 43), s. 6.—On the hearing of a summons against the manager of a mine for contravention of an order purporting to be made by a Secretary of State under section 6 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1896, a Queen's printer's copy of the order was put in evidence; but no evidence was given of any notice by the Secretary of State of the making of the order or of any direction by him as to the manner in which notice of the order should be given.

Held, that the provisions as to the giving of notice were directory only, and were not conditions precedent to the coming into operation of the order, and therefore that the order was valid.—JONES v. ROBSON, Q.B.D.; [1901] 1 Q. B. 673; 70 L. J. Q. B. 419; 84 L. T. 230.

2. Minerals—Coal mine—Abandonment of mine—Delivery of plan of abandoned mine to Secretary of State—Limitation of proceedings—Notice requiring compliance with the Act—Continuing offence—Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 46), ss. 38 (5), 59.—By section 38 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, it is enacted that, where a mine or seam of coal is abandoned, the owner shall, within three months after the abandonment, send a plan of the workings to a Secretary of State, and that, if an owner of a mine or seam fails to comply with the section, he shall be guilty of an offence; and it is further provided (sub-section 5) that "a complaint or information of an offence under this section may be made or laid at any time within six months after abandonment of the mine or seam, or after service on the owner aforesaid of a notice to comply with the requirements of this section, whichever last happens."

Held, that an information could not be laid of an offence under the section after a period of six months had elapsed since the service of a notice to comply with the section.

Held, also, that section 59 (2) of the Act did not apply to offences under section 38.

Held, also, that a notice in the following terms: "I beg to point out to you that no plan of the abandoned workings in the seven-feet coal seam has yet been forwarded as required by section 38 of the Mines Act. Will you please give the matter your early attention?" is a good notice under the section.—STOKES v. HILL, K.B.D., 375; [1901] 1 K. B. 493; 70 L. J. K. B. 331; 84 L. T. 122.

3. Quarry—Stone or "other minerals"—Sand and gravel—Quarries Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 47), s. 1 —Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 77), ss. 11, 28—Regulation of Railways Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c 78), s. 6.—By section 1 of the Quarries Act, 1894, it is provided that "This Act shall apply to every place (not being a mine) in which persons work in getting slate, stone, coprolites, or other minerals, and any part of which is more than twenty feet deep, and every such place is in this Act referred to as a quarry under this Act."

Held, that gravel and sand are minerals within the meaning of this section.

Held, also, that the getting of sand and gravel by a railway company for their own use as ballast, out of land belonging to them, is not an act done "in the course of working the railway," within the meaning of section 6 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1871.—SCOTT v. MIDLAND RAILWAY CO., Q.B.D., 318; [1901] 1 Q. B. 317; 70 L. J. Q. B. 228; 83 L. T. 737.

See also Master and Servant, 26.

MONEY-LENDER:—

Harsh and unconscionable transaction—Re-opening —Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), s. 1. —The words in section 1, sub-section 1, of the Money-lenders Act, 1900, "or is otherwise such that a court of equity would give relief," are not exclusive of the previous words "harsh and unconscionable," and in order to entitle the person sued to relief the transaction must be such that a court of equity would relieve against it on the ground of its being harsh and unconscionable.—WILTON & CO. v. OSBORN, K.B.D.; [1901] 2 K. B. 110; 70 L. J. K. B. 507; 84 L. T. 694.

MORTGAGE:—

1. Appropriation by mortgagor's agent of money intended to be applied in discharge of mortgage—Subsequent transfer of mortgage debt and security to mortgagor's agent, followed by transfer by him to an assignee without privity of mortgagor — Account between mortgagor and mortgagee—Reconveyance by assignee to mortgagor.—A mortgagor of a house put her solicitor in funds for the express purpose of paying off the mortgage. The solicitor did not pay off the mortgage, but appropriated the funds to his own use. He continued to pay the interest due under the mortgage. The mortgagor did not ask for the title deeds or a reconveyance of the legal estate. The solicitor took a transfer of the mortgage debt and security to himself, and the following day transferred the same to the defendant, who took the transfer in good faith, but made no inquiry as to the state of the account between mortgagor and mortgagee. The solicitor absconded, and, on the mortgagee applying to the mortgagor for interest, the fraud was discovered by both.

Held, that the charge on the property ceased to exist the moment that the debt and security were transferred to the solicitor, and that the transferee from him took subject to the account between mortgagor and mortgagee at the date of his transfer, and was accordingly bound to reconvey the property to the mortgagor, subject only to the costs of reconveyance.—TURNER v. SMITH, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 186; [1901] 1 Ch. 213; 70 L. J. Ch. 144; 83 L. T. 704.

2. Company—Shares—Fluctuating security—Power of sale in mortgagee—Costs.—The plaintiff instructed the defendants, who were brokers, to buy shares of a fluctuating nature for him, but only paid a part of the purchase-moneys in spite of repeated applications; in pursuance of an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendants the shares were entered on the register in the name of the defendants and so held by way of security for the payment of the balance owed to them. Upon the company announcing a scheme of reconstruction the defendants wrote again to the plaintiff for instructions and payment of his debt. Receiving no reply, they themselves applied for new shares in exchange and sold 300 to pay expenses and the remainder later. The plaintiff now alleged that the sale was improper and claimed redemption of the shares or, in the alternative, damages for the alleged wrongful sale.

Held, that the defendants, as mortgagees, were justified in realizing the 300 shares to pay the expenses of obtaining the new shares under the reconstruction of the company; and, further, apart from a power of sale implied by agreement between the parties, the defendants, as mortgagees with a security of a fluctuating nature, were, after making their applications for payment and the lapse of a reasonable time, entitled to sell the shares without commencing an action of foreclosure and without an express power of sale.

Tucker v. Wilson, 1 P. Wms. 261 (sub. nomine Wilson v. Tooker, 5 Br. Parl. Cas. 193), discussed and approved.—DEVERGES v. SANDEMAN, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 167; [1901] 1 Ch. 70; 70 L. J. Ch. 47; 83 L. T. 706.

3. Fixtures—Dog-grates not attached to the freehold.—After the execution of a mortgage of a freehold house the mortgagor removed certain fixed grates which were in the house, and substituted for them dog-grates which were not fixed, but rested by their weight upon the ground. The mortgagor subsequently assigned the equity of redemption, together with the furniture in the house, and the assignee removed the dog-grates from the house. The mortgagee, having foreclosed the mortgage, brought an action against an assignee to recover possession of the dog-grates, on the ground that they were fixtures passing with the freehold.

Held, that physical annexation to the freehold was not necessary to make the dog-grates fixtures as between mortgagor and mortgagee so as to pass with the freehold; that, as the grates were in fact placed in the house in substitution for the old fixed grates for the purpose of improving the house, they were fixtures passing with the freehold —MONTI v. BARNES, C.A., 147; [1901] 1 Q. B. 205; 70 L. J. Q. B. 225; 83 L. T. 619.

4. Joint account—Part discharge of joint debt—Receipt by one of two joint creditors—Remedies of mortgagor at law and in equity—Joint account clause—Disclosure of trusts.—In a foreclosure action for £4,000 the defendant claimed to redeem for £3,000, contending that a payment of £1,000 to a firm in which one of his joint creditors was a partner, but which did not appear to have been authorized to act as agent in the matter, discharged the mortgage pro tanto.

Held, that, although the payment to one of the joint creditors might have been a good discharge of the joint debt in law, yet the court of equity would consider all the facts of the case and decide whether it was equitable to deprive the plaintiffs of their legal title to the charge as a whole, and that in this case the plaintiffs were entitled to foreclosure, the principal sum being £4,000.

Steeds v. Steeds, 37 W. R. 378, 22 Q. B. D. 537, explained.

Matson v. Denis, 4 De G. J. & S. 345, followed.—POWELL v. BRODHURST, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 532; [1901] 2 Ch. 160; 70 L. J. Ch. 587; 84 L. T. 620.

5. Lease — Goodwill — Priority — Marshalling — Apportionment.—A mortgagor on three different occasions mortgaged a leasehold house where he carried on a business, and included the goodwill of the business in the first and third mortgages, but not in the second mortgage. The first mortgagee sold the whole security for a sum allocated in specific proportions to the lease and the goodwill respectively.

Held, that the goodwill of the business was something apart and different from the lease, and that the purchase-money ought to be apportioned between the lease and the goodwill.—BAGLIONI v. CAVALLI, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 236; 83 L. T. 500.

6. Lease by mortgagor in possession—Sporting rights over mortgaged land not in occupation of mortgagor—Validity—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 18.—A lease by a mortgagor in possession of a house and adjoining premises included the right of sporting and shooting over a portion of the mortgaged property, which was in the occupation of an agricultural tenant, to whom it had been, previously to the mortgage, leased with a reservation of the sporting rights.

Held, that, as against the mortgagee, the lease was valid under section 18 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881.—BROWN v. PETO, C.A., 324; [1900] 2 Q. B. 653; 83 L. T. 303.

7. Priorities—Chose in action—Land held by several persons on trust for sale—Mortgage of beneficial reversionary interest of one of trustees—Absence of notice to other trustees—Subsequent mortgage with notice to trustees — Priority.—Land was settled upon trust to sell the same and pay the income to X. for life, and after her death to divide the proceeds among her children, one of whom was P. P., being then one of the three trustees of the settlement, in the lifetime of X. and before the land was sold, mortgaged his share to G., but no notice of this mortgage was given to the other trustees. P. subsequently (concealing the mortgage to G.) mortgaged his share to the plaintiffs, who made inquiry of the trustees as to prior incumbrances, and themselves gave notice of their own mortgage to the trustees.

Held, (1) that, having regard to the trust for sale, the principle of Dearle v. Hall, (1823) 3 Russ. 1, 27 R. R. 1, applied; (2) following Browne v. Savage, (1859) 4 Drew. 635, that the mortgage of the plaintiffs, had priority over that of G.—LLOYD'S BANK v. PEARSON, Ch D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 865; 70 L. J. Ch. 422; 84 L. T. 314.

8. Priorities—Trust—Fraud of trustee—Legal estate—Tabula in naufragio—Relation back.—The rule that an equitable mortgagee without notice may gain priority by getting in the legal estate, even though in the interval he has received notice of a prior incumbrance, does not apply where there is an express trust for the incumbrancer whose equity it is sought to displace.

As between purely equitable titles, that one will have priority which has the better right to call for the legal estate.

Conduct which will postpone an incumbrancer considered.—TAYLOR v. LONDON AND COUNTY BANKING CO., LONDON AND COUNTY BANKING CO. v. NIXON, C.A., 451; [1901] 2 Ch. 231; 70 L. J. Ch. 477; 84 L. T. 397.

9. Receipt clause—Mortgagor's signature induced by fraud of his solicitor—Estoppel—Title of mortgagee—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 44), ss. 54, 56.—Two trustees advanced money on a mortgage of real estate. S, one of the trustees, paid the money to E., a solicitor, who produced to him the mortgage deed executed by K. as mortgagor. The deed, which contained the usual receipt for the money in the body of it, was handed over by E. to S., who retained it. K., the mortgagor, had been induced to sign the deed by E., who was his solicitor, and in whom he had confidence, but K. did not know that the deed he signed was a mortgage, and had not instructed E. to obtain a mortgage for him. E. misappropriated the money and absconded. K., on discovering the fraud, brought an action against the trustees to have the mortgage set aside.

Held, that K. was estopped by his conduct from denying that the mortgage was valid, and that E. had authority to receive the mortgage money.—KING v. SMITH, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 425; 69 L. J. Ch. 598.

10. Reconveyance — Words of limitation — Habendum to grantee "in fee"—Supplying omission from context—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 51.—Under section 51 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, in a deed, in order to pass the legal estate in fee simple, it is necessary, in the absence of the word "heirs," to use the actual words of limitation mentioned in the section—namely, in fee simple.

Therefore, where, after the passing of the Act, freehold land, upon payment off of a mortgage thereon, was expressed to be reconveyed to the mortgagor to hold the same unto and to the use of the mortgagor in fee freed from the mortgage,

Held, that (apart from any question of rectification) the word "simple" could not consistently with the Act be supplied by construction from the context, and that the legal estate in the fee simple didnot pass.—ETHEL AND BUTLER'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 945; 70 L. J. Ch. 498; 84 L. T. 459.

11. Redemption—Collateral advantage to mortgagee—Advantage continuing after redemption—Fetter on redemption.—The holder of shares in a tea company mortgaged them to secure repayment of an advance, and at the same time agreed to use his best endeavours to secure that the mortgagee should always thereafter have the sale of all the company's teas as broker, and, in the event of the company's teas being sold otherwise than through the mortgagee, to pay to the mortgagee the amount of the commission which he would have earned if the teas had been sold through him.

Held, that the collateral advantage secured to the mortgagee by this agreement was one which might be bargained for; for, although the effect of it was to continue after redemption, it did not fetter the mortgagor's right to redeem.—CARRITT v. BRADLEY, C.A., 593.

12. Redemption—Once a mortgage always a mortgage—Option to lender to enter into partnership with the mortgagor upon terms affecting the property—Option to be exercised within time limited for redemption—Conditional sale—Exercise of option—Sale or mortgage.—Prior to July, 1898, plaintiffs advanced to defendant £5,000 upon the security of a ship and other property, upon the terms of an agreement made between them on the 23rd of April, 1896, whereby the money was not to be called in or paid for two years, and the plaintiffs might at any time within the two years elect to enter into partnership with the defendant upon the terms of their releasing the mortgage debt and the ship and other property becoming partnership assets. On the 9th of July, 1898, another agreement was entered into between the plaintiffs and defendant. It recited the agreement of 1896; that the plaintiffs had not entered into partnership; that the plaintiffs had applied for, and the defendant was unable to pay, the £5,000, and had requested the plaintiffs to extend the term of two years for a further period of five years; and it was thereby agreed (1) that the plaintiffs might, within five years, elect to enter into partnership with the defendant; (2) that the plaintiffs should in that event release the defendant from payment of the £5,000 and transfer the mortgaged property for the purposes of the partnership; (3) that the capital of the partnership property should belong to defendant and plaintiffs in equal shares.

In February, 1900, the plaintiffs exercised their option, and communicated to the defendant their election to enter into partnership with him, but he refused to comply, alleging that the effect of the agreement was to render the property irredeemable, and that it was an illegal clog on the equity of redemption.

Held, that the agreement amounted in law to a conditional sale of the property; that the condition was valid; and, on the condition being satisfied, the purchase took effect, the doctrine of equity as to clogging an equity of redemption not having any application to such a case.

Observations upon the nature of an equity of redemption and the doctrine of equity as to clogging an equity of redemption.—LISLE v. REEVE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 188; 83 L. T. 731.

13 Solicitor-mortgagee—Profit costs—Judgment—Further consideration—Mortgagee's Legal Costs Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 25), s. 3 —An order for foreclosure was obtained in 1893 by a solicitor-mortgagee in an action to enforce his security. In 1898 an order was made on further consideration of the action directing taxation of costs. The taxing-master allowed the mortgagee, who had himself acted, profit costs. On a summons to vary the certificate, Held, that the rights of the parties were ascertained by the order of 1893, and must be determined by the law in force at that date; consequently, the mortgagee was not entitled to the benefit of the Mortgagee's Legal Costs Act, 1895, s. 3.—DAY v. KELLAND, C.A., 66; [1900] 2 Ch. 745; 70 L. J. Ch. 3; 83 L. T. 447.

See also Bankruptcy, 1, 28, 32; Infant, 3; Landlord and Tenant, 11; Limitation Statutes, 3, 4; Partnership, 2.

NATAL, LAW of:—

Will—Roman-Dutch law—Direct substitution in favour of children who survive the testator's widow—Heirs of pre-deceased children excluded — Fideicommissary substitution — Appeal from Natal. — Where by will executed in Natal the testator directed that after his wife's death his estate should

"be equally divided among my children or such as may be then alive,"

Held, that the children who survived the wife took by direct substitution to the exclusion of the issue of any child who predeceased her. There is do rule of construction in Roman-Dutch law which authorizes children to be read as including grandchildren.

Where a substitution is direct there is no implied condition, under Roman-Dutch law, in favour of the institute, si sine liberis decesserit. But where the substitution is fidei-commissary, such a condition may be annexed to the fidei-commissum, so that unless the condition happens the fidei-commissum does not arise and the substitution fails of effect.—GALLIERS v. RYCROFT, P.C.; [1901] A. C. 130; 83 L. T. 79.

NEGLIGENCE:—

1. Injury causing death—Alien—Negligence of British subject—Cause of action outside jurisdiction—Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 and 1864 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93; 27 & 28 Vict. c. 95).—An action will lie in England, under the provisions or the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 and 1864, by the widow of an alien whose death has been caused on the high seas when navigating a ship of his own country, against an English owner of a British ship whose servants have negligently caused the collision and consequent death.

Adam v. The British and Foreign Steamship Co., [1898] 2 Q. B. 430, 47 W. R. Dig. 139, disapproved.—DAVIDSSON v. HILL, K.B.D., 630; 70 L. J. K. B. 788.

2. Personal injuries—Acceptance of money in full discharge of claim for compensation—Subsequent development of injuries not before apparent—Claim for further damages—Right to bring action.—The plaintiff, who was injured in a railway collision, signed a receipt for a sum of money paid him by the railway company in full satisfaction and discharge of all claims. He returned to work, but his eyesight soon began to fail, and he became totally blind.

Having commenced an action to recover damages from the railway company, the defendants pleaded that the action was not maintainable, and the question was ordered to be tried first whether the plaintiff had by his conduct debarred himself from suing for damages.

Held, that the action was maintainable, it being a question for the jury.—ELLEN v. GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY CO., K.B.D., 395.

See also Master and Servant, 27; Railway, 3, 4; Ship, 16, 17, 28.

NEW SOUTH WALES, LAW of:—

1. Crown lands—Inquiry as to falsity of statements by applicant for conditional purchase—Powers of Land Board—Findings of fact by Land Court final—Power to reserve points of law—Jurisdiction of Supreme Court—Crown Lands Acts, 1884, ss. 20, 26; 1889, ss. 5, 8, sub-section 6.—A Land Board and a Land Appeal Court having found, on an inquiry directed by the Minister for Lands under section 20 of the Crown Lands Act of 1884, that certain statements made by the respondent in applying for a conditional purchase were false within the meaning of section 26,

Held, on a special case submitted to the Supreme Court under section 8, sub-section 6, of the Crown Lands Act of 1889:

(1) That the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is confined to the decision of submitted questions of law.

(2) That the decision on questions of fact by the Land Board or by the Land Appeal Court is final and conclusive.

(3) That the inquiry directed was within the cognizance of the Land Board under section 20 of the Act of 1884.

(4) That the Land Appeal Court has power to review the finding of the Land Board, and as incident thereto to reject irrelevant evidence, draw reasonable inferences of fact, correct errors and shortcomings of the board; to act as a court of rehearing as well as of appeal.

Under section 5 of the Act of 1889 and No. 7 of the Crown Lands Regulations of the 2nd of December, 1889, the Minister for Lands can order the inquiry to be held at any place that he may think fit.—MINISTER FOR LANDS v. WILSON, P.C.; [1901] A. C. 315; 84 L. T. 242.

2. Income tax—Assessment—Income from ore produced in New South Wales and sold outside it—New South Wales Income Tax Act, 1895 (59 Vict. No. 15), s. 15, sub-sections 3, 4.—Where income was in part derived from the extraction of ore from the soil of New South Wales Colony, and from the conversion in the latter colony of the crude ore into a merchantable product, Held, that this income was assessable under the New South Wales Land and Income Tax Assessment Act of 1895, s. 15, sub-sections 3, 4, notwithstanding that the finished products were sold exclusively outside the colony.

In re Tindal, [1897] 18 N. S. W. L. R. 378, overruled.—COMMISSIONERS OF TAXATION v. KIRK, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 588; 69 L. J. P. C. 87.

3. Interest in land—New South Wales Real Property Act, 1862 (26 Vict. No. 9), s. 117—Construction—Limitation—Section 122—Rights of beneficiares whose trustees are barred—Bankruptcy.—Where a rent-charge or annuity is held by trustees to be applied by them for the maintenance and education of children or the survivor, Held, that the children take a joint interest therein, but that the shares of the minors are to be applied as directed.

The interest of each child is an interest in land within the meaning of the New South Wales Real Property Act, s. 117.

Where the estate out of which the rent-charge issued passed to a bankrupt's assignee under a certificate of title negligently granted to the bankrupt free of incumbrance,

Held, in an action brought by the beneficiaries against the Registrar-General for compensation out of the assurance fund created by the said Act, that their rights, being under the Act independent of the trustees and being saved by the provisions of the Act (see section 122) in regard to persons under disability, could be enforced notwithstanding that their trustees' rights were barred.—WILLIAMS v. PAPWORTH, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 563; 69 L. J. P. C. 129.

NEW ZEALAND, LAW of:—

Native Rights Act, 1865 (29 Vict. No. 11), ss. 3, 4, 5—Crown lands—Native title—Action against officer of Crown—Suit upon a native title—Jurisdiction of court.—An aggrieved person may sue an officer of the Crown to restrain an act purporting to be done in pursuance of an Act of Parliament, but in fact outside the statutory authority. The Attorney-General is neither a necessary nor a proper party to such action.

The effect of the New Zealand Native Rights Act, 1865, ss. 3, 4, 5, is that a suit may be brought upon a native title to land, and the court has jurisdiction to inquire whether such title has or has not been extinguished by cession to the Crown.

Therefore, where a native of New Zealand can prove that he and the members of his tribe are in possession and occupation of lands under a native title, which has not been lawfully extinguished, he can maintain an action against the Commissioner of Crown Lands to restrain an unauthorized invasion of his title.—NIRRAHA TAMAKI v. BAKER, P.C.; 84 L. T. 633.

NUISANCE:—

1. Gas company—Pollution of water by gas—Evidence—Statute—Gasworks Clauses Acts, 1847 and 1871.—The plaintiffs were the owner and the occupiers of two houses which obtained their water supply from a well by means of a pipe laid in the main road and belonging to the owner of the houses.

The defendants were a gas company incorporated under Acts of Parliament, and owned gas mains and pipes which were laid in the same road.

In an action by the plaintiffs to restrain the company from polluting the water supply with gas escaping from their pipes, which the plaintiffs alleged to be defective,

Held, that the defendants had no statutory authority to create a nuisance, and that there was a nuisance; as, however, it had ceased after action brought, there would be no injunction, but a declaration that the defendants were not entitled to pollute the plaintiffs' water.

Held, also, that evidence was inadmissible on the following three points raised by the defendants: (1) That their pipes were well laid, and they had a statutory right to do what they did, some escape of gas being unavoidable. (2) That the plaintiffs' water pipe was defective. (3) That the plaintiffs' water supply was otherwise unfit for domestic purposes.—BATCHELLER v. TUNBRIDGE WELLS GAS CO., Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 84 L. T. 765.

2. Non-feasance—Highway—Abatement—Right of private individual to abate.—Even if the right to abate a nuisance by an individual for purposes of passage exists in the case of a nuisance arising by non-feasance, it does not justify an individual in entering and erecting a permanent structure on another person's land, inasmuch as the right of the public upon a highway is that of going and coming only, and the right of abatement in an individual is merely ancillary thereto. Nor is an individual in such a case justified in his action by the fact that the local authority have the right to enter to abate the nuisance but have failed to do so, for the default of the local authority cannot extend the burden imposed on the land.—CAMPBELL DAVYS v. LLOYD, C.A., 710.

3. Noxious trade—Reasonable use of premises—Injunction.—In an action to restrain a nuisance, the question whether the defendant is acting reasonably from his own point of view is not material, and if he is carrying on business so as to cause a nuisance to his neighbours he is not acting reasonably as regards them, and may be restrained by injunction, although he may be conducting his business in a proper manner.

Reinhardt v. Mentasti, 42 Ch. D. 685, 690, is not inconsistent with the observations of Lord Selborne in Ball v. Ray, L. R. 8 Ch. 467, or with Bamford v. Turnley, 3 B. & S. 62.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. COLE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 205; 70 L. J. Ch. 148; 83 L. T. 725.

See also Highway, 9; Local Government, 7, 9-11; Metropolis, 15.

PARTNERSHIP:—

1. Inspection of partnership books—Right of partner to inspect by agent—Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 29), s. 24 (9).—The right of inspection of partnership documents conferred on partners by the Partnership Act, 1890, s. 24 (9), is not personal to the partners, but may be exercised by any partner by means of a competent agent, so long as it is not exercised in such a way as to be prejudicial to the other partners.

Decision of Joyce, J. ([1901] 1 Ch. 724), reversed.—BEVAN v. WEBB, C.A., 548; [1901] 2 Ch. 59; 70 L. J. Ch. 536; 84 L. T. 609.

2. Mortgage of share by one partner—Dissolution—Right of mortgagee to an account—Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), s. 31.—A mortgagee of a share in a partnership has a right to an account on dissolution in order to ascertain what the share of his mortgagor really is, even though the partners have inter se determined the value of the share.

Decision of Farwell, J. (48 W. R. 521), affirmed.—WATTS v. DRISCOLL, C.A., 146; [1901] 1 Ch. 294; 70 L. J. Ch. 157; 84 L. T. 97.

3. Solicitor—Dissolution—Agreement not to transact business with original clients — Injunction. — In July, 1880, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into partnership as solicitors. Clause 7 of the partnership agreement provided: "Either party is to be at liberty to transact any business in his own name (if he wishes to do so), and also to transact any business for any private friends, or poor persons, without charge, he in such case paying all office out of pocket expenses." Clause 8 provided: "Either party is to be at liberty to terminate this agreement by three months' notice in writing at any time, and in such case neither is to transact any business for, or in any way to influence business with any clients who were original clients of the other.

No notice was given to terminate the partnership, but it was dissolved by mutual consent on the 10th of August, 1899. The plaintiff now moved for an injunction.

Held, that, notwithstanding no notice was given, the eighth clause of the agreement came into operation when the partnership was dissolved on the 10th of August; that "original clients" comprised those who were clients of either plaintiff or defendant before they became partners, and also those for whom the plaintiff or defendant in pursuance of clause 7 transacted business as for private friends or poor persons.—BADHAM v. WILLIAMS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 83 L. T. 141.

4. Trade name—Limited company—Sale of trade name—Abandonment—Covenant in restraint of trade—Unilateral covenant—Incident to business—Freehold premises—Name carved in structure—Erasure.—A limited company which on being incorporated takes the name of the old firm, whose business and goodwill it has bought, and which, in accordance with the requirements of the Companies Act, 1862, adds the word "Limited" to that name, does not thereby abandon the use of the trade name of the old firm but may sell it to a purchaser of the company's business.

Montreal Lithographing Co. (Limited) v. Sabiston, [1899] A. C. 610, 48 W. R. Dig. 189, considered and distinguished.

A covenant made between two partners, whereby one of them agrees on the termination of the partnership not to carry on business within a certain distance of the place where the partnership business is situated, is of necessity an incident to the business and for its benefit, as there cannot be a covenant in restraint of trade in gross as that would be unreasonable and therefore void.

Jacoby v. Whitmore, 32 W. R. 18, 49 L. T. Rep. 335, followed.

Elves v. Crofts, 10 C. B. 241, explained.

Where a man sells to another a freehold house on which his name is carved on part of the structure he cannot compel the purchaser to erase the name unless he has taken a direct covenant to that effect. —TOWNSEND v. JARMAN, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 158; [1900] 2 Ch. 698; 83 L. T. 366.

See also Bankruptcy, 17; Copyright, 1; Trustee, 6, 11; Will, 33.

PATENT:—

1. Infringement—Account of profits—Practice—Discovery — Names of customers. — Where, in a successful action for the infringement of a patent, the plaintiff has elected to take an account of the profits, the defendant must disclose the full names and addresses of the customers to whom the infringing articles have been supplied, irrespective of any possible consequences which may thereby result to such customers.—SACCHARIN CORPORATION v. CHEMICAL AND DRUGS CO., C.A., 1; [1900] 2 Ch. 556; 69 L. J. Ch. 820; 83 L. T. 206.

2. Infringement — "Exercise" — Delivery of patented article abroad.—Where defendants entered into contracts in the United Kingdom for the delivery by them abroad to an English company of saccharin made abroad, by means of a process patented in England by the plaintiffs, and where such saccharin was delivered at foreign ports,

Held, that the defendants were not exercising the invention so as to cause the infringement of the patent by such delivery, and that the knowledge of the defendants as to the ultimate destination of the saccharin was immaterial.—SACCHARIN CORPORATION v. REITMEYER, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 199; [1900] 2 Ch. 659; 83 L. T. 397.

3. Infringement — Patented articles bought in England and sent abroad for sale—"Making use of" the invention—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), Schedule I., Form D —Damages—Assessment.—The defendants having bought in England articles patented by the plaintiffs but manufactured by infringers, exported the articles to France for the purposes of sale there.

Held, that this was a "making use of" the plaintiffs' invention by the defendants, and constituted an infringement by the defendants of the plaintiffs' patent.

Minter v. Willams, 4 A. & E. 251, and United Horse Shoe and Nail Co. v. Stewart, 13 App. Cas. 401, 36 W. R. Dig. 63, considered and explained.

Held, also, that in the circumstances of the case the measure of damages was what the defendants would have had to pay for the permission to do that which they wrongfully did.

Judgment of Stirling, J. (48 W. R. 345, [1900] 1 Ch. 577), affirmed.—BRITISH MOTOR SYNDICATE v. TAYLOR, C.A., 183; [1901] 1 Ch. 122; 70 L. J. Ch. 21; 83 L. T. 419.

4. Registration — Prior publication or user — Amendment of specification—Renewal fees—West Australian Patent Act, 1888 (52 Vict. No. 5), ss. 23, 49—Letters of registration—Invalidity—Appeal from Western Australia.—Under the provisions of section 49 of the West Australian Patent Act, 1888, holder of patents obtained in Great Britain or any other country are enabled to obtain letters of registration in the colony without the formalities and delay necessary on an application for a patent, but subject to all the incidents and conditions to which letters patent would be subject.

Held, accordingly, that prior publication, or even prior user of an invention in the colony after the date of its patent, affects the letters of registration.

The provisions of section 23, as to "amendment of specification," are made applicable by section 49 to letters of registration.

Where leave to amend a specification has been neither asked for nor granted, but the registrar has simply recorded an amendment without any jurisdiction to do so, it is invalid.

Renewal fees charged by the 2nd schedule of the Act on letters patent are not payable in respect of the letters of registration.—AUSTRALIAN GOLD RECOVERY CO. v. LAKE VIEW CONSOLS, P.C.; [1901] A. C. 142; 70 L. J. P. C. 14; 83 L. T. 541.

See also Bankruptcy, 6; Landlord and Tenant, 2.

PAWNBROKER:—

Unlawful pawning of stolen article—Conviction of pawner for larceny—Liability of pawner to further proceedings by pawnbroker—Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 93), s. 33.—Where a person steals an article and unlawfully pledges it with a pawnbroker, and is subsequently charged with the theft and is convicted, the pawnbroker does not thereby lose the right to take proceedings against the pawner under section 33 of the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872, because the pawner has been convicted of larceny by the owner of the goods.—PICKFORD v. CORSI, K.B.D., 537; [1901] 2 K. B. 213; 70 L. J. K. B. 710; 84 L. T. 627.

PEER.—See Divorce, 3.

PHARMACY ACTS:—

Sale of poison—"Seller"—Orders transmitted by shopkeeper to duly registered vendor—Pharmacy Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 121), ss. 1, 15, 17.—An action to recover a penalty under section 15 of the Pharmacy Act, 1868, was brought in the county court against the defendant, who was a florist, for having sold a certain weed-killer, which contained a large quantity of arsenic, and was admittedly a poison within that section, the defendant not being a duly registered chemist. The judge found as a fact the defendant acted only as agent for the chemical company who manufactured the weed-killer, and was in the position merely of a canvasser for orders, with authority to receive money on account of the company, and that the defendant was not the "seller" of the poison within the Act.

Held, that, as the county court judge had found as a fact that there was no contract of sale as between the defendant and the purchaser, and as there was some evidence to support that finding, the court could not interfere to set it aside.

Decision of the Divisional Court (48 W. R. 335, [1900] 1 Q. B. 454) affirmed.—PHARMACEUTICAL SOCIETY v. WHITE, C.A., 407; [1901] 1 Q. B. 601; 70 L. J. K. B. 386; 84 L. T. 188.

POLICE:—

Pension—"Annual pay" — Special allowance—Police Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 45), s. 1; Sched. I., Parts 1, 3.—A constable in the metropolitan police was selected by the Commissioners of Police for permanent special duty at the House of Lords, and he received for that special duty a payment of 7s. a week in addition to his ordinary pay as a police constable. He performed this duty and received the payment for several years up to the date of his retirement.

Held, that the sum of 7s. was not part of the constable's "annual pay" within the meaning of the Police Act, 1890, so as to entitle him to have it taken into account in calculating the amount of his pension.

Decision of the Queen's Bench Division (48 W. R. 494, [1900] 1 Q. B. 680) affirmed.—UPPERTON v. RIDLEY, C.A., 340; [1901] 1 Q. B. 384; 70 L. J. Q. B. 249; 84 L. T. 18.

POOR LAW:—

1. Rating—Coal mine—Gross and rateable values—Underground roads and airways—Expenses of keeping in repair—Working expenses or "repairs"—Deduction of, from gross value—Parochial Assessments Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96), s. 1.—In rating a coal mine to poor rate the annual expenses properly incurred in keeping in repair the permanent main underground roads and airways—their maintenance in proper repair being necessary to maintain the coal mine in a state to command the rent—are not working expenses of the mine, but are "repairs" within the meaning of section 1 of the Parochial Assessments Act, 1836, and are, therefore, under that section, to be deducted from the gross estimated rental in arriving at the rateable value on which the rate is to be made.

A coal mine extended underground into the parish of D., the shafts or pits for raising the coal being in another parish and not in the parish of D. The part of the mine in the parish of D. consisted of the permanent main roads for conveying the coal from the working places to the shafts, the permanent main airways for ventilating the mine, the working places at the face of the coal, and the temporary roads. The owners of the mine, who under their lease paid a royalty rent for the coal obtained, incurred an annual expenditure in keeping in repair these permanent main roads, airways, &c., and such expenditure was necessary to maintain the mine in a state to command the rent.

Held, that, in rating that part of the mine which was within the parish of D., the expenses so incurred in keeping in repair the permanent roads, airways, &c., were "repairs," and were to be deducted from the gross estimated rental in arriving at the rateable value.—BROWN v. ROTHERHAM UNION, Q.B.D.; 83 L. T. 193.

2. Rating—Exemption of underground sewers—Extent of exemption.—Where exemption from rateability is claimed for an underground sewer vested in a public body, it must be shown, first, that the sewer is quite underground, so that the surface under which it runs is not occupied or in any way affected by it; and, secondly, that no payment is made to the owners of the sewer for the use of it by others.

Decision of the Queen's Bench Division (48 W. R. 382, [1900] 1 Q. B. 365) affirmed.—YSTRADYFODWG SEWERAGE BOARD v. NEWPORT ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, C.A., 292; [1901] 1 Q. B. 406; 70 L. J. K. B. 318; 84 L. T. 40.

3. Rating—General district rate—Appeal—Reduction of valuation—Demand note—Summons—Matter of complaint arising within six months of issue of summons—Public Health Act, 1875—Jervis' Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 1.—Where, on appeal against an assessment for the poor rate, the rateable value of premises is reduced and the amount of the general district rate is in consequence altered so as to agree with such reduced valuation, a summons may be issued to enforce a demand made for the payment of arrears of the amended district rate if the demand for such amended rate has been made within six months of the issue of the summons.

The right to demand the reduced amount of the amended rate comes into operation for the first time when the amended rate is made in accordance with the reduced valuation, and the fact that a demand for the payment of arrears of the district rate on the higher valuation had been made more than six months previous to the issue of the summons does not cause the claim, in respect of which the summons was issued, to be barred by virtue of section 11 of Jervis' Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43).—KEETON v. SHEFFIELD COAL CO., K.B.D., 349; [1901] 2 K. B. 26; 70 L. J. K. B. 374; 84 L. T. 387.

4. Rating — Lairages — Profit-earning capacity—Evidence of receipts and expenditure—Admissibility of evidence—Principle of assessment.—In the assessment of premises to the poor rate the duty which the Legislature has imposed upon the overseers is to ascertain, as a matter of fact, what sum a tenant will reasonably give for them by the year, making the usual deductions. In ascertaining this sum the circumstances of the particular occupation, also the receipts and expenditure, are legitimate objects for consideration.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (48 W. R. 259, [1900] 1 Q. B. 143) affirmed.—MERSEY DOCKS v. BIRKENHEAD UNION, H.L., 610; [1901] A. C. 175; 70 L. J. K. B. 584; 84 L. T. 542.

5. Rating—Museum—Established by Act of Parliament—Public admission—Possibility of beneficial occupation.—S. Museum was established by an Act of Parliament under which the building and its contents were vested in trustees named in the Act and their successors. To these trustees was given the control of the building and museum subject to regulations contained in or made under the authority of the Act. One of these regulations was that the museum should be open on two days in each week during the months of April, May, and June each year to amateurs and students of architecture, and to persons who requested and obtained admission at any other times. Two rooms were to be set aside for the residence of a curator.

The curator, besides taking care of the museum, collected the rents of a house which was settled as an endowment of the museum; and while the museum was closed to visitors the trustees of it met therein for the purpose of distributing the funds arising under a trust created for the benefit of poor architects by the founder of the museum.

Held, that the rights conferred on the public by the Act were not such as to exclude all beneficial occupation on the part of the trustees, and that consequently the building was rateable.—SOANE MUSEUM TRUSTEES v. BLOOMSBURY VESTRY, Q.B.D.; 83 L. T. 248.

6. Rating—Railway company—Gravel pits—Exhaustion of subject-matter of assessment—Value of occupation when rate made—Occupation—Land.—A company purchased of the owner of a bed of gravel the gravel in three separate plots of land, with the right to dig and remove it. A time was fixed in each case in which the gravel might be taken out, and the company were bound to level the ground and replace the top soil, and to give the owner possession at the date named. The company were assessed in one assessment in respect of their occupation of the three plots, and a rate was subsequently made on the basis of this assessment. When this rate was made the company were still in occupation of the three plots, and were at work on the gravel in one of them, but all the gravel in the other two plots had been taken out, and they were only used as storage ground for gravel dug by the company. On a case stated at quarter sessions,

Held, that the company were rateable on the value, at the time of making the rate, of the land in their occupation, and that the annual value ought to be taken at the amount of rent or royalty at which the same could then be reasonably expected to be let to a tenant from year to year, regard being had to the value of the gravel in the unexhausted plot, added to the value of the exhausted plots for storage purposes.—FARNHAM FLINT, GRAVEL, AND SAND CO. v. FARNHAM UNION, C.A.; [1901] 1 Q. B. 272; 70 L. J. Q. B. 130; 83 L. T. 660.

7. Rating—Railway—Indirectly productive portion of—Signal-box—Assessment.—The signal-boxes of a railway are for purposes of parochial rating to be treated, not as part of the running line, but as part of the indirectly productive portion of the railway, and are consequently to be separately assessed in the respective parishes in which they are situate.—MIDLAND RAILWAY CO. v. PONTEFRACT ASSESSMENT, K.B.D.; [1901] 2 K. B. 189; 70 L. J. K. B. 691; 84 L. T. 536.

8. Separation of parish from union—Amount to be paid by union to parish—Principle of apportionment—"Property" of the union—Jurisdiction of the Local Government Board—Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834 (4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76), s. 32—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), ss. 24 (2) (d), 26 (1).—In 1896 the Local Government Board made an order under section 32 of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834, for the separation of the parish of Willesden from the union of Hendon, of which theretofore it had been a part. In consequence of such order it became requisite, under the same section, for the board to ascertain the proportionate value to the parish of Willesden of the union of Hendon workhouse or "other property held or enjoyed by such union for the use of the poor or benefit of the ratepayers thereof," and also to "fix the amount to be received or paid, or secured to be paid, by" the parish of Willesden.

There were two annuities payable by the county council of Middlesex, under the Local Government Act, 1888, to the old undivided union of Hendon in respect of the salaries of registrars and costs of the officers.

Held, that these annuities came within the meaning of the words "other property" in section 32 of the Poor Law Act, 1834.

In ascertaining the proportionate value to a parish of a union of such annuities, and fixing the amount to be received or paid by such parish, the Legislature contemplated the capitalization and division of the annuities at the time of the separation of the parish from the union.

An apportionment of the annual sums according to the future rateable values of the union and parish respectively is not a fixing of the amount within the section.—REG. v. LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD, C.A., 226; [1901] 1 Q. B. 210; 70 L. J. Q. B. 272; 83 L. T. 648.

9. Settlement—Pauper lunatic—Amalgamation of part of one parish with whole of another parish—Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 61)—Poor Law Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 54)—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5).—Where a pauper has acquired a settlement in a parish, and subsequently a part of another parish is added to and amalgamated with the former, so that there results one enlarged parish, the pauper's settlement is not lost.

Reg. v. Inhabitants of Tipton, 3 Q. B. 215, and Dorking Union v. St. Saviour's Union, 46 W. R. 309, [1898] 1 Q. B. 594, distinguished.—WEST HAM GUARDIANS v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, K.B.D., 443; [1901] 1 Q. B. 720; 70 L. J. K. B. 503; 84 L. T. 471.

POWER:—

1. Appointment—Married woman—Restraint on anticipation—Release of power—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 52.—A married woman had, under a settlement executed on her marriage in 1892, a life interest in personalty, subject to a restraint on anticipation, with a power of appointment amongst her children.

Held, that under section 52 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, she could by deed unacknowledged release her power.—CHISHOLM, RE, HEMPHILL v. HEMPHILL, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; [1901] 2 Ch. 82; 70 L J. Ch. 533.

2. Appointment—Settlement of wife's property—Limitation "as she shall direct."—A marriage settlement dealing with real estate belonging to the wife provided that, should she survive her husband, which happened, the trustees should reconvey the lands to her "her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns respectively for her and their own use and benefit, or otherwise as she shall direct."

Held, that these words did not necessarily confer a general power of appointment on the wife, it appearing that such a power would defeat the whole scheme of the deed.—VAN GRUTTEN v. FOXWELL, H.L.; 84 L. T. 545.

3. Execution—Document "purporting" to be a will.—Under a settlement dated in 1848 a married woman had a power of appointment amongst her children exercisable by any deed or deeds, writing or writings, with or without power of revocation and new appointment, to be by her sealed and delivered in the presence of and attested by two or more credible witnesses, or by her last will or testament, "or any writing in the nature of or purporting to be a will or codicil." She signed a written document which was expressed to be her "last will," and which, if valid as a testamentary instrument, would have operated as an execution of the power. This document, having been insufficiently executed, was not admitted to probate,

Held, that although the document might not be "in the nature of" a will, yet, as it clearly "purported to be" the will of the donee of the power, it was a valid execution of the power.—BROAD, RE, SMITH v. DRAEGER, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1901] 2 Ch. 86; 70 L. J. Ch. 601; 84 L. T. 577.

4. Execution—Power exercisable by deed or writing duly executed or by will—Testamentary documents not admitted to probate—Exercise of power.—A power of appointment exercisable by deed or writing duly executed or by will is not validly exercised by testamentary documents executed by the donee, but attested by one witness only, and containing no reference to the power or to the property subject to it.—EDMONSTONE, RE, BEVAN v. EDMONSTONE, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 555.

5. Execution—Will—Exercise of special power of appointment—Ademption—Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 23.—It is a question of construction whether there has been a failure of an appointment under a power by reason of ademption.

The same principle applies whether the power is general or special.—DOWSETT, RE, DOWSETT v.

MEAKIN, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 268; [1901] 1 Ch. 398; 70 L. J. Ch. 149.

6. Execution — Special power of appointment— Power created subsequent to will purporting to execute it—Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), ss. 24, 27.—A special power of appointment is not well executed by general words of disposition in a will executed prior to the date of the instrument creating the power.

Decision of Byrne, J. (ante, p. 21, [1900] 2 Ch. 332), affirmed.—HAYES, RE, TURNBULL v. HAYES, C.A., 659.

7. Execution—Special power of appointment— Word "appoint" only.—A testatrix had a special power of appointment by will, given to her by the will of her father, over a share of his personal estate in favour of her nephews and nieces. The words of her will were simply "I appoint, devise, and bequeath my real estate, and the residue of my personal estate, to my trustees upon trust to sell or convert the same into money, and to pay and divide the proceeds (after paying my debts, funeral and testamentary expenses) equally between" four named nephews and nieces.

Held, that the power was executed.

Observations on dictum of Chatterton, V.C., in In re Richardson's Trusts, 17 L. R. Ir. 436, at p. 442, 35 W. R. Dig. 151.—MAYHEW, RE, SPENCER v. CUTBUSH, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 330; [1901] 1 Ch. 677; 70 L. J. Ch. 428; 84 L. T. 761.

PRACTICE:—

1. Appeal—Commercial cause—Transferring action to commercial list—Right of appeal. — An appeal lies from an order of the judge at chambers transferring a cause to the list of commercial causes, upon the ground that the cause is not a commercial cause.

Barry v. Peruvian Corporation, 44 W. R. 487, [1896] 1 Q. B. 208, followed.—SEA INSURANCE CO. v. CARR, C.A., 55; [1901] 1 Q. B. 7; 69 L. J. Q. B. 954; 83 L. T. 517.

2. Attachment — Service — Jurisdiction — Foreign order—Enrolment—Disobedience—Recovery of Debts Act (Ireland), 1801 (41 Geo. 3, c. 90), s. 6—Sale and Transfer of Land (Ireland) Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 72), s. 36.—Motion for leave to issue a writ of attachment. An order was made by one of the land judges of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Ireland upon the respondent A. H. S. to lodge in court on oath all documents in his custody, power, or procurement relating to certain property in Ireland ordered to be sold (or account for the same on oath) within ten days after service of the said order upon him. By an order made the 26th of March, 1901, the Irish order was ordered to be enrolled in the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice in England. On the 11th of April, 1901, a copy of the order of the 26th of March, 1901, was personally served on A. H. S. in London.

Held, that as the order to lodge the deeds in court had not been served on A. H. S. in Ireland, and no leave had been obtained to serve that order on A. H. S. out of the jurisdiction, there had been no disobedience, and the motion for leave to issue a writ of attachment must be refused.—SYNGE, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 84 L. T. 756.

3. Attachment of person—Refusal to commit— Interlocutory appeal—Leave of court—Liberty of subject—Supreme Court of Judicature (Procedure) Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 16), s. 1 (1) (b) (i.).—An interlocutory order dismissing a motion to commit is not a case where the liberty of the subject is concerned within the exception in (i.) of section 1 (1) (b) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Procedure) Act, 1894. No appeal from such an order can be brought, consequently, without the leave of the judge or of the Court of Appeal.—BOWDEN v. YOXALL, C.A., 247; [1901] 1 Ch. 1; 70 L. J. Ch. 5; 83 L. T. 419.

4. Compromise—Power to bind absent parties — R.S.C., ord. 16, r. 9*a*.—A scheme for compromise of an action provided for setting aside a fund to make payments to bondholders of a certain company. This scheme was sanctioned by the Court of Appeal, and, under ord. 16, r. 9*a*, made binding on all the bondholders of the company. A certain number of bondholders failed to claim their rights within six years from the sanctioning of the compromise. On a motion to fix a time within which such bondholders must come in,

Held (Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissentiente), that, there being nothing in the original scheme to determine the period within which claims under it must be made, the court had no jurisdiction to vary the order by introducing such a term.—COLLINGHAM v. SLOPER, C.A., 404; [1901] 1 Ch. 769; 70 L. J. Ch. 361; 84 L. T. 289.

5. Costs—Action founded on contract—Separate causes of action against two defendants—Sum not exceeding £50 recovered against one—Ord. 65, r. 12. —The plaintiffs, who were trustees of a friendly society, brought an action in the High Court against two defendants claiming, as against the first defendant, the treasurer of the society, a sum of £90 as money had and received by him for the society, and as against both defendants the sum of £50 upon a joint and several bond for that amount in favour of the society for the due performance by the first defendant of his duties as treasurer. At the trial the plaintiffs recovered judgment against the first defendant for £90, and against the two defendants on the bond for £50.

Held, that, under ord. 65, r. 12, the plaintiffs were not entitled, as against the second defendant, to costs on the High Court scale.—DUXBURY v. BARLOW, C.A., 450; [1901] 2 Q. B. 23; 70 L. J. K. B. 478; 84 L. T. 518.

6. Costs—Action "which could have been commenced in a county court"—Claim in tort exceeding £50— Less than £10 recovered—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 116.—The plaintiff in an action of trover claimed a sum exceeding £50. He recovered a sum less than £10.

Held, that the action was one "which could have been commenced in a county court" within the meaning of section 116 of the County Courts Act, 1888, and therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to costs.

Lovejoy v. Cole, 43 W. R. 48, [1894] 2 Q B. 861, approved.

Goldhill v. Clarke, 68 L. T. Rep. 414, 41 W. R. Dig. 173, disapproved.—SOLOMON v. MULLINER, C.A., 364; [1901] 1 Q. B. 76; 70 L. J. Q. B. 165; 83 L. T. 493.

7. Costs on higher scale—Partition action—Special grounds arising out of the difficulty of the case—Ord. 65, r. 9.—The display by a solicitor of exceptional skill or ability in conducting a partition action and the proceedings incident thereto, involving great difficulty and labour, is not a "special ground" within the meaning of ord. 65, r. 9, so as to empower the court to order the taxation of the costs of the proceedings as between solicitor and client on the higher scale.

In such a case the court has no jurisdiction to order costs to be taxed on the higher scale.

In re Leeuw, 93 Law Times 333, and Marriott v. Cobbett, 38 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL 620, not followed. —RIVINGTON v. GARDEN, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 279; [1901] 1 Ch. 561; 70 L. J. Ch. 282; 84 L. T. 197.

8. Costs—Company — Debenture-holder's action — Insufficient assets.—Where the assets in a debenture-holder's action are insufficient to pay the debentures in full, the plaintiff is entitled to solicitor and client costs out of the fund realized.—NEW ZEALAND MIDLAND RAILWAY CO., RE, SMITH v. LUBBOCK, C.A., 529; 70 L. J. Ch. 595; 84 L. T. 852.

9. Costs—Partition—Sale—Mortgages on shares—One set of costs in respect of each share—General rule —Discretion of court.—In an action for sale and distribution of the proceeds in lieu of partition, it appeared from the chief clerk's certificate that six persons were beneficially interested in the property, and that some had mortgaged their shares.

The property was sold and the proceeds paid into court to the credit of the action, and invested in New Consols.

Upon the further consideration of the action, the question was raised whether each mortgagee who had been served with notice of the proceedings and attended ought to be allowed a separate set of costs out of the fund in court before distribution thereof, or whether only one set of costs should be allowed out of the fund in respect of each share.

Held, that only one set of costs should, as a general rule, be allowed out of the fund in respect of each share, but that the court had a discretion in the matter.—LANGRISH v. VASE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; 84 L. T. 761.

10. Costs—Security for costs—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37)—Appeal from county court.—An appeal against a decision of a county court judge upon an application for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, is not in the nature of a motion for a new trial, and the appellant can be ordered to give security for the costs of the appeal.—HARWOOD AND ABRAHAMS, RE, C.A.; [1901] 2 K. B. 304; 70 L. J. Ch. 746; 84 L. T. 857.

11. Costs — Sequestration — Service — Practice — R. S. C., ord. 41, r. 5; ord. 43, rr. 6, 7.—In the case of a writ of sequestration issued by leave of a judge to enforce payment of costs under ord. 43, r. 7, the provisions of ord. 41, r. 5, and ord 43, r. 6, are inapplicable. Therefore in such a case it is not necessary that the order for payment of costs should limit a time for payment or should bear the indorsement mentioned in ord. 41, r. 5, nor is personal service of it essential.

In re Lumley, Ex parte Cathcart, [1894] 2 Ch. 271, followed.—DEAKIN, RE, CATHCART, EX PARTE, C.A.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 478; 83 L. T. 39.

12. Costs—Taxation—Official solicitor—Guardian ad litem—Party and party or solicitor and client taxation—Costs of issue that failed—R. S. C., ord. 65, r. 13.—In taxing the costs of a guardian ad litem, the established practice is to tax the costs as between party and party and not as between solicitor and client, in the absence of a direction to the contrary in the order directing the taxation.

The costs of a guardian ad litem ought to be taxed on the footing that he is a successful party. The costs, therefore, even of an issue on which he has failed ought not to be disallowed him.—EADY v. ELSDON, C.A., 595; [1901] 2 K. B. 460; 70 L. J. K. B. 701; 84 L. T. 615.

13. Costs—Taxation—Party and party costs—Depositions taken on examination before trial not used at trial—Ord. 65, r. 27 (29).—Where, under an order for examination, a witness is examined before trial, but the witness is present at the trial and his depositions are not read, the costs of his examination may be allowed if, having regard to the state of affairs at the date of the examination, they were reasonably and properly incurred.—BARTLETT v. HIGGINS, C.A., 449; [1901] 2 K. B. 230; 70 L. J. K. B. 621; 84 L. T. 509.

14. Costs—Taxation — Public authority — Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1.—An action was brought against a public authority to restrain it from infringing a patent by the use of electric meters. The public authority used the meters under powers conferred on it by a provisional order duly confirmed by Act of Parliament. The action was dismissed with costs. Upon summons to review taxation, Held, that the public authority was entitled to costs as between solicitor and client under section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893.—CHAMBERLAIN v. BRADFORD CORPORATION, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 83 L. T. 518.

15. Costs — Taxation — Public authority, action against—Discretion to deprive successful defendants of costs—R. S. C., ord. 65, r. 1—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1 (b).—The Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1 (b), which provides that, wherever in an action within the Act a judgment is obtained by the defendant, it shall carry costs to be taxed as between solicitor and client, does not take away the discretion given to the judge at the trial by ord. 65, r. 1, to deprive the successful defendant of costs for good cause.

So held, affirming the judgment of Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J.

What constitutes "good cause" within ord. 65, r. 1, discussed.—BOSTOCK v. RAMSEY URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, C.A.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 616; 83 L. T. 358.

16. Costs—Taxation—Shorthand-writer's notes—Time for application for—Power of court to vary its own order.—The ordinary order of judgment with costs does not include the costs of a transcript of the shorthand-writer's notes. Such costs must be applied for at the hearing. Where an order has been made for judgment with costs, and that order has been drawn up, the court has no power to alter its decree by subsequently allowing special costs.—"TURRET COURT," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 84 L. T. 331.

17. Costs—Taxation—Special fee to counsel—Disallowance.—A "special" fee to leading counsel was disallowed on taxation as between party and party, although, owing to previous retainer by other parties, the services of a leader practising in the particular court could not be obtained by the party whose costs formed the subject of taxation.—PARSON v. PARSON, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; [1901] 2 Ch. 176; 70 L. J. Ch. 563; 84 L. T. 709.

18. Discovery—Affidavit of documents—Further affidavits—R. S. C., ord. 31, r. 19*a* (3).—To justify an application for discovery of documents under rule 19*a* (3) of order 31, the party making the application must in his affidavit name and specify, so that they can be identified, the particular documents of which he desires discovery.

It is not sufficient to make a general affidavit based on a priori reasoning that certain classes of documents must be in his opponent's possession or power.

The discovery sought must be of a species, not a genus.—WHITE v. SPAFFORD, C.A.; [1901] 2 K. B. 241; 70 L. J. K. B. 658; 84 L. T. 574.

19 Discovery—Privilege—Communications between solicitor and client—"Evasion" of statute—Production of documents.—An information against executors claimed duties under a colonial statute, alleging that the defendants' testator had some time before his death executed voluntary conveyances of colonial property "with intent to evade the payment of duty" under the statute. One of the defendants, a member of the firm of solicitors whom the testator had instructed to prepare the conveyances, was ordered to produce the notes and records of these instructions, but objected to do so on the ground that they were privileged communications between solicitor and client for the purpose of obtaining advice.

Held, first, that the privilege was not lost by death of the testator; and secondly, that the word "evade" was ambiguous and capable of two meanings, one a perfectly innocent one, and that, without expressing any opinion as to the meaning in which it was used in the statute, there was no proof or even allegation of any fraud or illegality to displace the privilege.

The decision of the Court of Appeal ([1900] 2 Q. B. 163) reversed.—BULLIVANT v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR VICTORIA, H.L.; [1901] A. C. 196; 70 L. J. K. B. 645; 84 L. T. 737.

20. Evidence — Interlocutory affidavits—Hearsay evidence—Grounds of "information and belief"—Omission to state such grounds—Costs—Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, ord. 38, r. 3.—Interlocutory affidavits containing statements of the deponent's "information and belief" must in all cases state the sources of such "information and belief," in accordance with the provisions of ord. 38, r. 3, otherwise they will be regarded by the court as inadmissible as evidence, and the cost of their preparation, so far as relates to such statements, must be borne by the party responsible for them.—YOUNG MANUFACTURING CO., RE, C.A., 115; [1900] 2 Ch. 753; 83 L. T. 418.

21. Evidence—Presumption—Past child-bearing—Widow.—The practice of the court in the case of spinsters as to the presumption of a woman being past the age of child-bearing was adopted in the case of a widow who had had a son, but who had subsequently lived many years as a married woman without further children.

A widow, aged fifty-six and three months, who had a son thirty-four years ago, and had lived as a married woman twenty-three years subsequently without further children. was presumed past child-bearing.—WHITE, RE. WHITE v. EDMOND, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 429; [1901] 1 Ch. 570; 70 L. J. Ch. 300; 84 L. T. 199.

22. Injunction — Deceit — Action of — Get-up — Passing off—Evidence—Probability by deception—Inspection—View by judge—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 50, r. 4.—In an action for deceit brought on the ground that a particular article used by the defendant is a colourable imitation of the plaintiff's, the conclusion of the judge, on a view by him of the two articles—such as two rival omnibuses—under the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, ord. 50, r. 4, that the defendant's article is calculated to deceive, is not sufficient by itself to support an injunction. The judge must be satisfied by independent evidence that there is at least a reasonable probability of deception.

North Cheshire and Manchester Brewery Co. v. Manchester Brewery Co., [1899] A. C. 83, considered.—LONDON GENERAL OMNIBUS CO. v. LAVELL, C.A.; [1901] 1 Ch. 135; 70 L. J. Ch. 17; 83 L. T. 453.

23. Injunction—Motion by defendant before pleading — Mandatory interlocutory injunction against plaintiff—Order to deliver up possession of a house.—A defendant may before delivering a counterclaim apply by motion for an injunction against the plaintiff if he and the plaintiff are both suing upon the same contract.

An interlocutory injunction was, on the defendant's motion, granted to restrain the plaintiff from interfering with or disturbing the defendant in his possession and occupation of a house.

Spurgin v. White, (1860) 2 Giff. 473, followed.—COLLISON v. WARREN, C.A.; [1901] 1 Ch. 812; 70 L. J. Ch. 382; 84 L. T. 482.

24. Judgment or order—Correction of mistake—Certificate of taxing-master—Accidental omission in bill of costs—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 28, r. 11.—A plaintiff, who had obtained judgment for a certain sum with costs, carried in his bill of costs for taxation, but one item which ought to have been included was accidentally omitted. After the taxing-master had given his certificate the mistake was discovered.

Held, that the court had power to order that the item should be referred to the taxing-master, and that his certificate should be amended.—CHESSUM v. GORDON, C.A., 309; [1901] 1 Q. B. 694; 70 L. J. K. B. 394; 84 L. T. 137.

25. Particulars—Reasonable ground for belief—Company—Director—Liability.—Where in an action for compensation under the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, in respect of alleged false statements in a prospectus, the defendant pleads that he had reasonable grounds for believing the statements to be true, he may be ordered to give particulars of the grounds of such belief.—ALMAN v. OPPERT, C.A.; 70 L. J. K. B. 745; 84 L. T. 825.

26. Parties—Mortgage—Action for foreclosure—Executrix only made defendant—Rector and churchwardens residuary legatees—Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 1, sub-section 1; s. 2, sub-section 1—Ord. 16, r. 8.—A testator after making certain bequests, gave to his wife an estate for life (determinable on certain events) in the residue of his estate, with remainder over to the rector and churchwardens of W. C. Church. The estate of the testator was, however, mortgaged to the extent of £30,000.

In a foreclosure action by the mortgagee against the wife, the sole legal representative of the testator, the wife entered an appearance but delivered no defence.

On a motion for judgment it was ordered that the rector and churchwardens of W. C. Church be made parties to the action.—WATTS v. LANE, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; 84 L. T. 144.

27. Parties—Representative action—Action on behalf of a class of the public—Joinder of plaintiffs—Joinder of several causes of action—R. S. C., ord. 16, rr. 1, 9.—Ord. 16, r. 9, which provides for persons suing or being sued as representing a class, is not confined to persons who have or claim some beneficial proprietary right which they are asserting or defending. To justify a person suing in a representative character it is enough that he has a common interest with those whom he claims to represent.

Several plaintiffs sued on behalf of themselves and all others the growers of fruit, flowers, vegetables, roots and herbs, within the meaning of the Covent Garden Market Act, 1828, to enforce various preferential rights to stands in the market, which they alleged to have been given to the class of growers by the Act. The defendant was the lord of the market.

Held, that without prejudging the construction of the Act the plaintiffs had an interest in common, and that the defendant was not entitled to have the action stayed either on the ground that the plaintiffs had no beneficial proprietary right, or that the joinder of plaintiffs claiming separate and different rights under the Act, both personally and as representing a class, would embarrass or delay the trial.

Decision of Court of Appeal ([1899] 1 Ch. 494) affirmed by Lords Macnaghten, Morris and Killanin, and Shand, the Earl of Halsbury, L.C., and Lord Brampton dissenting. Temperton v. Russell, [1893] 1 Q. B. 435, reflected on.

Quære, whether it was necessary to join the Attorney-General as a defendant. — BEDFORD (DUKE OF) v. ELLIS, H.L.; [1901] A. C. 1; 70 L. J. Ch. 102; 83 L. T. 686.

28. Pauper—Suing in formâ pauperis—Assigning official solicitor to assist pauper—Ord. 16, r. 26.—The official solicitor of the court ought not, except in special circumstances, to be assigned to assist a litigant suing or defending in formâ pauperis.—MOUTRIE v. MITCHELL, C.A., 274; [1901] 1 Q. B. 596; L. J. K. B. 401; 84 L. T. 187.

29. Payment out—Estate duty—Fund in court—Tenant for life—Finance Act, 1900 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 7), s. 11.—When payment out of court is authorized of funds in which one of the petitioners had a life interest now released, the practice of the court is to retain a sufficient sum of money to satisfy the amount of estate duty payable in the event of the death of the tenant for life within twelve months of the date of the release.—TAYLOR v. PONCIA, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 596.

30. Payment out—Fund in court—Payment to wrong parties—Stop order—Liability of Treasury to replace fund—Default of Paymaster-General—Court of Chancery (Funds) Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 44), s. 5.—"All" the property of a bankrupt was by an agreement—confirmed by an order of the court—vested in a company, and the bankruptcy annulled. The agreement contained a list of the bankrupt's properties, which did not, however, include a fund in court to which the bankrupt, unknown to any of the parties to the agreement or their solicitors, was then absolutely entitled. The late bankrupt subsequently obtained an order of the court for payment out to him of the fund upon affidavits that he had not encumbered. No stop order was ever obtained against the fund. The same solicitor acted for the bankrupt in both matters. Upon petition by the company claiming the fund and asking that the Treasury might be ordered to replace it, Held, (1) that the agreement and vesting order vested the fund in the company, and that the late bankrupt and his solicitor were severally liable to pay the amount of the fund to the company; (2) on the authority of an unreported case of Jones v. Jones, that the Paymaster-General had not been "guilty of default" within section 5 of the Court of Chancery (Funds) Act, 1872, with respect to the payment out, and that the Treasury were not, therefore, bound to replace it.—BATH v. BATH, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 341; [1901] 1 Ch. 460; 70 L. J. Ch. 270; 84 L. T. 107.

31. Striking out defence—Frivolous and vexatious—Abuse of process of court—Admissions in correspondence—Judgment for plaintiff—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 25, r. 4; ord. 32, r. 6.—In an action for specific performance of an agreement to purchase leasehold property, the court, upon the pleadings and correspondence, having come to the conclusion that the defence was a dishonest one, and put in for the purpose of gaining time, ordered it to be struck out under ord. 25, r. 4, and gave immediate judgment for the plaintiffs. — MACKELLAR v. HORNSEY, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 301.

32. Transfer—Crown—Prerogative of—Action by Attorney-General—Relator—Choice of tribunal.—The fiat of the Attorney-General merely authorizes the relator to proceed with a matter involving public interests, but does not clothe him with any prerogative of the Crown. Nor is it the practice of the Attorney-General, on issuing his fiat, to exercise any discretion as to the tribunal before which the action should be tried.

The court has, therefore, the same discretion in dealing with an application for change of tribunal as if the tribunal had been elected by the relator suing as plaintiff.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 152), reversed.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. WILSON, C.A., 195; 70 L. J. Ch. 234; 83 L. T. 646.

33. Trial—New trial—Appeal to House of Lords—Competency—Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 68), s. 9.—By section 9 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 68), " . . . The decision of the Court of Appeal on any question arising under the Acts relating to divorce and matrimonial causes, . . . shall be final except where the decision either is upon the grant or refusal of a decree on a petition for dissolution or nullity of marriage, . . . or is upon a question of law on which the Court of Appeal give leave to appeal, and, save as aforesaid, no appeal shall lie to the House of Lords under the said Acts."

Where the Divorce Court has granted a decree nisi after a trial before a jury, and the Court of Appeal has ordered a new trial, an appeal lies to the House of Lords against the order granting a new trial.—BUTCHART v. BUTCHART, H.L.; [1901] A. C. 276; 70 L. J. P. 29; 84 L. T. 209.

34. Writ—Solicitor—Undertaking to enter appearance—Duration of undertaking—R. S. C., ord. 8, r. 1; ord. 9, r. 1.—The solicitors of a defendant, with the defendant's authority, upon the issue of a writ of summons gave the plaintiff a written undertaking in these terms, "We accept service" (of the writ) "for the defendant and will enter an appearance in due course."

Held, that such an undertaking continued binding on the defendant and his solicitors even after the lapse of more than twelve months from the date of issue of the writ, and could be enforced by attachment of the defendant's solicitors.

Judgment of Farwell, J. (ante. p. 199), affirmed.—KERLY, RE, C.A., 211; [1901] 1 Ch. 467; 70 L. J. Ch. 189; 83 L. T. 699.

See also Administration, 3; Bankruptcy, 22-24; Company, 30; Divorce, 4-18; Landlord and Tenant, 11; Land Clauses Acts, 7; Lunacy, 3; Market.

PRESCRIPTION.—See Easement, 3, 4, 7; Inclosure; Light; Vendor and Purchaser, 4.

PRINCIPAL and AGENT:—

1. Authority—Power of attorney—Construction—General power to borrow—Money applied by agent for his own purposes—Acceptance of bills "per pro"—Action for money had and received—Application of equitable principles—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 25.—A power of attorney which authorizes the agent in England of an Australian firm to purchase goods in connection with the business carried on by the principal, and either for cash or on credit, and, "where necessary, in connection with any purchases made on my behalf as aforesaid or in connection with my said business to make, draw, sign, accept, or indorse any bill or bills of exchange . . . and to sign my name, or my said trading name, to any cheques or orders for the payment of money on my banking account in London, England," does not confer a general borrowing power on the agent.

Money borrowed by such agent under the power from a lender who is fixed with notice of the contents of the power of attorney, and secured by bills of exchange accepted by him in the name of his principal and paid into the London banking account of the firm, and then drawn out by the agent and applied for his own purposes, cannot be recovered in an action for money had and received to the use of the lender in the absence of proof by the lender that the principal knew, or had the means of knowledge, that the money, whilst it remained on the banking account, was the money of the lender, and not of the agent, or else that the principal had the benefit of it.

Moses v. Macferlan, 2 Burr. 1005, and Marsh v. Keating, 1 Bing. N. C. 198, discussed and applied. —JACOBS v. MORRIS. Ch.D. Farwell, J., 365; [1901] 1 Ch. 261; 70 L. J. Ch. 183; 84 L. T. 112.

2. Commission—House agent—Special bargain as to commission—Purchaser procured—Default of purchaser—Purchase not completed.—The owner of certain houses, who was desirous of selling, made an agreement with an agent in the following terms: "I agree to accept a sum of £1,150 for the above property, and you are to be at liberty to receive anything over and above that as a commission, it being understood that I am to receive the full sum of £1,150 without deduction."

The agent found a purchaser who entered into a contract to purchase for £1,250, but the purchase was never completed owing to the default of the purchaser.

Held (reversing the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division), that the agent was not entitled to recover commission under the agreement.—BEALE v. BOND, C.A.; 84 L. T. 313.

3. Fraud of agent—Sale of goods—Conduct of principal enabling agent to commit the fraud—Estoppel.—The plaintiffs, who were timber merchants, imported timber which they warehoused at the docks. The timber, when sold by them, was delivered to purchasers by means of delivery orders addressed by the plaintiffs to the dock company. The plaintiffs gave their confidential clerk authority to sign delivery orders for the purpose of carrying through sales, and gave the dock company notice to honour delivery orders signed by him. The clerk, by means of delivery orders, signed by him in fraud of the plaintiffs, had certain timber at the docks transferred into a fictitious name, and then sold the timber in this fictitious name to the defendants, who acted bonâ fide in the transaction, and he converted the purchase-money to his own use. In a common law action against the defendants to recover damages for the conversion of the timber,

Held, Stirling, L.J., dissenting, that the plaintiffs had by their conduct in giving their clerk authority to sign delivery orders enabled him to commit the fraud, and that therefore the loss must fall upon them.—FARQUHARSON v. KING, C.A., 673.

4. Power of attorney—Transfer of stock—Forged signature—Implied authority—Stockbroker—Liability—Indemnity.—A stockbroker who executes a transfer of stock as attorney under a power impliedly warrants that he is the duly authorized agent of the stockholder. If this is a misstatement of fact, even though honestly made in ignorance of the true state of facts—as, for instance, if a signature on the power has been forged without the knowledge of the stockbroker—he is nevertheless liable for any loss thereby occasioned.—OLIVER v. BANK OF ENGLAND, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 391; [1901] 1 Ch. 652; 70 L. J. Ch. 377; 84 L. T. 253.

5. Secret commission—Bribe—Action against briber—Money had and received—Amount recoverable.—The ascertained amount of bribes given by a vendor to the buying agent of a purchaser may be recovered by the purchaser from the vendor as money had and received.

The court will not inquire into the motive of the vendor in giving the bribe, and there is an irrebuttable presumption that the agent was influenced by the bribe.

Semble also, that as between vendor and purchaser, the true price of the thing purchased is less than the amount charged by the amount of the bribe.—HOVENDEN v. MILLHOFF, C.A.; 83 L. T. 41.

6. Warranty of authority—Misrepresentation of fact—Liability of supposed agent.—An agreement was signed by the plaintiff and L. L. signed "for self and wife and Dr. C." He had not in fact authority from his wife or Dr. C. He believed and represented that he had his wife's authority. He stated, and the plaintiff knew, that he had not Dr. C.'s authority. In an action by the plaintiff against L. to be indemnified by him for the non-concurrence of his wife and Dr. C.,

Held, that L. had warranted his authority to sign for his wife, but not for Dr. C., and that he was, therefore, liable in damages to the plaintiff in respect of the former, but not of the latter, signature.

Smout v. Ilbery, 10 M. & W. 1, taken to be overruled by Collen v. Wright, 6 W. R. 123, 8 Ell. & Bl. 647.—HALBOT v. LENS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 214; [1901] 1 Ch. 344; 70 L. J. Ch. 125; 83 L. T. 702.

See also Banker, 3; Gaming, 4; Stock Exchange, 2, 3.

PROBATE:—

1. Administration—Application to pass over the widow of the deceased—Sufficient cause.—The court will not exercise its discretion, given by 21 Hen. 8, c. 5, s. 3, to pass over the widow of the deceased and grant administration to the next-of-kin, unless a very strong case of unfitness is made out against her.—CORY, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 84 L. T. 270.

2. Administration—Death of husband intestate and without issue—Letters of administration not taken out by widow—Intestate's estate of less value than £500—Death of widow intestate—Intestates' Estates Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 29), s. 1—Court of Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), s. 73.—A widow died intestate, without taking out letters of administration to her deceased husband's estate, which was of the net value of less than £500. The husband having died without issue, the whole of his estate belonged absolutely and exclusively to his widow under section 1 of the Intestates' Estates Act, 1890.

Held, that letters of administration would be granted to the administratrix of the widow without citing the next-of-kin.—GREEN, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 84 L. T. 61.

3. Administration—Grant to person without interest in the estate — Renunciation of next-of-kin solely entitled in distribution.—The court granted administration to a person who had no interest in the estate of an intestate, where the only next-of-kin, the sole person entitled in distribution, had renounced the right to the grant.

In the Goods of Johnson, (1862) 2 Sw. & Tr. 595, followed.—TRIGG, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 42.

4. Administration—Heir-at-law not cited—Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), s. 73—Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 2, sub-section 4.—Notwithstanding the provisions of section 2, sub-section 4, of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, and the fact that the heir-at-law of an intestate had not been cited, the court granted administration under section 73 of the Probate Act, 1857, to one of the next-of-kin, the heir-at-law being abroad and his address being unknown.—BLENKINSOP, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D., 336.

5. Administration—Husband and wife—Commorientes—Form of oath to lead grants of administration.—Where a husband and wife with all their children were said to have perished in a massacre, the court, upon affidavits that they were believed to have died intestate and uninsured, granted letters of administration to the respective next-of-kin of the husband and wife; and, further gave leave to vary the usual form of oath to lead the grants, by allowing the administrator and administratrix to swear that the husband and wife perished at the same time (named), and that, after due inquiries, there was no reason to believe that either survived the other.—BEYNON, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 141; 70 L. J. P. 31; 84 L. T. 271.

6. Administration—Intestacy—Renunciation by next-of-kin—Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), s. 73—Grant needed to complete title to leaseholds—"Special circumstances"—Grant to more remote of kin (brother) refused.—Under an intestacy, the sole property to which the deceased was entitled consisted of a one-third undivided share in certain leaseholds under the will of her grandfather, of whose estate the deceased's brother (the present applicant) was administrator de bonis non and himself entitled to another one-third undivided share. The sole next-of-kin renounced, and the husband of a deceased next-of-kin also renounced, and expressly consented to the brother taking a grant, which was required in order to complete the title on sale of the leaseholds in question.

Held, that no "special circumstances" had been shown for invoking the aid of section 73, and that the application by the brother for administration must be refused.—BROTHERTON, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 139; 70 L. J. P. 33; 84 L. T. 330.

7. Administration—Intestacy—Resealing—Colonial grant.—Where the executors of a will, under which a legacy of £250 was payable to the "personal representatives" of the testator's brother, who died intestate domiciled in one of the Australian colonies leaving no estate in this country, insisted on the re-sealing here of a grant of letters of administration which the brother's widow had obtained in the colony.

The court allowed the grant to be re-sealed.—SANDERS, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1900] P. 292; 83 L. T. 716.

8. Administration — Sureties dispensed with — Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), s. 81.—In a case of an estate where all the debts had been paid, and the persons applying for administration were entitled, as the duly constituted legal personal representatives in two other estates, to receive the whole of the residue, the court dispensed with sureties and directed that the bond of the applicants alone should be accepted.—PATON, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 188; 70 L. J. P. 49; 84 L. T. 570.

9. Practice — Administration bond — Creditor — Right to retain—Not "unduly" preferring.—Quære, whether a creditor, having given an administration bond to administer the estate rateably, is not bound not to prefer his own debt, despite the decision of Romer, J., in Davies v. Parry, 47 W. R. 429, [1899] 1 Ch. 602.—BELHAM, IN GOODS OF, RICHARDES v. YATES, P.D. & Ad.D., 448; 84 L. T. 300.

10. Practice—Administration—Will—Citation of parties interested—No appearance—Practice.—When the parties who are interested under an alleged will have been cited to appear and propound it, and, after being personally served with the citation, have neither appeared nor propounded the alleged will, the court will grant administration as to an intestate.—BOOTLE, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 84 L. T. 570.

11. Practice—Administration with will annexed—Testatrix deserted by her husband—Grant to daughter —Husband not cited—Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), s. 73.—The court passed over the husband of a testatrix without citation, and granted administration with the will annexed to her daughter where it appeared that the husband of the testatrix had left her many years before her death, and had never since been heard of, the daughter swearing that she believed herself to be the sole next-of-kin.—BYRNE, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 84 L. T. 570.

12. Practice—Will—Clerical error—Rectification—Refusal to insert another word.—Upon an application to rectify a clerical error in the residuary clause of a will,

Held, that words might be struck out, but that no fresh word could be inserted.—SCHOTT, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 190; 70 L. J. P. 46; 84 L. T. 571.

13. Will—Acknowledgment—Discrepancy between attestation clause and affidavit of attesting witness—No evidence of any writing on first page at time of execution.—In the case of a holograph will, the whole operative portion of which was written on the first page of a sheet of paper, the attestation clause containing the signature of the testator was written on the second page and stated that the will was "signed" by the testator in the presence of the witnesses. An affidavit, made by one witness only, stated that they did not see the first page at all, and set forth facts pointing to acknowledgment only in the presence of the witnesses.

Held, that the will was entitled to probate without notice to the next-of-kin.—MOORE, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 44; 70 L. J. P. 16; 84 L. T. 60.

14. Will—Cancellation—Mistake of testator as to effect of an earlier settlement.—A testator, on the execution of a will in 1895, caused a will of 1882 to be cancelled under the erroneous belief that funds comprised in a settlement of 1855 would, in the absence of certain provisions in the will of 1882, he divided equally amongst the children of his first marriage. In 1896 he executed a fresh will, and revoked the will of 1895, and later in 1896 he executed two codicils, but the settled funds were not mentioned in any of the documents of 1896.

In a suit by the executors propounding the will and codicils of 1896 together with the will of 1882.

Held, that the will of 1882 was, in law, a valid and subsisting testamentary document, and that it should be included with the three documents of 1896 in the probate.—STAMFORD v. WHITE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 46; 70 L. J. P. 9; 84 L. T. 269.

15. Will—Codicil—Inconsistency of documents—Intention—Consent.—When there are two inconsistent testamentary documents, and the court is satisfied that the second document, though purporting to be a last will and testament, was only intended to operate as a codicil of the former will, and there is no objection raised on the part of other parties interested, probate will be granted of both documents, the second being considered to be a codicil only.—SUMMERS, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 84 L. T. 271.

16. Will—Lost will—Draft—Probate—Testatrix confined in a lunatic asylum—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 116, sub-section 1 (e).—After making her will, a testatrix became of unsound mind, and was confined in a lunatic asylum. The will was seen after the date of the removal to the asylum, but was missing after the death of the testatrix. With the consent of the master in Lunacy and of the receiver of the deceased's property, appointed under the Lunacy Act of 1890, the court granted probate of the draft of the will made by the testatrix to her next-of-kin.—CRANDON, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; 84 L. T. 330.

17. Will—Nuncupative will—Volunteer soldier—Minor—Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 11—"In actual military service."—The test to be applied, in considering whether a nuncupative will of a soldier is entitled to probate under the 11th section of the Wills Act, is whether, before the will was made, some step has under orders been taken by the soldier in view of and preparatory to joining the forces in the field.

A printer's apprentice, who was a private in a volunteer battalion and resided with his father in Chichester, sent in his name for active service in the war then being waged in South Africa, was certified as fit by the medical inspector, and, pursuant to an order, went into barracks at Chichester, and while there made his will, being at that time under twenty-one years of age. An order was subsequently received from the military authorities pursuant to which he embarked with his regiment, and he died from a wound received in battle.

Held, that by taking the step of going into barracks with a view to being drafted to the seat of war, he had brought himself within the operation of section 11 of the Wills Act, and that he was, at the time he made his will, "a soldier in actual military service"; and, consequently, that his will, though made at a time when he was under age, was entitled to probate.—HISCOCK, IN GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 78; 70 L. J. P. 22; 84 L. T. 61.

See also Administration, 1.

PROHIBITION.—See Ecclesiastical Law, 4.

PUBLIC AUTHORITIES PROTECTION ACT.—See Practice 14, 15.

PUBLIC HEALTH.—See Factory Acts, 3; Justices, 4; Local Government, 5, 7, 9-13, 16, 20-22; Metropolis, 14, 15; Settled Land, 2.

RAILWAY:—

1. Colliery companies—Adjacent owners—Private line of railway—Way leave—Tolls chargeable to public.—The appellants and respondents were owners of adjacent collieries, and their respective predecessors in title had obtained a private Act of Parliament authorizing them to construct and maintain a private line of railway for the use of their respective collieries. The Act provided that the railway should be open to the public upon payment of a toll to the two companies. The appellants subsequently acquired another colliery adjacent to their original holding, and brought coals from it over the joint line.

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that they were not liable to pay tolls to the respondents in respect of such coals.—CALEDONIAN COAL CO. v. SEAHAM COLLIERY CO., P.C.; 84 L. T. 785.

2. Judgment creditor—Line not open to traffic—Receiver—Railway Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 27), s. 4.—Where the line of a railway company was incomplete and unlikely to be open to traffic for a considerable time, the court declined to appoint a receiver of the company's undertaking, on the ground that there were no duties for him to perform.

Whether the court has jurisdiction under section 4 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867, to appoint a receiver of the undertaking of a railway company, before the line is open to traffic, quære.—KNOTT END RAILWAY, RE, C.A., 469; [1901] 2 Ch. 8; 70 L. J. Ch. 463; 84 L. T. 433.

3. Passenger—Loss of life from explosives in a railway carriage—Negligence—Onus probandi—Appeal from Bengal.—Railway companies are bound to use proper care and skill in carrying their passengers; they are not liable as common carriers of passengers independently of negligence.

Where a passenger was killed in a railway carriage by an explosive illegally introduced into it,

Held, that the railway company was not liable in damages unless guilty of negligence in permitting the fireworks to be brought into the carriage. As it was not the duty of the company to search every parcel carried by a passenger, the onus was on the plaintiff to show that the parcels containing the fireworks suggested danger.

Collett v. London and North-Western Railway Co., 16 Q. B. 984, explained.—EAST INDIAN RAILWAY CO. v. KALIDAS MUKERJEE, P.C.; [1901] A. C. 396; 84 L. T. 210.

4. Passenger—Negligence—Closing of carriage door.—Where a passenger is seated in a railway carriage, the fact that his finger is crushed owing to the shutting of the carriage door by a railway servant on the platform is not evidence of negligence in an action against the railway company.

There is no duty cast upon the servants of a railway company to give warning of the shutting of a carriage door to passengers who are actually seated inside the carriage and are not in the act of getting in or out of it.—DRURY v. NORTH-EASTERN RALWAY CO., K.B.D.; [1901] 2 K. B. 322; 84 L. T. 658.

5. Passenger—Ticket—Incorporation of conditions—Delay caused by negligence of company—Liability of company for loss to passenger.—D. travelled by an early workman's train which arrived late, and he consequently lost a day's wages.

Held, that the railway company were not liable, because the printed notice on the back of the ticket —to the effect that the departure or arrival of the trains at the times specified in the time table was not guaranteed nor were the company under any circumstances to be held responsible for delay or detention, however occasioned, or any consequences arising therefrom — was a condition incorporated into the contract; and therefore the plaintiff could not recover, notwithstanding that the delay was caused by the admitted negligence of the defendants.—DUCKWORTH v. LANCASHIRE AND YORKSHIRE RAILWAY CO., K.B.D., 541; 84 L. T. 774.

6. Receiver and manager—Preferential payments—Working expenses — Proper outgoings — Damage caused by defective plant—Compensation—Railway Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 127), s. 4.—A judgment debt for damages caused to the property of a person using a railway by the neglect of the railway company to keep its plant in proper repair is not a working expense or other proper outgoing of the railway within section 4 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867, so as to be entitled to priority over other debts payable by a receiver and manager appointed under that section; and the costs carried by the judgment stand on the same footing in this respect. The priority given by the section is confined to working expenses and other proper outgoings, without which it would be impossible to carry on the railway.—WREXHAM, MOLD, &C., RAILWAY CO., RE, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 436; 69 L. J. Ch. 671; 83 L. T. 49.

7. Smoke—Locomotive emitting black smoke—Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 Vict. c. 20), s. 114—Regulation of Railways Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 119), s. 19.—Certain locomotives belonging to the appellants emitted black smoke for three minutes on various occasions. Evidence was given that the coal used was smoky coal and that it was unnecessary for a locomotive to emit smoke for longer than one minute, but no evidence was given that the locomotives were not constructed on the principle of consuming their own smoke.

Held, that an offence had been committed within section 114 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 as amended by section 19 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868.—SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY CO. v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, K.B.D.; 84 L. T. 632.

8. Superfluous land—Land over tunnel—Title by adverse possession against company—Separate ownership of surface stratum and tunnel—Telegraph wires over surface.—Land situated over a tunnel, though not superfluous land within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Acts, is not necessary to the undertaking of a railway company, and a title by adverse possession can be acquired to it against the company, carrying with it all rights to the air above the surface stratum, and, subject to the company's rights in the tunnel, to the soil below; and the company is therefore not entitled to carry telegraph wires over land above a tunnel to which such a title has been acquired.—MIDLAND RAILWAY CO. v. WRIGHT, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 474; [1901] 1 Ch. 738; 70 L. J. Ch. 411; 84 L. T. 225.

See also Lands Clauses Acts, 8; Master and Servant, 18; Mine, 3; Poor Law, 6, 7.

RATING.—See Local Government, 4, 14-18; Metropolis, 16, 17; Poor Law, 1-7; Tramway, 2.

REVENUE.—See Inland Revenue.

RIVER.—See Local Government, 21, 22.

SALE of GOODS:—

1. Appropriation—Bills drawn against particular shipments—Lien—Passing of property in the goods.—The defendants carried on business in London, and their practice was to sell in their own names goods shipped to them by P. & Co., who carried on business abroad. P. & Co. used to specify in advising drafts against what particular shipments the same were drawn, so as to enable the defendants to tell whether the particular shipments consigned to them did in fact cover the then outstanding drafts, but not to affect their right to treat all shipping documents as cover for the whole account between them and P. & Co.

P. & Co. used likewise to draw upon the plaintiffs, who also carried on business in London, against shipments of goods, bills which the plaintiffs accepted, P. & Co. afterwards forwarding to them, as security, before the bills reached maturity, bills drawn by P. & Co. on first-class firms (among them being the defendants), accompanied by the shipping documents of the goods shipped by them to such firms, and on such firms accepting the bills the plaintiffs would hand over to them the shipping documents which otherwise would have been retained.

The defendants having received instructions from P. & Co. to sell certain goods at a specified price, entered into contracts for the sale thereof. Subsequently P. & Co. wrote to the defendants that they had drawn upon them against the goods, and the bills were specified. The bills were drawn to the order of the plaintiffs by P. & Co. upon the defendants for various sums, and were together intended to provide for part of the credit or advances made by the plaintiffs to P. & Co.

Bills of lading for the goods, indorsed in favour of the defendants, were afterwards forwarded to them by P. & Co. The defendants took possession of the bills of lading, and applied them in satisfying, so far as they would go, the contracts into which they had entered; but, becoming doubtful as to the financial position of P. & Co.'s firm, they declined to accept the bills of exchange, and claimed to treat the proceeds of sale of the goods as available for payment of the general balance of account between themselves and P. & Co.

Held (affirming the decision of Buckley, J.), that there was no specific appropriation of the goods in favour of the plaintiffs; that the defendants were not compellable to accept the bills; and that nothing had been done to defeat the primary right of the defendants, in whose custody the goods were, to deal with them for their own purposes and irrespective of any rights of the plaintiffs.—KONIG v. BRANDT, C.A.; 84 L. T. 748.

2. Contract—Goods to be delivered c.i.f.—Delivery to shipper—Shortage in goods—Property in goods—Insurance of price and "profit."—In a contract for the sale and delivery of unascertained goods c.i.f., the shipment of a quantity of such goods substantially less than the quantity contracted to be sold is not a substantial or pro tanto execution of the contract.

Whether in such a contract the shipment of the full quantity would be, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary, a sufficient appropriation of the goods to vest the property in such goods in the purchaser, query.

Where such goods are insured by the vendor in his own name at their invoice price, together with an addition for "profit," and are lost during the voyage, the purchaser is not entitled to recover from the vendor the sum paid to him by the underwriters under this "profit" insurance.—HARLAND v. BURSTALL, K.B.D.; 84 L. T. 324.

3. Impossibility of performance—Implied condition

—Shipment by named steamer—Damage to steamer rendering shipment impossible—Condition excusing vendor.—The defendants sold to the plaintiffs a cargo of cotton seed to be shipped by a named steamer at Alexandria during the following January. The contract contained a clause that, in case of prohibition of export, blockade, or hostilities preventing shipment, the contract was to be cancelled. The steamer, before arriving at Alexandria, stranded, without the defendants' default, and was so damaged that it became impossible to load the cargo in January; and in December the defendants gave the plaintiffs notice of this fact.

Held, by A. L. Smith, M.R., and Romer, L.J. (Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting), that the contract was subject to the implied condition that the parties should be excused if, before breach, performance became impossible owing to the steamer ceasing to exist as a cargo-carrying steamer, without the defendants' default, when the time for the performance of the contract arrived.

Judgment of Mathew, J. ([1900] 2 Q. B. 298, 5 Com. Cas. 252, 48 W. R. Dig. 50), affirmed.—NICKOLL v. ASHTON, C.A., 513; [1901] 2 K. B. 126; 70 L. J. K. B. 600; 84 L. T. 804.

4. Rejection — Shipment — Passing of property—Goods not within the specification.—A contract for the sale of goods, to be of "about the specification" mentioned in the contract, provided that the goods were to be shipped in vessels to be provided by the purchasers, that the property in the goods was to be deemed to pass on shipment, and that, if any dispute arose as to the stipulations of the contract, the purchasers were not to reject the goods, but that the dispute was to be referred to arbitration.

Goods were shipped under the contract, 33 per cent. of which were neither within nor "about" the specification, nor commercially within its meaning.

Held, that the clause as to non-rejection did not operate so as to prevent the purchasers from rejecting the goods; that the acceptance of the goods by the captain of the ship did not pass the property, the captain being only the purchasers' agent to receive the goods for the purpose of carriage.—VIGERS v. SANDERSON, K.B.D., 411; [1901] 1 Q. B. 908; 70 L. J. K. B. 383; 84 L. T. 464.

5. Stoppage in transitu—Termination of transit—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4, sub-sections 1, 3—Passing of property—Acceptance.—Goods were sold by B. to S. "on rail" at a railway station to S.'s order. No memorandum in writing of the contract was signed by S. The railway company advised S. of the arrival of the goods at the station, and that they held them, not as carriers, but as warehousemen at owner's sole risk. S. did not acknowledge the advice note or inspect the goods, but he attempted to resell them. S. having become insolvent and not having paid B., the latter claimed to stop the goods in transitu, and the railway company redelivered the goods to B. In an action against the company by S.'s trustee in bankruptcy claiming damages for conversion, Held, that the transit of the goods was at an end; that the attempt by S. to resell the goods was evidence of an act done by S. in relation to the goods which recognized a pre-existing contract, and, therefore, evidence that S. had "accepted" the goods within section 4 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893.

Semble, non-compliance with the provisions of section 4 by a buyer of goods does not prevent the property in the goods from passing to the buyer.—TAYLOR v. GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY CO., K.B.D., 431; [1901] 1 Q. B. 774; 70 L. J. K. B. 499; 84 L. T. 770.

6. Trade description—Oral statement explaining meaning of mark upon goods—Merchandize Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), s. 3.—A mark applied to goods, although it is unintelligible in itself, and is not, according to the custom of the trade, commonly taken to be an indication of any of the matters mentioned in section 3 (1) of the Merchandize Marks Act, 1887, will, if orally explained by the seller to the buyer to be intended to indicate one of those matters, constitute a trade description within that sub-section.—CAMERON v. WIGGINS, Q.B.D., 237; [1901] 1 Q. B. 1; 70 L. J. Q. B. 15; 83 L. T. 428.

See also Factor.

SCHOOL.—See Education.

SCOTLAND, LAW of:—

Master and servant—Appeal to the House of Lords from Scotland—Competency—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule II, s. 14 (c).—By section 14 (c) of the second schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, which applies to Scotland: "Any application to the sheriff as arbitrator shall be heard, tried, and determined summarily in the manner provided by the 52nd section of the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act, 1876, save only that parties may be represented by any person authorized in writing to appear for them, and subject to the declaration that it shall be competent to either prrty, within the time and in accordance with the conditions prescribed by Act of sederunt, to require the sheriff to state a case on any question of law determined by him, and his decision thereon in such case may be submitted to either division of the Court of Session, who may hear and determine the same finally, and remit to the sheriff with instruction as to the judgment to be pronounced."

Held, that in cases within this enactment no appeal lies to the House of Lords from a decision of the Court of Session.—OSBORNE v. BARCLAY, H.L.; [1901] A. C. 269.

SETTLED LAND:—

1. Building—Existing occupation—Additions or alterations—Present intention for future letting—Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c 69), s. 13 (ii.).—An alteration in a building may be made "to enable the same to be let" within section 13 (ii.) of the Settled Land Act, 1890, even although the building is occupied under existing tenancies, if the alterations are made with the present intention of enabling the building to be let at some future time. Such an alteration is necessary or proper if it is such as a prudent man absolutely entitled would make in his own interests.—STANFORD, RE, STANFORD v. ROBERTS, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 315; [1901] 1 Ch. 440; 70 L. J. Ch. 203; 83 L. T. 756.

2. Incumbrance—Discharge—Expenses of making street—Payment by tenant for life—Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 11—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 4, 150, 257.—The tenant for life of an estate paid expenses which had been incurred by a local authority, and made a charge upon the estate by section 257 of the Public Health Act, 1875.

Held, that this was a charge on the inheritance, and that he was entitled to keep it alive as an incumbrance on the settled land, and to raise money under section 11 of the Settled Land Act, 1890, by mortgage of the estate for the purpose of discharging it.—SMITH'S SETTLED ESTATES, RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 689; 70 L. J. Ch. 273.

3. Lease—Charges of estate agent for procuring lease—Application of capital money—Leasing powers—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 21, sub-section 10.—The commission charged by an estate agent for procuring a lease of settled land for a tenant for life under the Settled Land Act, 1882, is payable out of capital money arising under the Act.—MARYON-WILSON'S SETTLED ESTATES, RE, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 934; 70 L. J. Ch. 500; 84 L. T. 708.

4. Mansion-house — Structural alterations—Rebuilding—Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 13 (iv).—It was proposed to pull down a substantial portion of the mansion-house, consisting of some old and inconvenient rooms, and upon the site thereof to build other rooms; and, so far as they were available for the purpose, to use the old walls both internal and external.

Held, that this would not be a "re-building" within the meaning of section 13 (iv.) of the Settled Land Act, 1890. — WRIGHT'S SETTLED ESTATES, RE, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 83 L. T. 159.

5. Mining lease — Powers of leasing—Lease of minerals—Rents varying with selling price of minerals gotten—Statutory powers—Validity of leases—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss 2, 9, 11, 56—Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 8.—When a person has under several instruments a power of appointment over the same subject-matter, and makes an appointment in exercise of "every power" enabling him in that behalf, the power first in point of time is exercised; and if effectually exercised there remains no subject-matter on which the other powers can operate The court may also consider which power is most beneficial to the donee of the power.

By a settlement made in 1876 estates were limited, in the events which happened. to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, with remainders over. The settlement contained a power for every person "as and when he should be entitled to the possession or the receipt of the rents and profits" of the settled estates, to grant mining leases reserving the best rents or royalties "by the acre, ton, or otherwise" without taking any fine or premium. During A.'s life B. absolutely aliened his reversionary life interest for value. A. died in 1882. Between the coming into operation of the Settled Land Act, 1882, and of the Settled Land Act, 1890, and after the later Act, B. granted mining leases reserving rents varying with the selling price of the minerals gotten, which was in accordance with the custom of the county. All the leases were granted in exercise of "every power" enabling B. in that behalf. Questions having arisen as to the validity of the leases, and whether they were granted under the power in the settlement or under the power in the Settled Land Acts,

Held, (1) that it was competent for B. to exercise the power of leasing in the settlement notwithstanding that he has aliened his life estate; and (2) that the reservation of rents varying with the selling price of the minerals was within the power and valid:

Held, also, that the leases were granted under the power in the settlement, which was first in point of date. and not under the power in the Settled Land Acts:

Held, further, that, assuming the leases were granted under the Settled Land Acts, the "conflict" referred to in section 56 of the Act of 1882 means a conflict between provisions connected with the execution of the power—e.g., the consent of a third party—and not with the result or subject-matter of the power. — LONSDALE v. LOWTHER, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 687; 83 L. T. 312.

6. Mining lease—Tenant for life impeachable for waste—Open mines—Proportion of rent to be set aside as capital money—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 11.—A tenant for life entitled to work mines, whether the power arises from the terms of the settlement or from the circumstance that the mines are open, is—in the absence of any expression to the contrary in the settlement—not impeachable for waste within the meaning of the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 11, and is liable to set apart only one-fourth of the rent under a mining lease as capital money.—CHAYTOR, RE, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 125; [1900] 2 Ch. 804.

7. Tenant for life—Lease—Bonâ fide exercise of power—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 53, 58 (vi.).—A person having the powers of a tenant for life under the Settled Land Act, 1882, whose interest terminates on her marriage, is not entitled to grant a lease of the property to her intended husband without the consent of the remainderman or the sanction of the court.—MIDDLEMAS v. STEVENS. Ch.D. Joyce, J., 430; [1901] 1 Ch. 574; 70 L. J. Ch. 320; 84 L. T. 47.

8. Tenant for life—Power of sale—Right to construct and maintain tunnels for railway under land—Easement—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 3, 63—Settled Land Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 19), s. 7—Lands Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 8).—A tenant for life by virtue of section 63 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, of a settlement by way of trust for sale created by will, of undivided shares of settled land beneath which a railway company desired to construct tunnels for an electric railway, having joined with the owners of the remaining shares in entering into an agreement with the company for the sale to them of the right to construct, maintain, and use tunnels with railways therein under the land, took out a summons under section 7 of the Settled Land Act, 1884, asking for leave to enter into a contract in the form of the agreement with the company for the sale to them of that right. It was urged in support of the application that to proceed under the Settled Land Acts was cheaper and more simple than under the Lands Clauses Act, and that the right in question constituted an easement under section 3 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, or, if not, that the court had power under that section to make the order asked for.

Held, that the sale of the subsoil of the settled land was not the sale of an easement under section 3 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, but that the court had power under that section to make an order authorizing the sale as being a sale of a part of the settled land.—PEARSON, RE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; 83 L. T. 626.

9. Tenant for life—Powers of tenant for life—Estate or interest in possession subject to term—Trust for accumulation to increase estate—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 58 (1) (vi.).—A tenant in tail in possession of real estates under a will disentailed them, and by his marriage settlement made in 1894 conveyed them, subject to certain annuities given by the will, to trustees for a term of twenty-one years and subject thereto to the use of himself for life with remainder over in strict settlement. The trusts of the term were for insuring and maintaining buildings on the estate, for the benefit of the settlor and his issue, and for the accumulation of the residue of the rents in order to increase the estate.

Held, that the settlor having an estate or interest in possession subject to a trust for accumulation for "other purpose" could under section 58 (1) (vi.) of the Settled Land Act, 1882, exercise the powers of a tenant for life.—COODE v. MARTYN, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 83 L. T. 146.

10. Tenant for life—Remaindermen—Trust for sale—Power to postpone—Interim rents and profits—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 63.—Where real estate is settled upon trust for sale, and to pay the income of the proceeds to a person for life, that person is "for the time being beneficially entitled to the income of the land until sale" within the meaning of the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 63, and is therefore tenant for life under the Act.

The principle laid down in In re Chesterfield's Trusts, 32 W. R. 361, 24 Ch. D. 643, does not apply to real estate.—SEARLE, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 44; [1900] 2 Ch. 829; 69 L. J. Ch. 712; 83 L. T. 364.

11. Tenant for life—Subject to term for securing incumbrances—Capital moneys—Discharge of incumbrances—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 21, 22, 53.—Land which was subject to mortgages was settled, subject to a term for securing incumbrances, to the use, in the events which happened, of A. for life, with remainders over. The trusts of the term provided that so long as the mortgages remained unpaid the trustees should receive the rents and profits and manage the premises and keep down the interest of the mortgage debts and certain rent-charges created by the settlement, that they should then pay to the tenant for life for the time being subject to the term an annuity of £600 a year and should apply the residue of the rents and profits towards the payment of the principal moneys charged by the mortgages, and there was a proviso for the cesser of the term upon the discharge of the mortgage debts. The settlement conferred on the trustees an immediate power of sale and exchange, but no power of leasing. The court having held that A. was a person having the powers of a tenant for life under the Settled Land Act, 1882, ordered him to be let into possession upon his undertaking to perform the trusts of the term, and gave him the custody of the title-deeds. The court would have made the order apart from the annuity to A. A. subsequently contracted to sell, under the powers of the Settled Land Acts, certain portions of the settled lands, including parts of all the mortgaged lands and a portion which was unincumbered, and in order to complete the sale it was necessary that the mortgages should be paid off. A. therefore directed that the trustees should apply the proceeds of the sale in paying off the mortgages. He deposed that he considered that this would be for the benefit of all the parties entitled under the settlement, seeing that the mortgages bore interest at 4 per cent., whereas the purchase-money could not be invested in trustee securities to yield more than 3 per cent. Upon a summons to determine whether the mortgages ought not to be kept on foot for the benefit of the ultimate remainderman, Held, that the beneficiaries under the settlement took subject to the power of sale conferred on the trustees, and that inasmuch as the trustees in the exercise of that power might properly, for the purpose of carrying into effect a beneficial sale, pay off the existing incumbrances out of the purchase-money, a tenant for life doing the same thing under the powers of the Settled Land Acts ought not to be held to be acting unjustly towards the remaindermen; that consequently the mortgages ought not to be kept on foot, and that upon the payment off out of the capital moneys of all the mortgages the term would cease.—RICHARDSON v. RICHARDSON, Ch.D. Stirling, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 778.

See also Will, 25, 28.

SETTLEMENT:—

1. Construction—Power to jointure wives in succession—Divorce—Power to jointure second wife during lifetime of first wife.—A settlement empowered a person to appoint to "any woman whom he might marry" yearly rent-charges by way of jointure, but provided that the settled estates should not be liable to the payment of jointures exceeding on the whole a given sum.

Held, on the construction of the deed, that the exercise of such power in favour of a second wife after the dissolution of the first marriage by divorce was valid, and that there was nothing on the face of the clause which was contrary to public policy, being distinct from those cases which bargained for the event of future separation between husband and wife.—MARLBOROUGH (LILY, DUCHESS OF) v. MARLBOROUGH (DUKE), C.A., 275; [1901] 1 Ch. 165; 70 L. J. Ch. 244; 83 L. T. 578.

2. Fines and recoveries—Estate tail in personalty—Tenant for life—Disentailing deed—Capital of personal estate to be invested in the purchase of real estate after death of tenant for life—Real estate to be held to the uses of settlement—Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), ss. 1, 71.—A tenant in tail may, with the consent of the tenant for life under the settlement, disentail an estate tail in personalty whereof the income is directed to be paid to a person still living, and the capital after his death is directed to be invested in real estate to be settled to the uses of the settlement.

Fordham v. Fordham, 13 W. R. 197, 34 Beav. 59, followed.—HARVEY v. HARVEY, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 695; [1901] 2 Ch. 290.

3. Married woman—Covenant to settle after-acquired property—Assignment of future property—Gift from husband.—An assignment by the intended wife in a marriage settlement of her property and fortune, both present and expectant or future, Held, not to comprise a sum of money which the husband made a present of to the wife long afterwards.—COLES v COLES, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 711; 70 L. J. Ch. 324; 84 L. T. 142.

4. Married woman—Covenant to settle after-acquired property—£500 or upwards—Legacies—Deduction of duty—Time and source of payment—Husband and wife.—A legacy of £500, which by payment of duty at 10 per cent. has been reduced to £450, is not within a covenant to settle any after-acquired property of the value of £500 or upwards.

A legacy out of general estate given by a codicil to a will, and a legacy given by another codicil to the same will out of the proceeds of sale of real estate which has not yet been sold, are acquired at one and the same time—namely, the death of the testatrix—and from one and the same source—namely, the testatrix. They must therefore be added together and treated as one sum for the purpose of a covenant to settle any property to which a married woman should become entitled "at one and the same time and from one and the same source."—PARES, RE, SCOTT CHAD v. PARES, Ch.D.

Buckley, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 708; 70 L. J. Ch. 426; 84 L. T. 385.

5. Married woman—Husband entitled jure mariti to wife's reversionary interest in personalty—Antenuptial agreement—Post-nuptial settlement—Recital—Voluntary settlement by husband—Fraud on creditors—Trustee in bankruptcy—Estoppel—Statute 13 Eliz. c. 5.—A husband entitled jure mariti to his wife's reversionary interest in personalty (subject only to the contingency of her surviving him before he had reduced it into possession, which did not happen), in 1873 joined with his wife, then an infant, in executing a post-nuptial deed of settlement. This settlement recited that, previously to the marriage in 1872, he had "agreed to make such settlement of the fortune of his said wife as is hereinafter contained," and contained a covenant by him with the trustees that, on the interest falling into possession, he and she, or the survivor, and all other necessary parties, would assign and transfer it to the trustees upon the trusts of the settlement, which were for her for life, and after her death, if the husband should not have been or become a bankrupt, for him until he should become a bankrupt, with remainder for the issue of the marriage in the usual way, the survivor of the husband and wife having a power of appointment among issue. The wife having died in 1877, the husband in 1897 appointed two-thirds of the trust funds to his sons and surrendered his life interest to them, and five months afterwards he was adjudicated a bankrupt. The reversionary interest had since fallen into possession.

Held, (1) that, even with such a recital as here, a parol contract before marriage cannot support a settlement made after marriage so as to satisfy the Statute of Frauds; (2) that the settlement here was a voluntary settlement, and, as it expressly provided that the husband's property should be withdrawn from his creditors in case he became a bankrupt, was fraudulent within 13 Eliz. c. 5; (3) that, even if the recital had been sufficiently precise to create an estoppel binding the husband, the trustee in bankruptcy, having a paramount right by statute overriding the title of the bankrupt and persons claiming under settlements made by him, was in a superior position to the bankrupt himself, and would not be bound by such an estoppel, but no such estoppel was raised; (4) that the fund, therefore, belonged to the trustee in bankruptcy for the benefit of the creditors.

Semble, no post-nuptial settlement can by itself satisfy the Statute of Frauds; it is the date of execution, and not the contents of the document, that is material.

Dundas v. Dutens (variously reported in 1 Ves. jun. 196 and 2 Cox Ch. Cas 235) explained.

Barkworth v. Young, 5 W. R. 156, 4 Drew. 1, disapproved.—HOLLAND, RE, GREGG v. HOLLAND, Ch.D. Farwell, J, 476; [1901] 2 Ch. 145; 70 L. J. Ch. 625.

6. Portions term—Maintenance of infants entitled to portions on attaining full age.—Maintenance can, in a proper case, be obtained by infants entitled to portions under the trusts of a term, if the settlement creating the term was made by their father, or a person in loco parentis to them.—GREAVES' ESTATE, RE, JONES v. GREAVES, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 236; [1900] 2 Ch. 683.

7. Rectification — Intention. — Action by R., married in 1872, for rectification of a post-nuptial settlement.

On the 13th of March, 1875, R., being about to become a stockbroker, executed a voluntary settlement of certain property. The property was settled upon his wife for life, with remainder to her children. On the 29th of September, 1899, Mrs. R. died.

Held, that the object of the settlement was to provide for the plaintiff's wife and children in case of bankruptcy; on the evidence the life interest in favour of the plaintiff was intentionally omitted, and the court therefore would not interfere.—RAKE v. HOOPER, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 83 L. T. 669.

8. Tenant for life—Equitable tenant in tail—Alternative gift in remainder—Contingent interest—Estates in defeasance of estate tail—Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), s. 15.—Testator by his will devised real estates to trustees on trust after providing for the management of the estates, &c., to pay surplus rents to testator's widow for her life. Testator directed that after the decease of his widow surplus rents should be accumulated for the purpose of paying off certain mortgages on the said estates, and further directed the trustees, after the determination of the period of accumulation and subject to his widow's life estate, to convey and assure the said real estates so that the sum should stand limited, settled, and assured to use of G in tail male, but if G. should be dead to the use of the person who should be the first heir male of the body of G. in tail male, with remainder to the person who should be entitled to the title of Earl of C. in tail male, with remainder to testator's right heirs. By a codicil to his will testator, after reciting the said devise to the said G. thereby revoked the said devise and gave and devised the said estates after the death of testator's widow to R. in tail male, with all the limitations as testator's will mentioned. The trusts for accumulations being treated by the court for the purpose of the application as at an end, and R, with the consent of testator's widow, having barred the estate tail in a fund in court representing the proceeds of the sale of part of the said estates, and assigned the same to trustees subject to widow's life interest,

Held, that R. took a vested estate tail in remainder expectant on the death of testator's widow, that subsequent estates had been barred by the disentailing assurance, and that the fund in court might be paid out to the assignees of testator's widow and R.—CARDIGAN (LADY) v. CURZON-HOWE, Ch.D. Byrne, J, 715.

9. Tenant for life and remainderman—Apportionment—Unauthorized investment—Breach of trust—Loss.—Where a trustee, in breach of trust and without the knowledge of the tenant for life or remainderman, sells out an authorized investment and invests the proceeds in an unauthorized investment, resulting in a loss of some capital and income, the tenant for life is entitled to such a proportion of the amount realized by the unauthorized investment plus the income he received therefrom during its continuance, as the dividends he would have received from the authorized investment in the same period bear to the capital value of the authorized investment plus those dividends, the tenant for life being liable to bring into account all income received by him from the unauthorized investment, although not liable to refund any portion of this income.—BIRD, RE. DODD v. EVANS, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 599; [1901] 1 Ch. 916; 70 L. J. Ch. 514; 82 L. T. 294.

10. Tenant for life—Term of years—Right of tenant for life to possession—Conditions—Order.—The plaintiff was tenant for life of certain landed property. In 1868 a part of the property had been devised to trustees for a term of 500 years, with directions to manage and receive the rents and profits and apply the surplus rent in paying off two mortgages of £16,000 and £14,000 respectively. The mortgages had now been reduced to £9,000 and £8,000 respectively, and the plaintiff applied to be let into immediate possession of the estates, and that such of the title-deeds relating thereto as were in the possession of the trustees might be delivered up to him.

Ordered, that the plaintiff, upon giving security to the satisfaction of the judge in chambers for the due performance of the undertaking to account for the rents and pay the surplus rents to the trustees, be let into possession of the settled estate, and that the trustees deliver up to him any deeds which were in their possession.

In re Richardson, W. N., 1900, p. 3, approved.—MONEY KYRLE v. MONEY KYRLE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 44; [1900] 2 Ch. 839; 69 L. J. Ch. 780; 83 L. T. 74.

See also Deed; Fixtures; Frauds Statutes, 3; Joint Tenancy; Will, 42.

SHERIFF:—

Seizure—Goods "taken in execution"—Person liable to pay rates—Demand on sheriff—35 Geo. 3, c. 73, s. 195—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 161.—By a local Act (35 Geo. 3, c. 73), when the goods of any person liable to pay a rate by virtue of the Act are taken in execution by a sheriff before the rate is paid, the sheriff shall, upon demand made by the rate collector, in the first place pay to the collector the sum due in respect of the rate.

By section 161 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, the rate collectors are to have the same powers, remedies, and privileges for levying rates under that Act as for levying money for the relief of the poor.

Goods were seized by the sheriff under a writ of fi. fa., in execution of a judgment. The judgment debtor owed to the plaintiffs a sum for rates, consisting of a poor rate payable under the local Act and a general rate under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855. The rate collector demanded payment of the rates from the sheriff. Before the goods were removed or sold the judgment debtor paid the sheriff the amount of the judgment debt, and the sheriff handed over the amount to the judgment creditor and withdrew from possession without having paid the rates.

Held, that the goods had been "taken in execution" within the meaning of the local Act, and the sheriff was liable to pay to the plaintiffs the amount of the rates.—ST. MARYLEBONE VESTRY v. SHERIFF OF LONDON, C.A., 36; [1900] 2 Q B. 591; 69 L. J. Q. B. 848; 83 L. T. 355.

SHIP:—

1. Admiralty—Insurance—Partial average—Total loss—Insured not entitled to more than indemnity—Money paid under a mistake of fact.—A chartered ship, having received damage on the way to her loading port, was repaired there, and the cost of the repairs were paid for by the charterers, who were fully insured in that behalf under an arrangement with the shipowners, whose master drew a bill on them for the amount so paid, pledging the ship for the repayment of the amount of the bill "three days after the safe arrival of the ship at her port of discharge." The ship never did arrive at her port of discharge, being lost before she arrived there; and her underwriters, who had also insured her on the outward voyage on which the previous partial damage had occurred, and paid an instalment towards the costs of the repairs, settled with the shipowners as for a total loss. Afterwards the shipowners brought an action against the underwriters to recover the balance of the costs of the repairs, claiming such balance as a particular average under the policy.

Held, that the underwriters had never been liable for the costs of the repairs, the plaintiffs never having sustained any partial average loss against which they could ask to be indemnified.—"DORA FORSTER," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 271; [1900] P. 241.

2. Bill of lading—Freight—Right of captain to sue for.—The defendants chartered a ship to carry a cargo. The charter-party provided that the captain should sign bills of lading at any rate of freight without prejudice to the charter-party. A cargo was loaded, and bills of lading incorporating the terms of the charter-party were signed by the captain of the ship. The defendants were the shippers and also the consignees and receivers of the cargo.

Held, that the captain had signed the bills of lading merely as agent for the owners, and was not entitled to sue the defendants for freight.—REPETTO v. MILLARS, K.B.D., 526; [1901] 2 K. B. 306; 70 L. J. K. B. 561; 84 L. T. 836.

3. Bill of lading—Goods marked as in margin—Delivery of goods otherwise marked—Mistake in bill of lading—Identification marks—Liability of shipowner—Exemption in case of incorrectness in marking—Bills of Lading Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 111), s. 3.—A bill of lading, signed by the defendant's manager, described the goods comprised in it as "being marked and numbered as in margin," and contained the following clause: "The ship will not be responsible for correct delivery or loss unless each package is distinctly, correctly, and permanently marked by the merchant before shipment with a mark or number and address." Delivery was offered to the plaintiff, who was the indorsee of the bill of lading, of goods which were marked and numbered otherwise than as in the margin of the bill of lading. It appeared that these goods had been intended by the shippers to form part of the consignment represented by the plaintiff's bill of lading, but that they had by some mistake been incorrectly described in the bill of lading. The plaintiff refused to take delivery of the goods in question, and brought an action for damages for short delivery.

Held, that the plaintiff could not maintain the action.

Per Collins and Romer, L.JJ.—The defendants were not precluded by section 3 of the Bills of Lading Act, 1855, from showing that the goods had in fact been shipped under the bill of lading, and that there was a mistake in the margin of the bill of lading.

Per A. L. Smith, M.R.—The defendants were relieved from liability by the exemption clause in the bill of lading as to correctness of marking.—PARSONS v. NEW ZEALAND SHIPPING CO., C.A., 355; [1901] 1 Q. B. 548; 70 L. J. K. B. 404; 84 L. T. 218.

4. Charter-party—Ballast—Obligation of shipowner to supply—Responsibility for navigation—Construction of charter-party.—By a charter-party a ship was let to the charterers for their sole use and benefit for the conveyance of merchandise and/or passengers with liberty to sub-let (subject to owner's approval of trade) for two or three round voyages at charterers' option, to be placed by a certain day "with clear holds" at the disposal of the charterers, they "having the whole reach or burthen of the vessel," proper and sufficient room being reserved to the owners for the officers, crew, tackle, &c.; the owners undertaking to maintain her in a thoroughly efficient state during the currency of the charter; the captain to use every reasonable despatch in prosecuting the voyages, and (though appointed by the owners) to be under the orders and directions of the charterers as regards employment, agency, and other arrangements; the freight for the hire of the ship to be paid monthly until she was returned by the charterers to the owners.

Held, that upon the true construction of the whole of the charter-party (without deciding whether the contract more nearly resembled one of demise than of carriage) the responsibility for the navigation of the ship was imposed upon the owners, and that the owners were therefore liable to provide any ballast that might be necessary for safe navigation.

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1900] 1 Q. B. 28), affirmed.—WEIR v. UNION STEAMSHIP CO., H.L.; [1900] A. C. 525; 69 L. J. Q. B. 809.

5. Charter-party—Colliery guarantee—Demurrage—"Colliery working days."—By a charter-party which incorporated a "colliery guarantee" the charterers agreed to load a ship with coal "in twelve clear working days, Sundays and holidays excepted."

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that, in the absence of evidence of any special meaning attached to the words, "working days" meant days on which the collieries usually worked, not days on which they actually worked, and that the shipowners were entitled to demurrage in respect of a delay in the loading caused by a strike at the collieries.—SAXON STEAMSHIP CO. v. UNION STEAMSHIP CO., H.L.; 83 L T. 106.

6. Charter-party—Damage to cargo—Goods carried into England and Wales—Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10), s. 6—Reasonable care of cargo—Cargo unloaded at port of refuge—Refusal to carry on—Excepted perils.—Case in which a master of a vessel laden with a cargo of coals, having been compelled to put into a port of refuge and discharge the cargo in order to repair his ship, was held justified in refusing to carry on the cargo which had in parts been saturated with sea water and become heated.

Notara v. Henderson, 20 W. R. 433, L. R. 7 Q. B. 225, discussed.—"SAVONA," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 303; [1900] P. 252.

7. Charter-party—Bill of lading—Negligence clause.—Where a contract for carriage of goods by sea contains an exception of negligence of the master and crew, the shipowner is entitled to a contribution from the owner of the goods to general average expenses, though the necessity for the same has been occasioned by the negligence of the master.

So held by A. L. Smith and Romer, L.JJ., Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting.

A charter-party, which contained an exception of the negligence of the master and crew, provided that the captain should sign bills of lading at any rate of freight the charterers or their agents might choose without prejudice to the stipulations of the charter-party, and that the charterers should indemnify the shipowners from any consequences which might arise from the captain following the charterers' instructions and signing bills of lading.

The captain, upon the instructions of the charterers, signed bills of lading for goods shipped by a third person, which did not contain a negligence clause. The ship coming into collision with another ship through the negligence of the captain, general average expenses were incurred in putting back for repairs,

Held, that the charterers were liable to indemnify thes shipowners against the loss sustained by them through their not being able to obtain a general average contribution from the owner of the goods by reason of the bills of lading not containing a negligence clause.

The Carron Park, 15 P. D. 203, approved of.—MILBURN v. JAMAICA FRUIT IMPORTING CO. OF LONDON, C.A.; [1900] 2 Q. B. 540; 83 L. T. 321.

8. Charter-party—Hire payable in advance—Breach—Waiver—Estoppel.—By a charter-party, payment of the hire was to be made in cash fortnightly in advance, otherwise the owners were to have the faculty of withdrawing the steamer from the service of the charterers.

On the 21st of June a fortnight's hire became due in advance.

On that date the steamer commenced a voyage from B. to S. She arrived at S. on the 25th, and lay there until the 27th, on which day she proceeded to H. to load her homeward cargo. While at S. the master, who was the servant of the owners, telegraphed to H. to order the cargo to be ready.

On the 28th of June the owners by telegraph withdrew the vessel for non-payment of the hire.

Held, that the withdrawal was unlawful, as the owners by their conduct were estopped from so doing, for by allowing the charterers to alter their position after the right of withdrawal had accrued they must be taken to have waived their right.

Nova Scotia Steel Co. v. Sutherland Steam Shipping Co., 5 Com. Cas. 106, considered.

The mere fact that punctual payment of hire has been waived on former occasions, does not amount to a waiver of punctual payment of future instalments.—TYRER v. HESSLER, K.B.D.; 84 L. T. 653.

9. Charter-party—Option of charterers to cancel on non-arrival of vessel by fixed date—Impossibility of arrival—Refusal to proceed—Injunction.—By a charter-party the shipowner agreed that his vessel should proceed to a named port and there load a cargo for the charterer, and it was provided that, if the vessel should not be at that port ready to load by a specified date, the charterer should be at liberty to cancel the charter-party.

The vessel was then at another port unloading, and was delayed in doing so for so long that it became impossible for her to arrive at the agreed port by the specified date. The charterer refused to extend the time for cancellation, or to promise to load the vessel if she proceeded to the agreed port, and said that if he did load the rate of freight must be reduced, and he insisted on the vessel proceeding to the agreed port. The shipowner thereupon refused to send his vessel there.

Held, that an injunction ought not to be granted to restrain the shipowner from using the vessel for any purposes other than those of the charter-party.—BUCKNALL v. TATEM, C.A.; 83 L. T. 121.

10. Charter-party—Pilot paid by charterers—Damage to vessel due to pilot—Payment of hire during repairs.—The plaintiffs chartered the defendant's ship for the period of twenty-five years, with the option of purchase, the ship to be employed "between safe ports of the Continent of Europe where she may always safely lie." By the charter-party the charterers were to pay for pilotages, and, in the event of loss of time from damage preventing the working of the vessel, the payment of hire should cease until the vessel should be again in an efficient state to resume her services. The negligence of the pilot, master, mariners, and other servants of the owner was mutually excepted.

While under charge of a pilot, the ship grounded in getting to her berth in a harbour, and, in consequence, she was prevented working for three weeks. The berth was a safe berth, and the grounding was due to the negligence of the pilot.

Held, that the pilot, though paid by the charterers, was not their servant, and therefore the charterers were not bound to pay hire during the period that the ship was in dock undergoing repairs. —FRASER v. BEE, Q.B.D., 336.

11. Charter-party—Mortgage—Chartering ship on half profits—Impairing security—Validity of mortgage—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 34.—The mortgagor of a steamship, which was used for tourist and pleasure traffic, chartered her for six weeks in the summer to run from Liverpool to places on the coast of North Wales, the mortgagor to receive one-half of the net profits.

Held, that, though no freight was reserved by the charter-party, the mortgage was not one which impaired the sufficiency of the security, and was therefore valid against the mortgagee.

Judgment of Jeune, P. (ante, p. 352), affirmed.—"HEATHER BELL," THE, HORTON v. WARD, C.A., 577; 70 L. J. P. 57; 84 L. T. 794.

12. Collision—Anchor light—Towing lights—"Under way"—Salvage—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, preliminary article, and arts. 3, 11.—A steam tug is "under way" within the meaning of the preliminary article of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, when she is fast alongside a vessel which she is moving up to her anchor preparatory to towing her away; and the tug should, therefore, exhibit the towing lights and side lights required by article 3 of the same regulations, though, semble, the vessel herself, whilst her anchor is still in the ground, should continue to exhibit the anchor light required by article 11 of the same regulations.—"ROMANCE," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 15; 70 L. J. P. 1; 83 L. T. 486.

13. Collision—Barges in tow—Thames Bye-laws, 1898, r. 11—Anchor ring awash.—The plaintiffs' and the defendants' barges, in tow of a tug in the River Thames, came into collision, owing to the defendants' barge being affected by the wind and tide whilst the tug was temporarily brought up, and the anchor hanging, ring awash, from the bows of the defendants' barge pierced the quarter of the plaintiffs' barge doing damage.

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover, for though, by rule 11 of the Thames Bye-laws, the anchor must be as low as ring awash, it may—according to the interpretation put upon the rule in The J. R. Hinde, [1892] P. 231—be as much lower as is thought proper, and those in charge of the defendants' barge were negligent in not having it sufficiently low in the water to avoid danger to other barges in case of contact in the course of the ordinary incidents of navigation in the river.—"SIX SISTERS," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1900] P. 302.

14. Collision—Both ships to blame—Consequential damage—Tortfeasors—Division of loss—Antinomy.—In an action of damage by collision both vessels were found to blame. The decree, in the usual form, condemned the owners of the defendants' vessel and their bail in a moiety of the plaintiffs' claim in respect of the said damage, and the owners of the plaintiffs' vessel and their bail in a moiety of the defendants' counterclaim in respect of the said damage. At the reference the registrar added to the moiety of the plaintiffs' claim, payable by the defendants, a moiety of the amount of damage recovered from the plaintiffs by the owners of a barge against which the plaintiffs' vessel was driven in consequence of the collision.

The defendants appealed on the ground that, as the plaintiffs and defendants were joint tortfeasors, no contribution could be claimed from the defendants in respect of the damage to the barge paid by the plaintiffs.

Held, that the decree in Admiralty had been properly carried out by adding to the moiety of their damage claimed by the plaintiffs a moiety of the consequential damage recovered by the barge owner from the plaintiffs, and that it was not material that the damage arose out of a tort.—"FRANKLAND," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 161; 70 L. J. P. 42; 84 L. T. 395.

15. Collision—Fog—Speed—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, art. 16.—A passenger steamship, fitted with twin screws, which was proceeding at the rate of nine and a half knots an hour in a dense fog, was held not to be going at a moderate speed, and to have committed a breach of art. 16 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, although it was proved that her engines were so constructed that she could not go slower without stopping from time to time.

That article is imperative, and, therefore, although such consequences as loss of handiness and the risk of loss of position may result from proceeding at a lower rate of speed, which may be attained by occasionally stopping her engines, considerations of that nature do not justify a vessel in proceeding at more than a moderate speed.—"CAMPANIA," THE, C.A.; 84 L. T. 673.

16. Collision—Limitation of liability—Loss of mails—Locus standi of Postmaster-General as bailee—Negligence of stranger.—The Postmaster-General, being under no liability to his bailors for property bailed to him as Postmaster-General, cannot on behalf of the bailors recover for the loss of the property bailed, the loss being caused by the negligence of a stranger.

Claridge v. The South Staffordshire Tramway Co., [1892] 1 Q. B. 422, 40 W. R. Dig. 11, followed.—"WINKFIELD," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 685.

17. Collision—Negligence—Contributory negligence—Thames Bye-laws, 1898, art. 47.—The plaintiffs' steam vessel, proceeding down the River Thames against the tide, neglected—in breach of art. 47 of the Thames Bye-laws—to wait, before rounding Blackwall Point, "until any other vessels rounding the point with the tide (had) passed clear," and came into collision with the defendants' steam vessel which had come up the river, and was, at the material time, in process of turning preparatory to entering the West India Dock.

Held, by Jeune, P., that the defendants' vessel was to blame for negligently failing to execute the manœuvre of turning with due regard to the passing traffic; but that the plaintiffs' vessel was also to blame, for, through the breach of art. 47, she had brought herself into a position in which she would not otherwise have been, and by hampering the manœuvre of the defendants' vessel contributed to the collision and damage.

The Margaret (Cayzer v. Carron Co.), 9 App. Cas. 873, distinguished.—"OVINGDEAN GRANGE," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 127; 70 L. J. P. 27.

18. Collision—Narrow channel—Vessel turning round—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, art. 25.—Art. 25 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea is not infringed by a vessel turning round in a narrow channel whereby some portion of her length must necessarily during the process fail to remain on that side of the fairway or mid-channel which lies on her starboard side.—"WHITLIEBURN," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 83 L. T. 748.

19. Collision—Steering rules—Sound signals—"Taking any course authorized or required by these rules"—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, art. 28.—The plaintiffs' steam vessel, after giving a prolonged blast on her whistle, left a dock entrance in the Mersey under easy starboard helm, and—whilst continuing to round under that helm in order to bring up alongside a wall a short distance further up—came into collision with the defendants' down-coming steamer. It was alleged on behalf of the defendants that those in charge of the plaintiffs' vessel should have indicated that she was directing her course to port by giving two short blasts of her whistle in accordance with art. 28 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, by which, "when vessels are in sight of one another, a steam vessel under way, in taking any course authorized or required by these rules, shall indicate that course by" the appropriate signal.

Held, by Jeune, P., that the rule was not applicable, as the starboard action of the helm began before leaving the entrance, and, when the other vessel was in sight, the plaintiffs' vessel was not, with reference to that other vessel, taking a course authorized or required by the rules.

Cases in which the rule would apply considered.—"MOURNE," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 68; 70 L. J. P. 7; 83 L. T. 748.

20. Collision—Vessel at anchor with tug attached—"Attached for the purpose of towing or manœuvring"—Failure of tug to exhibit towing lights—Liability of tow—Mersey Rules, 1900, art. 4 (a)—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 419, sub-section 4.—The plaintiffs' vessel, while laying at anchor in the River Mersey with a tug made fast alongside to keep her to her anchor till she could be towed into dock, was negligently run into by the defendants' vessel. The tug was carrying the ordinary lights for a steamship under way.

Held, that, under rule 4 of the Mersey Rules, the tug ought to have carried towing lights; that the infringement of the rule was one which might possibly have contributed to the collision; and that for this infringement the plaintiffs' vessel was to blame, both apart from statute and under section 419, sub-section 4, of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.—"DEVONIAN," THE, C.A., 665; [1901] P. 221; 84 L. T. 675.

21. Demurrage—Cargo "to be discharged with all despatch as customary"—Delay caused by deficiency of railway wagons—Liability of consignees.—By a charter-party the cargo was "to be discharged with all despatch as customary." By the custom of the port of discharge cargo was discharged into railway wagons belonging to certain railway companies. Owing to a scarcity of wagons caused by stress of work at the port, and through no default or negligence of the consignees, the discharge of the cargo was delayed. In an action by the shipowners against the consignees to recover damages for the delay,

Held, that the consignees were not liable.—LYLE SHIPPING CO. v. CARDIFF CORPORATION, C.A., 85; [1900] 2 Q. B. 638; 69 L. J. Q. B. 889; 83 L. T. 329.

22. Demurrage—Liability of charterers of ship and consignees of cargo.—The defendants chartered the plaintiffs' vessel, and guaranteed that the charter-party would be carried out in its entirety and on the conditions as to time provided therein and as to payment of demurrage legally incurred according to the terms of the charter-party. The defendants sold the cargo to the consignees, who were the holders of the bills of lading. On the arrival of the ship at the port of discharge, the consignees, having other ships in dock, were not permitted by the dock regulations to at once berth the plaintiffs' ship, and delay in discharging was thereby incurred, in respect of which demurrage was claimed from the defendants.

Held, that, inasmuch as the consignees had become agents of the charterers to receive the cargo and pay the freight in accordance with the terms of the charter-party, the charterers were not liable.—"DEERHOUND," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 511; 84 L. T. 360.

23. General average—Sacrifice of freight.—The plaintiffs, the owners of a ship, chartered her to carry a cargo of coals from Cardiff to Esquimault, and insured the chartered freight with the defendants. During the voyage the coals began to heat, and the master decided, for the safety of the ship, freight, and cargo, to jettison part of the cargo and bear up for the River Plate. It was necessary, for the safety of the whole adventure, for the vessel to put into Buenos Ayres, where the coal was surveyed, and was found to be in such a condition that it would have been impossible to have carried it with safety to Esquimault. The vessel abandoned her voyage and returned to the United Kingdom with another cargo, and the chartered freight was wholly lost. While at Buenos Ayres the ship and her cargo—both the portion landed and the portion remaining on board—were in safety, but no part of the cargo could be reloaded and carried with safety to Esquimault.

Held, that there was no general average sacrifice. The bearing up for the River Plate was not a general average sacrifice as regards the cargo, so as to be the subject of a general average contribution. The common danger had ceased when the cargo was sold.

Judgment of Bigham, J. (48 W. R. 48, [1899] 2 Q. B. 356), affirmed.—IREDALE v. CHINA TRADERS' INSURANCE CO., C.A., 107; [1900] 2 Q. B. 515; 83 L. T. 299.

24. *Pilotage—Compulsory—Foreign vessel—Port of Blyth—Trinity House of Newcastle-upon-Tyne—*41 Geo. 3, c. lxxxvi., s. 6.—A foreign vessel resorting to, or coming into, or departing from, the port of Blyth, is bound by compulsion of law to employ a pilot licensed by the Trinity House of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.—"HOLAR" THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 224: [1901] P. 7; 83 L. T. 436.

25. Salvage—Charterers having an interest in goods saved—Liability to contribute—Action in personam.—The defendants chartered a ship, in which they agreed to carry, amongst other cargo, certain Government stores from London to Jamaica upon the terms that they were to be responsible for the safe delivery of the cargo, subject to certain exceptions. During the voyage the ship, through her own default, came into collision with another vessel, and salvage services were rendered to her by the plaintiffs. A salvage award was made against the ship, cargo, and freight, the award including a sum in respect of the Government stores. The Government having refused to pay salvage, the plaintiffs brought an action in personam against the defendants to recover the amount payable in respect of the Government stores.

Held, affirming the judgment of Jeune, P., that, as the defendants had an interest in the Government stores saved, they were liable to pay salvage remuneration, and an action in personam lay.

The Five Steel Barges, 15 P. D. 142, 38 W. R. Dig. 192, approved.—"PORT VICTOR," THE CARGO EX, C.A., 578; [1901] P. 243; 70 L. J. P. 52; 84 L. T. 677.

26. Salvage—Damage suffered by salving vessel during services—Liability of vessel salved for damage—Onus of proof.—Where a vessel suffers damage while rendering salvage services and there is no proof that those in charge of her have been guilty of any negligence or unskilful management, there is a presumption that such injury is caused by the necessities of the services, and, in the absence of proof to the contrary, the vessel salved is liable to compensate the salving vessel for such damage. It is not the custom of a Court of Appeal to vary the decision of a court below on a question of amount merely because, had the case come before them in the first instance, they might have awarded a different sum.—"BAKU STANDARD," THE, P.C.; 84 L. T. 788.

27. Salvage—Pilot on salving ship—Claim as salvor.—A pilot employed to pilot a vessel which is towing another vessel in distress is entitled as against the salved property to remuneration as a salvor in respect of his services to that property, if in the performance of them he runs risk outside what can be reasonably considered to have been within the ordinary scope of his employment.—"SANTIAGO," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 70 L. J. P. 12; 83 L. T. 439.

28. Salvage—Towage—Pilot—Contributory—Negligence.—Where a ship in tow of a steam tug suffers damage by reason of the negligence of those on board the tug, her owners are entitled to recover in respect of that damage from the owners of the tug, notwithstanding the fact that the negligence of a pilot in charge of the ship by compulsion of law contributed to the mischief.—"ADAM SPIES," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 70 L. J. P. 25.

29. Seaworthiness—Presumption—Evidence—Cause of vessel's loss unascertainable—Appeal from Mauritius.—Where a vessel capsized and sank in less than twenty-four hours after leaving port without having encountered any storm or other known cause sufficient to account for the catastrophe, there is a presumption of unseaworthiness on which a jury may be directed to act in the absence of evidence. Where evidence is given, all the facts must be considered, including the unexplained sinking, and unless it establishes unseaworthiness the defence founded on it must fail.

Anderson v. Morice, (1874) L. R. 10 C. P. 58, approved.

The defence in this case was overruled, since the real cause of the loss was not ascertainable on the evidence, though it appeared to be attributable to mistakes made in managing the vessel after she sailed rather than to her unseaworthiness when she sailed.—AJUM HOSSEN v. UNION MARINE INSURANCE CO., P.C.; [1901] A. C. 362; 70 L. J. P. C. 34; 84 L. T. 366.

30. Seaman—Desertion from foreign ship.—It is no offence under section 236 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, to persuade a seaman to desert from a foreign ship, for such offence is punishable only under section 238 when applied by Order in Council.—POLL v. DAMBE, K.B.D.; 70 L. J. K. B. 721; 84 L. T. 870.

See also Bankruptcy, 31; Insurance, 3-7.

SLANDER.—See Libel, 2.

SOLICITOR:—

1. Costs—Taxation—Company—Debenture-holders—Retainer—Joint and several—Liability.—Motions on behalf of the defendants, that an order made in chambers upon minutes upon further consideration of the action, directing taxation and payment of costs of the plaintiffs and of the defendants other than the company, whose costs were disallowed, might be altered by adding a direction that the defendants, the trustees, should have a full set of costs allowed them.

The action was brought by debenture-holders to enforce the security of the debentures by foreclosure or sale.

The defendants were the company, the mortgagors; the trustees for the first mortgage debentures; and the trustees for the second mortgage debentures.

The same solicitor acted for all the defendants.

The assets of the company were insufficient to pay the first mortgage debentures in full.

Held, that a full set of costs should be allowed to the defendants, notwithstanding that the defendants, the trustees, and the defendant company had appeared by the same solicitor; but that the solicitor was not entitled to be paid out of the funds any costs for which the company were, but the trustees were not, liable.—MORTGAGE INSURANCE CO. v. CANADIAN AGRICULTURAL COLONIZATION CO., Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 84 L. T. 861.

2. Costs—Taxation—Mining lease—Negotiations—Third-party order—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), s. 38.—Where, under the usual third-party order for taxation of a lessor's solicitor's bill of costs in the preparation of a mining lease, the lessees objected that they were not liable for certain items for preliminary negotiations which were included in the bill, and in particular for fees paid to a mining expert and correspondence with him; and the question was whether their liability was altered by reason of a third-party order to tax having been obtained by them; and the taxing-master having decided that the lessees had rendered themselves liable for these fees by reason of their having obtained the third-party order to tax,

Held, that the third-party order did not alter or enlarge the scope of the liability upon the existence of which the order was based. The court was bound to look at the nature of the items, and to consider whether, apart from the order, the applicant was under any liability to pay them. Although the solicitor may put in one bill, as against his own client, a series of items, some of which may go beyond the liability of the third party, the third party does not, by obtaining an order to tax, render himself liable to the whole bill, unless there is a contract—express or implied—to this effect. The bill accordingly was referred back to the taxing-master to review his taxation.

In re Negus, 43 W. R. 68, [1895] 1 Ch. 73, considered.—GRAY, RE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 298; [1901] 1 Ch. 239; 70 L. J. Ch. 133; 84 L. T. 24.

3. Costs—Taxation—Payment on account—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), s. 41.—The plaintiff had paid the amount of an account sent in by his solicitor, which account was not, however, a "bill of costs" inasmuch as it did not set out the particular items charged. More than twelve months after such payment, the plaintiff took out a summons for delivery and taxation of the solicitor's bill of costs. No bill of costs had been delivered at the date of the hearing of the summons.

Held, that the payment on account could not in the circumstances be made referable to the bill of costs which would be delivered after the hearing of the application; and that the plaintiff was entitled to the common form order for delivery and taxation, notwithstanding the payment made upwards of twelve months before the issue of the summons.—CALLIS, RE, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 316.

4. Costs—Taxation—Trustee—Payment by trustee more than twelve months previously—Claim of cestui que trust to taxation—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), ss. 39, 41.—Section 41 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, has a general application, and refers to all modes of taxation previously specified in sections 37 to 40. The court, therefore, has no power to order taxation under section 39 more than twelve calendar months after payment.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (48 W. R. 375, [1900] 1 Ch. 857) reversed.—WELLBORNE, RE, C.A., 113; [1901] 1 Ch. 312; 70 L. J. Ch. 172; 83 L. T. 611.

5. Lien—Charging order on fund in court—Client a company—Application after winding-up order—Delay—Discretion—Solicitors Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 127), s. 28—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 163.—In an application for a charging order under the Solicitors Act, 1860, s. 28, delay by the applicant is no ground for refusing the order unless other rights in respect of the property have arisen in the meantime.

An order made under this section on the interest of a company in a fund in court is not such an execution on the assets of the company as would be void under section 163 of the Companies Act, 1862.—BORN, RE, CURNOCK v. BORN, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 23; [1900] 2 Ch. 433; 69 L. J. Ch. 669; 83 L. T. 51.

6. Lien — Infants — Compromise — Judgment — Reserving liberty to solicitor to apply—Form of order.—A solicitor acting for infants in an action, in consenting to a judgment-compromise whereby a specific fund brought into court in the action is ordered to be paid out to trustees for the benefit of the infants, is entitled to the ordinary solicitor's lien for his costs upon the interests of the infants in the fund as fully and effectually as he would have been entitled thereto had his clients been persons sui juris; and it is not necessary, though it may be desirable, that his right under such lien should be expressly reserved by the judgment.—SANDERSON, RE, WRIGHT v. SANDERSON, C.A.; [1901] 1 Ch. 317; 83 L. T. 515.

7. Probate—Practice—Attachment—Solicitors Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict c. 127), s. 26—Unauthorized person—Lodging caveat—Ministerial act.—Lodging a caveat is a ministerial act, and a person, not being a solicitor, who performs this act on behalf of another, is not liable to attachment under section 26 of the Solicitors Act, 1860.—PANTON, RE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1901] P. 239; 84 L. T. 725.

8. Professional misconduct—Conflicting interests—Undisclosed agreement to share profits—Solicitors Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict c. 65).—Where solicitors represent conflicting interests in litigious proceedings of any kind, any arrangement or understanding or practice whereby a share of profit, whether called "agency" or by any other name, is paid by one of the solicitors to another, is wrong in principle and fraught with risk to the welfare of clients and to the administration of justice, and constitutes professional misconduct. — INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY, EX PARTE, FOUR SOLICITORS, RE, Q.B.D., 219; [1901] 1 Q. B. 187; 70 L. J. Q. B. 5; 83 L. T. 484.

See also Bankruptcy, 9; Mortgage, 13; Partnership, 3; Practice, 34.

STAMP ACTS.—See Inland Revenue, 19-27.

STOCK EXCHANGE:—

1. Bankruptcy—Broker—Debt for differences due to client—Collection of assets by official assignee of Stock Exchange—Claim by trustee in bankruptcy.—A sum of money due from a stockbroker to a customer for differences is not impressed with any trust in favour of the customer, but on the bankruptcy of the broker passes to the trustee in bankruptcy for the benefit of the general body of creditors.

Decision of Phillimore, J. (48 W. R. 95), affirmed.—KING v. HUTTON, C.A.; 69 L. J. Q. B. 786; 83 L. T. 68.

2. Principal and agent—Broker lumping several orders under one contract—Liability of principal to jobber on default of broker—Custom—Stock Exchange Rules, r. 177.—A stockbroker who was instructed by a client to purchase and carry over for him 210 Louisville shares for a particular account, executed the order by purchasing in his own name from a jobber a large number of these shares and appropriating in his books the specified number to the client and the remainder of the shares to a third party. The stockbroker having been declared a defaulter, Held, by Kennedy, J. ([1900] 2 Q. B. 18, 5 Com. Cas. 217, 48 W. R. Dig. 185), in an action by the jobber to recover damages for non-acceptance of the 210 shares by the client, that the alleged Stock Exchange usage, by which a broker, instructed by two or more different clients to purchase certain shares to be carried over from time to time, lumps the orders together and purchases the shares in his own name from the jobber, does not create any privity of contract between the jobber and the broker's clients, so as to enable the former to sue the latter in the event of the broker's failure to meet his liability.

Held, on appeal, that the judgment of Kennedy, J., must be affirmed, as the alleged custom of the Stock Exchange relied on by the jobber had not been proved at the trial to exist.

Semble (per A. L. Smith, M.R.), if, in some other action, the existence of this custom could be proved, it seemed to him to be a reasonable custom, and might be pleaded.

Levitt & Thornton v. Hamblet, 17 Times L. R. 307, referred to.—BECKHUSEN v. HAMBLET, C.A., 481; [1901] 2 K. B. 73; 70 L J. K. B. 600; 84 L. T. 617.

3. Principal and agent — Default of broker — Liability of client to jobber—Privity of contract.—Defendant employed a broker to purchase for him certain shares on the Stock Exchange, and afterwards directed him to carry over the shares to the next account. The broker, in accordance with the regulations of the Stock Exchange, purchased the shares in his own name from the plaintiffs, who were jobbers on the Stock Exchange, and afterwards carried over with them the same shares. The defendant's name was not disclosed. Before the next settling day the broker was declared a defaulter on the Stock Exchange, and in accordance with the rules of that body his contract with the plaintiffs was closed, at a price fixed by the official assignee of the Stock Exchange. The plaintiffs having ascertained that the broker was acting for the defendant in this transaction called upon him to take up the shares. He declined to accept any responsibility for them; and the plaintiffs, on the settling day, tendered the shares to the defendant, and, on his refusing to accept them, sold them for the best price then obtainable. In an action to recover from the defendant the difference between the price at which the shares had been carried over and that at which they had been sold,

Held, affirming the judgment of Mathew, J., that the defendant was liable as principal on the contract made for him by his broker with the plaintiffs, and that the privity of contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant was not affected by the rules of the Stock Exchange as to the compulsory closing of the transactions of a defaulting broker.

There is no established usage under which the client of a broker on the Stock Exchange who has become a defaulter, and whose transactions have been closed at prices fixed by the official assignee, can claim the right to close at the price so fixed a transaction entered into for him by the broker with another member of the Stock Exchange.—LEVITT v. HAMBLET, C.A.; [1901] 2 K. B. 53; 70 L. J. K. B. 520; 84 L. T. 638.

4. Voluntary gift—Purchase of shares—Passing wife's name as name of purchaser—Death of donor before transfers executed — Will — Construction — Tenant for life and remainderman—Liability for dilapidations existing prior to testator's death.—A testator a few days before his death bought through a broker on the Stock Exchange certain stocks and shares. On the day before his death, this being also "name day" on the Stock Exchange, in accordance with the testator's instructions his wife's name was passed as the transferee of the stocks and shares. The testator died before the transfers were executed.

Held, that the gift of the stocks and shares was complete.

Further, testator by his will declared that his trustees might permit his widow to reside in his leasehold house as long as she might desire, "she paying the rent and all rates, taxes, outgoings and repairs in connection therewith, and my trustees shall not be concerned to see to the upkeep of, or be responsible for, the said premises in any way during such time as my wife shall reside in the said premises."

Held, that the widow was not liable to pay for dilapidations existing prior to the testator's death. —SMITH, RE, BULL v. SMITH, Ch.D. Byrne, J.; 84 L. T. 835.

See also Principal and Agent, 4.

TELEGRAPH —See County Court, 12.

TOLL:—

Turnpike road—Exemption—Carriage employed in her Majesty's military service—Army Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 58), s. 143.—A private carriage belonging to an officer in the regular forces is not, when used by him while on duty, exempted by section 143 of the Army Act, 1881, from payment of toll in passing along a turnpike road.—CRAIG v. NICHOLAS, Q.B.D., 48; [1900] 2 Q. B. 444; 69 L. J. Q. B. 608; 82 L. T. 765.

TRADE-MARK:—

1. Invented word—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 64, as amended by Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 50), s. 10.—The word "Uneeda" being a mere misspelt combination of the English words "You need a," is not an "invented word" within the meaning of section 64, sub-section 1 (d), of the Trade-Marks Act. Moreover, it is descriptive of the quality or character of goods; and on both these grounds it is not the proper subject of registration as a trade-mark.—"UNEEDA" TRADE-MARK, RE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 550; 70 L J. Ch. 318; 84 L. T. 259.

2. Merchandize Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), ss. 2, sub-section 2; 3, sub-section 1—False trade description—"Application to goods—Description implied from conduct.—A purchaser asked at a shop for two half-pounds of tea. The salesman, without making any verbal statement, handed him two packets of tea, for which he paid. Each packet was stamped in ink, "The weight of this package, including the wrapper, is ½ lb." There was slightly less than ½ lb. of tea in each packet, but the weight of the tea and the wrapper combined was more than ½ lb.

Held, that the salesman had not by his conduct applied to the tea a false description of its weight within the meaning of the Merchandize Marks Act, 1887.—LANGLEY v. BOMBAY TEA CO., Q.B.D., 27; [1900] 2 Q. B. 460; 69 L. J. Q. B. 752; 83 L. T. 175.

3. Merchandize marks—Selling goods with forged trade-mark applied to them — Reason to suspect genuineness of trade-mark—"Acting innocently"—Merchandize Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), s. 2, sub-section 2.—By section 2, sub-section 2, of the Merchandize Marks Act, 1887, every person who sells any goods to which any forged trade-mark or false trade description is applied shall be guilty of an offence against the Act, unless he proves that, having taken all reasonable precautions against committing an offence against the Act, he had no reason to suspect the genuineness of the trade-mark or trade description, or—clause (c)—"that otherwise he had acted innocently."

Held, that a person who sells goods to which a forged trade-mark or false trade description is applied may show that he "acted innocently," and be exonerated under clause (c), although at the time of the sale he had reason to suspect the genuineness of the trade-mark or trade description. —CHRISTIE v. COOPER, Q.B.D., 46; [1900] 2 Q. B. 522; 69 L. J. Q. B. 708.

4. Merchandize marks—Watch—Parts imported from abroad—Finished in England—"English lever"—Merchandize Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 20).—The appellants sold a watch for £2 5*s.* to which they applied the description "English lever."

Certain parts were imported into this country from abroad in a more or less unfinished state. The value of these parts in their rough condition, including the mainspring, hairspring, and certain screws, was 8d. The price of these parts when finished in England was estimated to be 4*s.* 5*d.* All these parts were dealt with in this country to enable them to go into a watch, and the watch was put together here.

The magistrate held that the imported parts were of foreign origin and of such importance that a description which failed to indicate them was a false description in a material respect, and that the finishing operations in this country were not of such a character as to destroy the characteristics of the foreign country in which they were made and produced.

He accordingly convicted the appellants of applying a false trade description to the watch.

Held, on remitting the case to the magistrate, that if he had come to this conclusion as one of fact on the evidence, and had simply stated the case to determine whether there was anything in point of law to prevent him coming to such conclusion, the court would not disturb his decision; but that if he decided upon the view that the inclusion of certain parts partly manufactured abroad compelled him as a matter of law to hold that "English" was a false description, then his decision could not be supported.—WILLIAMSON v. TIERNEY, Q.B.D.; 83 L. T. 592.

5. Registration—Double registration—Non-essential particulars—Disclaimer—Time—Patents, &c., Acts, 1883-1888 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57; 51 & 52 Vict. c. 50), s. 62.—Registration will not be allowed of a trade-mark identical in essential particulars with, but differing in non-essential particulars from, a registered mark of the applicant himself.

The exclusive use of non-essential particulars on a trade-mark must be disclaimed in the application for registration. Subsequent amendment will not be allowed.—PLAYER & SONS' TRADE-MARK, RE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 382; 70 L. J. Ch. 359; 84 L. T. 190.

6. Registration—Rectification of register — Disclaimer—"Distinctive word"—Descriptive word—"Calculated to deceive or otherwise"—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), ss. 73, 74 —Under the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, a trade-mark for jams was registered by the plaintiffs, consisting of a copy of a written signature with the word "Silverpan" added. The plaintiffs did not claim under the registration the exclusive use of the word "Silverpan." On motion by the defendants to rectify the register by removing the trade-mark, or by adding a disclaimer of any right by the plaintiffs to the exclusive use of the word "Silverpan,"

Held, that the word "Silverpan" was not a "distinctive word" within the meaning of section 74 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, and was "not calculated to deceive or otherwise" within the meaning of section 73 of the Act, and that the motion must be refused.—FAULDER'S TRADE-MARK, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 83 L. T. 726.

TRADE NAME:—

1. Action for deceit—Passing off—Calculated to deceive—Functions of judge and witness respectively.—Observations of Lord Macnachten on the respective functions of judge and witness in passing-off cases.—PAYTON & CO. v. SNELLING, H.L.; [1901] A. C. 308; 70 L. J. Ch. 644.

2. Same name—Goods of same class—Misleading public—Injunction.—In 1895 J. & J. Cash, an old firm at Coventry dealing in textile goods, was converted into a limited company, the plaintiffs in this action. The defendant, Joseph Cash, was one of the directors. He retired in 1898 and set up in the same class of business at Coventry as "Joseph Cash & Co."

Held, that it was impossible for the defendant trading under his own name of Cash to sell "frillings" without their being known as "Cash's frillings"; that, that term having been proved to mean goods of the plaintiffs, to sell "Cash's frillings" was to represent such frillings to be the goods of the plaintiffs, and that the defendant must therefore be restrained from selling frillings under the name of Cash.—CASH v. CASH, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 84 L. T. 349.

3. Similar name—True personal name—Tendency to deceive—Injunction.—The plaintiffs were the proprietors and manufacturers of a preparation of meat juice, which for many years had been advertised and sold under a name whereof "Valentine" formed part.

The defendant company was promoted by the defendant C. R. Valentine, who was appointed managing director, for the purpose of manufacturing and selling extract of meat in the shape of globules in a protecting cover, according to his patented invention.

The globules were at first packed in boxes bearing labels describing them as "Valentine's Valtine Meat Globules," the word "Valtine" being a registered trade-mark which was acquired by the defendant company, on its formation, from the defendant C. R. Valentine.

Previously there was no preparation of meat juice or extract on the market, connected with the name of "Valentine," other than that manufactured and sold by the plaintiffs. Accordingly they brought an action for an injunction to restrain the defendant company from carrying on business as manufacturers or vendors of any preparation of extract of meat or meat juice under any name or title of which the name "Valentine" or "Valentine's" formed part; and to restrain the defendant C. R. Valentine from carrying on any such business under any such name or title without clearly distinguishing that business from the business of the plaintiffs.

Since the commencement of the action the description on the labels issued by the defendant company had been altered to "Valtine Meat Globules." The plaintiffs did not complain that the defendant company had got up their goods so as to resemble the plaintiffs', but only that they had made use of the name "Valentine" in such a way as to deceive the public into the belief that the goods sold by them were manufactured by the plaintiffs.

Held, that there was, in principle, no distinction between a case in which the name, of the use of which the complaint was made, was the name of the person who was carrying on business and a case in which it was not; that in both cases the principle of Reddaway v. Banham, [1896] A. C. 199, applied; that the term "Valentine Extract" could not be used in connection with meat juice without representing the goods to be those of the plaintiffs; and that, therefore, they were entitled to the relief which they asked, and, under the circumstances, the injunction must extend to the use of the word "Valtine." — VALENTINE MEAT JUICE CO. v. VALENTINE EXTRACT CO., C.A.; 83 L. T. 259.

TRADE UNION:—

1. Action against trade union in registered name—Picketing—Injunction—Trade Union Acts, 1871 and 1876 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31; 39 & 40 Vict. c 22).—An action will not lie against a trade union in its registered name.—TAFF VALE RAILWAY CO. v. AMALGAMATED SOCIETY OF RAILWAY SERVANTS, C.A.; 101; [1901] 1 K. B. 170; 70 L. J. Q. B. 219; 83 L. T. 474.

2. Association—Agreement in restraint of trade—Expulsion of member—Directly enforcing agreement between members—Jurisdiction of court—Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 81), s. 4 (1)—Trade Union Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 22), s. 16.—An association established to give facilities to trade which by its rules provides that its members shall charge specified rates, subject only to a discount fixed by the rules, is a combination for imposing restrictive conditions on the conduct of a trade, and is therefore a trade union according to the definition in section 16 of the Trade Union Act, 1876.

An action by a member of such an association to restrain the committee from expelling him from the association is an action for "directly enforcing" the agreement between the members of a trade union, and consequently cannot be entertained by the court by reason of the Trade Union Act, 1871, s. 4 (1).—CHAMBERLAIN'S WHARF v. SMITH, C.A., 91; [1900] 2 Ch. 605; 69 L. J. Ch. 783; 83 O. T. 238.

3. Newspaper carried on to further the interest of union—Ultra vires—Libel—Trustees sued as registered proprietors—Damages—Liability of funds of union to indemnify trustee for damages and costs—Trades Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c 31), ss. 8, 9.—The trustees of a trade union were registered as the proprietors of a newspaper printed and published to further the interests of the members of the trade union. A libel upon the plaintiff appeared in the newspaper which the trustees had not authorized the publication of. The plaintiff sued the defendants as the trustees of the union, and recovered damages and costs.

Held, that, as the property in the newspaper was vested in the trustees, they were liable, and were entitled to be indemnified out of the funds of the society.

Held, also, that the carrying on of the newspaper was not ultra vires.—LINAKER v. PILCHER, K.B.D, 413; 70 L. J. K. B. 396; 84 L. T. 421.

TRAMWAY:—

1. Contract by road authority to repair road—Liability for non-repair—Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), ss. 28, 29, 55.—By section 28 of the Tramways Act, 1870, the promoters of tramway companies are put under a liability to repair so much of the road on which their tramway is as lies between their rails, together with eighteen inches on the outside thereof.

By section 29 they are entitled to enter into contracts with the road authority with respect to the paving and keeping in repair of the roadway of any road on which their trams run.

By section 55: "The promoters or lessees . . . shall be answerable for all accidents, damages, and injuries happening through their act or default, by reason or in consequence of any of their works or carriages, and shall save harmless all road and other authorities, companies, or bodies collectively and individually . . . from all damages and costs in respect of such accidents, damages, and injuries."

Held, that the road authority, when it had contracted with the tramway company to keep in repair that part of the road on which the tramway ran, could be sued for non-repair.—BARNETT v. POPLAR (MAYOR), K.B.D., 574; [1901] 2 K. B. 319; 70 L. J. K. B. 698; 84 L. T. 845.

2. Rating—Engine-houses—County court—Mandamus—Victoria, law of.—A county court having materially reduced the respondents' assessment of the appellants' tramway, Held, that the Supreme Court had jurisdiction to issue a mandamus directing it to state the facts for their determination.

A decision of the county court in a rate appeal is not final under sections 60, 61 of Act No. 1243 of 1891. Those sections must be read with and are qualified by section 139 of No. 1105 of 1890, which in effect enacts that the court may be required to state a case in "all appeals": an expression which on its true construction includes rating appeals.

Held, also, that the land of the appellants' tramways, though its ownership is vested in the Crown, is occupied by the company and used for the profit of its members, and is rateable property, not falling within the exception in section 246 of Act No. 1112. The rateable value of its occupation is the gross profit of the concern, from which 10 per cent. on the capital outlay is rightly deducted. That value cannot be affected by the amount of consideration paid to acquire occupation whether in the shape of rent or instalments of purchase-money.

Pimlico, &c, Tramways Co. v. Greenwich Union, L. R. 9 Q. B. 9, approved.

Where a tramway runs through several municipalities, but has its engine-houses in one of them,

Held, that the separate rating value of the engine-houses taken at 5 per cent. on the fee simple value should be deducted from the rating value of the whole concern and allotted to the municipality in which they stand, and that the remainder of the rating value should be shared among the different municipalities according to the length of the tramway in each.—MELBOURNE TRAMWAY CO. v. MAYOR, &c., OF THE CITY OF FITZROY, P.C.; [1901] A. C. 153; 70 L. J. P C. 1.

See also Highway, 9; Local Government, 8.

TROVER:—

Conversion—Police constable—Article taken by police from a person accused of theft.—A gig, the property of the plaintiff, disappeared and was found in the possession of B. B. was prosecuted for stealing the gig and was acquitted. The gig had been removed by the police to the police-station. Both the plaintiff and B. demanded possession of the gig from the defendant, who was the sergeant in charge at the police-station. The defendant, acting under instructions from his superior officer, an inspector, refused the demand of the plaintiff and delivered the gig to B.

Held, that the defendant was liable in trover.—WINTER v. BANCKS, K.B.D., 574; 84 L. T. 504.

TRUSTEE:—

1. Appointment—Infant—Practice—Management of land during minority—Infant taking by descent—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 42, sub-section 1.—Section 42, sub-section 1, of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, enabling the court to appoint trustees on the application of a guardian or next friend of an infant beneficially entitled to the possession of any land, applies to the case of an infant taking by descent.

In re Glover, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 337, followed.—COWLEY, RE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy. J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 38; 70 L. J. Ch. 88; 83 L. T. 729.

2. Attachment—Trustee ordered to pay into court—Money in possession or under control—Actual receipt—Evidence—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 4—Debtors Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 54).—In an action against executors and trustees to recover the plaintiff's share of the testator's residuary estate, the master had by his certificate found that the defendants had received personal estate of the testator not specifically bequeathed to a certain amount, and had paid, or were entitled to be allowed in account, certain other sums, leaving a balance due from them, one-fourth of which was due to the plaintiff. The certificate was based upon, inter alia, an affidavit of the defendants, in which they set forth a full account of the testator's personal estate which had come to their hands or the hands of either of them, or to the hands of any person or persons by their order or the order of either of them, or for their use or the use of either of them. The account contained particulars of their receipts, including various sums of cash.

The defendants having failed to comply with an order to pay into court the amount found to be due from them to the plaintiff, a motion for attachment was made against them.

Held, that there was no evidence of actual receipt by the defendants, and that consequently the money was not shown to be "in their possession or under their control" within the exception to section 4 of the Debtors Act, 1869; and no order made on the motion.—FEWSTER, RE, HERDMAN v. FEWSTER, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 447; 70 L. J. Ch. 254; 84 L. T. 45.

3. Executor—Devastavit—Reliance on solicitor—Relief from liability—Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 3, sub-section 1.—During five years' administration of a testator's estate by the court, the executors, who knew that large sums were necessary for the payment of debts, disbursements, and other administration purposes, paid various sums from time to time to their solicitors in reliance on their statements that these sums were in each case required for those purposes, to which they were in fact in great part applied. Shortly before the close of the administration the solicitors became bankrupt, and, the total amount paid to them being substantially in excess of the amount required and applied for administration purposes, the balance was lost to the estate,

Held, under the special circumstances, that the executors had acted honestly and reasonably, and ought fairly to be excused for making the payments in reliance on their solicitors' statements, and ought to be relieved from personal liability in respect of the balance lost.

Bacon v. Bacon, 5 Ves. 831, followed.

Observations on section 3, sub-section 1. of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896. — DE CLIFFORD'S ESTATE, RE, DE CLIFFORD v. LANSDOWNE, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 707; 83 L. T. 160.

4. Indemnity—Shares—Creation of relation of trustee and cestui que trust—Proof—Personal liability.—All that is necessary to establish the relation of trustee and cestui que trust is to prove that the legal title is in one person and the equitable in another.

A person sui juris by accepting the beneficial ownership in shares, the legal ownership whereof is vested in another as trustee, renders himself personally liable in the absence of any contract to the contrary, to indemnify the trustee against calls.

Should the beneficiaries be tenants for life, infants, or if there are special trusts limiting the right to indemnity, the trustee's right does not extend beyond the trust estate—i.e., beyond the respective interests of his cestuis que trustent.

An assignee, therefore, of the beneficial ownership in shares, with full knowledge that they were registered in another's name as trustee for their original purchasers and their assigns, must make good to the trustee any liability he has to meet as legal owner thereof.—HARDOON v. BELILIOS, P.C., 209; [1901] A. C. 118; 70 L. J. P. C. 9; 83 L. T. 573.

5 Investment—Bonds payable to bearer—Custody of bankers.—Where trustees were expressly authorized to retain or invest in convertible securities such as bonds transferable by delivery with coupons attached,

Held, that the trustees might deposit such securities in their joint names in a bank upon a simple acknowledgment by the bank of the receipt thereof.

Field v. Field, [1894] 1 Ch. 425, distinguished.—DE POTHONIER, RE, DENT v. DE POTHONIER, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 529; 69 L. J. Ch. 773; 83 L. T. 220.

6. Investment—Sale and conversion—Shares in partnership—Conversion into limited company—Unauthorized investment—Jurisdiction.—The court has no jurisdiction to authorize trustees of a testator, who was a member of a partnership carrying on a business, to agree to take shares in a limited company into which it is proposed to convert the business, in exchange for the interest of the testator therein, where such shares are not investments authorized by the will or by law; and the court will not consider whether such a course is beneficial for the estate of the testator or not.

The cases where the court has approved of such agreements have been benevolent cases.—MORRISON v. MORRISON, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 441; [1901] 1 Ch. 701; 70 L. J. Ch. 399; 84 L. T. 383.

7. Investment — Will — Administration — Trust funds—Prohibited investments—Lord St. Leonards' Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 38), s. 10.—A testator directed that the income of a portion of his estate was to be invested in Consols (and in no other securities).

The court refused to order the sale of the Consols and the reinvestment of the proceeds in securities authorized by section 11 of Lord St. Leonards' Act, 1860.

In re Wedderburn's Trusts, 27 W. R. 53, 9 Ch. D. 112, not followed.—OVEY v. OVEY, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 45; [1900] 2 Ch. 524; 69 L. J. Ch. 804; 83 L. T. 311.

8. Judicial trustee—Appointment of new trustee—Rejection of nominee of applicant—Jurisdiction of court—Appointment of third person—Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 1 (1) (3)—Sub-section 3 of section 1 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, applies only to the particular cases mentioned in the section, and does not cut down the general power of appointing any fit and proper person to be a trustee, given to the court by sub-section 1 of section 1 of the Act.

Consequently, if the court is not satisfied of the fitness of the nominee of the person making the application, it is not bound, in such a case, to appoint only an official of the court, but can appoint some other person whose name has been brought before the court by some other of the parties interested.—DOUGLAS v. BOLAM, C.A., 163; [1900] 2 Ch. 749; 70 L. J. Ch. 1; 83 L. T. 448.

9. Leaseholds—Power of sale—Underlease to purchaser.—Trustees who are assignees of leasehold property held under one lease cannot, in exercise of an ordinary power of sale, sell the property in lots, retaining in themselves the original term, and granting underleases for the whole term less one day to the purchasers of the respective lots at apportioned rents, for by adopting such a method of assurance the trustees do not perform their duty and get rid of their liability by privity of estate to the lessor.—WALKER AND OAKSHOTT'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 70 L. J. Ch. 666; 84 L. T. 809.

10. New trustee—Absence from the United Kingdom for more than twelve months—Temporary return, with transaction of trust business—Statutory power of appointment of new trustee—Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 10, sub-section 1.—A trustee travelling on the Continent for a period exceeding twelve months, but who has made a temporary visit to England for one week within the twelve months, and on that visit has transacted trust business, is not a trustee who "remains out of the United Kingdom for more than twelve months" within the meaning of section 10 (1) of the Trustee Act, 1893. —WALKER, RE, SUMMERS v. BARROW, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 167; [1901] 1 Ch. 259; 70 L. J. Ch. 229.

11. Partnership—Discharge—Liability of retired partners for trust debt—Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), s. 17, sub-section 3.—A power to lend trust money to a firm consisting of certain individuals does not authorize a loan to a firm indifferently constituted, whether including more individuals or less.

A testator, who had been a partner in the firm of A. & W. Smith & Co., nominated his wife and two of the three remaining partners in the firm as his trustees, and he specially authorized his trustees to allow his share of the capital to remain as a loan to the firm so long as his trustees should think it safe to allow it to remain. The wife died. The amount of the capital was ascertained and continued as a loan to the firm, but without any bond or other obligation being given for it. The third partner, not a trustee, was dissatisfied with the conduct of the firm's business, the result being that he agreed to retire under an agreement by which the two trustee partners paid him a sum of £9,000 for his interest in the firm, and by which the trustee partners undertook to meet all the liabilities of the firm, take over all the assets, and relieve the third partner of all debts. The new firm was carried on by the two trustee partners under the old name, and it paid a half-year's interest on the debt due to the trust estate. A year after the retirement of the third partner the trustee partners, as trustees, granted to the old firm and the third partner a discharge of the debt due to the trust. And about a month afterwards the new firm became insolvent and the two partners bankrupt. The trustee partners resigned their trusteeship, and new trustees were appointed, who acted as creditors on the new firm, and received a dividend out of the new firm's assets. They then raised against the retired third partner this action, claiming reduction of the discharge and payment of the balance of the trust debt.

Held, affirming the decision of the First Division of the Court of Session, (1900) 37, s. 4, R. 557, that the discharge was a breach of trust on the part of the trustee partners from which the third partner could not profit, the discharge being gratuitous; that the actings of the new trustees in ranking as creditors on the new firm's assets did not discharge the liability of the old firm; and that the third partner was liable to make good the loss to the trust estate.—SMITH v. PATRICK, H.L.; [1901] A. C. 282; 70 L. J. P. C. 19; 84 L. T. 740.

See also Executor, 2; Solicitor, 4; Vendor and Purchaser, 20, 21; Will, 26, 28

VACCINATION:—

1. Neglect to procure — Information — Period at which offence complete—Limitation of time—Vaccination Acts, 1867, 1871, 1898 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 84, s. 29; 34 & 35 Vict. c. 98, s. 11; 61 & 62 Vict. c. 49, s 1). —The appellant was convicted on an information laid on the 12th of July, 1900, under the Vaccination Act, 1867, s. 29, charging him that, being the parent having the custody of a child born on the 30th of December, 1890, he did unlawfully neglect to cause the child to be vaccinated within six months after birth, not rendering a reasonable excuse for his neglect.

On the 1st of May, 1899, the public vaccinator visited the appellant's house, pursuant to notice, and offered to vaccinate the child, and vaccination was refused.

On the 7th of July, 1899, the vaccination officer served a notice, under the Vaccination Order, 1898, on the appellant, requiring him to have the child vaccinated within fourteen days. No certificate of postponement or successful vaccination was received in respect of the child.

The appellant objected that the information was out of time, having been laid more than twelve months after the offence was committed. The justices disallowed the objection, on the ground that the offence was complete, and the time began to run, on the 21st of July, the date of the expiration of the notice served on the appellant by the vaccination officer.

Held, that the offence was complete, and the time began to run, six months after the birth of the child, and the information was out of time.—LANGRIDGE v. HOBBS, Q.B.D; [1901] 1 Q. B. 497; 70 L. J. K. B. 362; 84 L. T. 319.

2. Proceedings to enforce vaccination — Condition precedent—Visit of public vaccinator—Vaccination Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 84), s. 31—Vaccination Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 49), s. 1, sub-section 3.—The visit of the public vaccinator to the home of a child, required by section 1, sub-section 3, of the Vaccination Act, 1898, is not a condition precedent to proceedings under section 31 of the Vaccination Act, 1867, in respect of such child.

Quære, whether the provisions of section 1 of the Vaccination Act, 1898, apply in the case of children born before the passing of the Act.—PYM v. WILSHER, K.B D., 654.

VENDOR and PURCHASER:—

1. Bankruptcy — Specific performance — Vendor's trustee in bankruptcy—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 55—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 13.—Specific performance may be enforced against the trustee in bankruptcy of a vendor of property, and, if the property is leasehold, he cannot disclaim the contract without disclaiming the lease.

Holloway v. York, 25 W. R. 627, distinguished.—PEARCE v. BASTABLE, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1901] 2 Ch. 122; 70 L. J. Ch. 446; 84 L. T. 525.

2. Building estate—Deposit—Purchaser's option to rescind if houses not built—Lien for deposit.—A purchaser has a lien for a deposit paid under a contract for the sale of a plot of land when the contract goes off for want of title, and also when the contract is rescinded under a condition enabling the purchaser to rescind.

Rose v. Watson, 12 W. R. 585, 10 H L. Cas. 672, followed.

Dictum of KAY, L.J., in Rodger v. Harrison, 41 W. R. 291, [1893] 1 Q. B. 161, dissented from.—WHITBREAD v WATT, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 534; [1901] 1 Ch. 911; 70 L. J. Ch. 515; 84 L. T. 419.

3. Building scheme — Auction sale — Restrictive stipulations—Prior purchaser—Restrictive covenants —Benefit of covenants—Assigns of vendor.—A vendor, the owner in fee of an estate, conveyed part of it to D., who, for himself, his executors, administrators, and assigns, entered into certain restrictive covenants with the vendor, his heirs and assigns. About the same time the vendor conveyed two other portions of the estate to two other purchasers, subject to restrictive covenants similar to D.'s covenants. The vendor subsequently sold the remainder of the estate in lots by auction, subject to restrictive stipulations binding on each purchaser similar to D.'s covenants. The auction sale plan showed the whole estate sold and unsold.

An action was brought by the assigns of purchasers at the auction sale to enforce against a lessee of an assign of D. the covenants entered into by D. with the vendor. The benefit of these covenants had never been expressly assigned to the purchasers at the auction sale.

Held, that there was a general building scheme affecting the whole estate; that D. was not bound by it for want of reciprocity; but that the plan and particulars of the auction sale raised an irresistible inference that the vendor intended the purchasers at that sale to have the benefit of D.'s covenants so that the purchasers at that sale could enforce D.'s covenants as assigns of the vendor.—NALDER'S BREWERY CO. v. HARMAN, C.A.; 83 L. T. 257.

4. Conditions of sale—Condition as to compensation in case of "errors," "misstatements," and "omissions" in particulars of sale—Omission by vendor to disclose previous service of notices under the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55)—Compensation.—Leasehold property was sold subject to a condition that, if any "error, misstatement, or omission" should be discovered in the particulars, the same should not annul the sale, but should be a subject for compensation. It was subsequently discovered, before the completion of the purchase, that notices to sewer, flag, and pave the adjoining street had prior to the sale been served upon the vendor by the local authority under the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875. These notices had not been complied with, nor had they been disclosed to the purchaser at the time of the sale. The purchaser elected to complete his purchase, without prejudice to any claim that he might have to compensation for the non-disclosure of the notices in question.

Held, that, inasmuch as the property would always have continued liable to the service of these notices in the hands of the purchaser from the moment of his purchase, supposing they had not been previously served; and, inasmuch as it was accordingly impossible to believe that the market value of the property could be affected in the slightest degree by the question whether such notices, as a matter of fact, had or had not been given at the time of the sale, the purchaser must be taken to have suffered in fact no practical injury (damnum) from the non-disclosure of what had actually happened.

Held, accordingly (Collins, L.J., dubitante), that even if such non-disclosure constituted an "error" or "omission" within the meaning of the condition, yet, since no practical injury (damnum) had in fact been done, no compensation could be given the purchaser under the provisions of that condition.

Per Collins, L.J.—The non-disclosure of the notices constituted an "error" or "omission" on the part of the vendor within the meaning of the condition.—LEYLAND AND TAYLOR'S CONTRACT, RE C.A., 17; [1900] 2 Ch. 625; 69 L. J. Ch. 764; 83 L. T. 380.

5. Condition of sale—Conveyance—Concurrence of mortgagee—Costs.—A condition in a contract for sale of land that the assurance and every instrument required for completing the vendor's title or for any other purpose is to be "prepared" by and at the expense of the purchaser is not sufficiently wide to throw the costs of perusing and executing the conveyance on behalf of a mortgagee who concurred in the conveyance on the purchaser.—SANDER AND WALFORD'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch. D. Farwell, J.; 83 L. T. 316.

6. Conditions of sale—Defect of title—Conveyance—Compensation—Rescission.—Certain freehold hereditaments were sold by the court in a partition action, subject to a condition that, if any error or misstatement should appear to have been made in the particulars or conditions of sale, such error or misstatement was not to annul the sale or to entitle the purchaser to be discharged from his purchase, and that a compensation should be made to the purchaser, and the amount of such compensation was to be settled by the judge in chambers. More than a year after the conveyance to the purchaser it was discovered that a certain part of the hereditaments belonged to a third party, whose interest the purchaser bought out.

Held, that the purchaser was not entitled either to compensation under the condition or to the rescission of his contract.—DEBENHAM v. SAWBRIDGE, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 502; [1901] 2 Ch. 98; 70 L. J. Ch. 525; 84 L. T. 519.

7. Conditions of sale—"Notwithstanding intermediate or pending litigation"—Power to rescind—Notice to rescind pending proceedings—Costs.—The conditions of sale of certain property gave the vendors power to rescind the contract "if the purchaser shall insist on any objection or requisition which the vendors shall be unable or unwilling to comply with, and shall not withdraw the same after being required so to do, the vendors shall (notwithstanding any attempt to remove the same, or that there shall have been any intermediate or pending negotiation, proceeding, or litigation, and although they may have insisted that all or any of the objections and requisitions are or is untenable) be at liberty, by notice in writing signed by their solicitors, to rescind the contract, and shall thereupon return to the purchaser his deposit, but without any interest, costs of investigating the title, or other compensation or payment whatsoever." The vendors allowed a summons, taken out under the Vendors and Purchasers Act, 1874, by the purchaser for a declaration that his objections to the title had not been answered and that the title was defective, to be proceeded with after filing evidence and up to the moment of hearing, and then gave notice to rescind.

Held, that the vendors must pay the costs incurred up to the date of the notice to rescind.—SPINDLER AND MEARS' CONTRACT RE, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 410; [1901] 1 Ch. 908; 70 L. J. Ch. 420; 84 L. T. 295.

8. Conditions of sale—Specific performance—Misdescription—Compensation—Possessory title.—If what a vendor offers to convey is substantially different from what he offered to sell, he cannot enforce specific performance, and the purchaser is entitled to have the contract rescinded and his deposit paid back.

It is not an invariable rule that a condition excluding compensation for misstatements only applies to trivial errors; but such a condition cannot be relied on by a vendor seeking to force upon the purchaser what he did not contract to buy.

Flight v. Booth, 1 Bing. N. C. 370, and the cases on conditions providing for compensation or no compensation, considered.

On an open contract a possessory title must be shown, not for twelve years only, but for forty years.—JACOBS v. REVELL. Ch.D. Buckley, J., 109; [1900] 2 Ch. 858; 83 L. T. 629.

9. Contract—Misdescription in particulars—Auctioneer's statement — Compensation — Specific performance.—A material misdirection in the particulars of a property sold by auction may be corrected by the auctioneer's verbal statement at the sale, and if this is done the purchaser will not be entitled to specific performance with compensation, even if he did not hear the auctioneer's statement; in such a case the vendor is entitled to annul the sale, notwithstanding the existence of a condition that a misstatement in the particulars should not annul the sale, but form the subject of compensation.

Manser v. Back, 6 Hare 443, applied—HARE AND O'MORE'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 202; [1901] 1 Ch. 93; 70 L. J. Ch. 45; 83 L. T. 672.

10. Conveyance—Expressed grant of fee—Leasehold title in equity—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 63—Merger.—The question whether the merger of an equitable interest has taken place is one of intention.

Where the grantor purports to convey in fee by way of mortgage, but has only in equity a leasehold interest in the property, such interest passes to the grantee under section 63 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881.—THELLUSSON v. LIDDARD, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 10; [1900] 2 Ch. 635; 69 L. J Ch. 673; 82 L. T. 753.

11. Conveyance—Freeholds—Conveyance by executors to devisee subject to a charge—Land Transfer Act, 1897, ss. 2 (2) (3), 3 (1)—Lord St. Leonards Act (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35), s. 29.—The purchaser from a devisee (of a testator who died in 1898) to whom freeholds have been conveyed by the executors under the Land Transfer Act, 1897, s. 3 (1), "subject to a charge for the payment of any money which the personal representatives of the testator are liable to pay," is not entitled, where the executors have given proper notices under Lord St. Leonards Act, s. 29, and have paid all debts of which they have received notice, to an indemnity in respect of that charge; in such circumstances the executors are exempt from liability for any debts of which they have received no notice, and such exemption extends to the real estate of the testator. —CARY AND LOTT'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 581; 70 L. J. Ch. 653; 84 L. T. 859.

12. Conveyance—General words—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c 41) s. 6—Practice—Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78), s. 9.—A vendor is entitled, in the absence of indications in the contract of a contrary intention, to insist on express insertion in his conveyance of general words of lesser import than those which would be implied, in the absence of such express insertion, by virtue of section 6 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881.

The court has jurisdiction under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, to decide on summons a question arising on a contract, even in cases in which one of the parties asserts himself to be in a position to rescind the contract or to set up a successful defence to an action for specific performance.

In re Wallis and Barnard's Contract, 48 W. R. 57, [1899] 2 Ch. 515, approved. — HUGHES AND ASHLEY'S CONTRACT, RE, C.A., 67; [1900] 2 Ch. 595; 69 L. J. Ch. 741; 83 L. T. 390.

13. Covenant—Restrictive covenant—Construction—Buildings on land "adjoining" vendors' land.—In a conveyance on sale of a portion of plaintiffs' land to the defendant, the purchaser covenanted that he would not, "in the erection of buildings adjoining the hereditaments of the vendors," permit the insertion of any "lights" overlooking such premises. The defendant constructed a number of houses, the backs of which were 20ft. from the boundary fence separating the two properties. Their gardens or yards reached this fence, and there were windows in the houses which overlooked the plaintiffs' land.

Held, that the houses did not "adjoin" the plaintiffs' land within the meaning of the covenant. —IND v. HAMBLIN, C.A.; 84 L. T. 168.

14. Easement—Light and air—Non-disclosure of deed of acknowledgment—Specific performance—Compensation—Costs—Prescription Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 3.—A contract for the sale of a house with windows looking over land of a third person does not imply any representation or warranty that such windows have any right to access of light over such land.

The vendor of new houses having windows which overlooked a recreation ground vested in a town corporation, had, before his open contract with the purchaser, entered into a deed of covenant with the corporation that the owner of the houses should pay one shilling yearly as an acknowledgment that no easement of light or air over the recreation ground attached to the houses. This deed was not disclosed to the purchaser before the contract.

Held, that the vendor was entitled to enforce specific performence of the contract and without making compensation, but the court declined to order the purchaser to pay the vendor's costs of the action.—GREENHALGH v. BRINDLEY, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 597; [1901] 2 Ch. 324; 84 L. T. 763.

15. Notice of adverse title—Rents paid to house agent—Inquiry.—Though an intending purchaser or mortgagee, who has actual knowledge that the rents are paid by the tenants to some person whose receipt is inconsistent with the title of the vendor, has notice of such person's rights, yet such payment must be actually inconsistent. Thus, the knowledge that the rents are paid to a house agent puts the purchaser to no inquiry and fixes him with no notice.

Barnhart v. Greenshields, 9 Moo. P. C. 18, and Knight v. Bowyer, 6 W. R. 28, at p. 33, 23 Beav. 609, at p. 642, discussed and explained.

Mumford v. Stohwasser, 23 W. R. 833, L. R. 18 Eq. 566, discussed and dissented from.—HUNT v. LUCK, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 155; [1901] 1 Ch. 45; 70 L. J. Ch. 30; 83 L. T. 479.

16. Payment by instalments—Repudiation of contract—Damages.—The plaintiff was the purchaser and the defendant the vendor, under a written agreement, of certain land for £150, payable by quarterly instalments of £9 4s. 3d. The plaintiff paid all the instalments except the last, but made default in paying this, and left the neighbourhood. The defendant then took possession of the land and let it to a tenant. More than two years after the last instalment had become due, the plaintiff wrote to the defendant that he was prepared to make the final instalment and settlement of the ground purchased.

Held, that, though the plaintiff could not, by reason of his delay, obtain specific performance, his conduct did not amount to an abandonment or repudiation on his part; and that the defendant, having dealt with the property in a way he was not entitled to, was liable in damages.

Decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (48 W. R. 42), reversed.—CORNWALL v. HENSON, C.A., 42; [1900] 2 Ch. 298; 69 L. J. Ch. 581; 82 L. T. 735.

17. Requisition of title—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 70—Sale by order of court—Conditions of sale—Abstract of title.—By order of the court certain landed property was put up for sale. In the contract for its sale a clause was inserted that "all facts or matters appearing to be proved or to be certified by a chief clerk or master attached to the chambers of the said judge, or to be stated or implied in any judgment or order in the action in which this sale is made, are to be deemed thereby sufficiently and conclusively evidenced." The master certified that the property to be sold formed part of the estate of one Joseph Whitham, deceased, from whom the title was derived.

Held, that, having regard to section 70 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and to the terms of the contract, a good title has been shown.—WHITHAM, RE, WHITHAM v. DAVIES, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 597; 84 L. T. 585.

18. Reversionary interest—Sale—Expectant heir—Reversioner of full age—Under value—Unfair dealing—Unconscionable bargain—Sale of Reversions Act, 1867 (31 Vict. c. 4), s. 1.—The plaintiff, who was thirty years of age, being entitled to a reversion expectant on the death of his mother, who was seventy-two years of age, executed a deed by which he sold £1,000 of his reversionary interest to the defendant for £300. On the execution of the deed the defendant gave the plaintiff a letter by which he agreed to resell the £1,000 to the plaintiff within two months on payment to the defendant of £600.

The plaintiff had no independent advice in the matter, but wrote a letter to the defendant prior to the sale showing he understood the nature of the bargain into which he was about to enter.

There was evidence that the value of the reversion of £1,000 in the market was over £600; and it also appeared that the defendant dictated a letter for the plaintiff to send to the solicitors of the trustees of the fund making inquiries as to it, which did not say he wanted the information for the purpose of borrowing money, but gave another reason.

Held, that the purchase was not only made at an undervalue, but there had been unfair dealing on the part of the defendant, and therefore the transaction must be set aside on payment by the plaintiff of £300 and interest at 5 per cent.—BRENCHLEY v. HIGGINS, C.A.; 83 L. T. 751.

19. Sale of land—Warranty—Particulars of sale—Conveyance.—Where land is sold by auction with a warranty that it answers a certain description and a conveyance is afterwards executed which contains no covenant corresponding to the warranty, no action can be brought upon the warranty.—GRESWOLDE-WILLIAMS v. BARNEBY, Q.B.D., 203; 83 L. T. 708.

20. Trustee—Purchase by a trustee of settled estate—Specific performance—Charge on trust estate—Vendor's lien—Trustee's right to indemnity—Subrogation.—A vendor was entitled to a lien on land purchased by the trustee of settled estates. The purchase, under the circumstances, was invalid as against the persons having an interest under the settlement.

Held, that, as the trustee had no right to an indemnity against the settled estates, the vendor could have no right of subrogation, but only a lien for unpaid purchase-money.

Decision of Byrne, J. ([1899] 2 Ch. 729. 48 W. R. Dig. 198), affirmed.—ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSIONERS v. PINNEY, C.A., 82; [1900] 2 Ch. 736; 69 L. J. Ch. 844; 83 L. T. 384.

21. Trustee—Specific performance—Trustee purchasing from cestui que trusts—Onus on trustee—Taking over contract.—Where a trustee for sale seeks to justify a sale as a purchase by him from his cestui que trusts, the burden of proof that the transaction was a proper one rests upon the trustee, and he is bound to produce clear affirmative proof that the parties were at arm's length, that the cestui que trusts had the fullest information upon all material facts, and that, having this information, they agreed to and adopted what was done. It ought not to be assumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the transaction was a proper one, and that the cestui que trusts were informed of all necessary matters.

A title to property depending on such a sale will not be forced on a purchaser.—WILLIAMS v. SCOTT, P.C., 33; [1900] A. C. 499; 69 L. J. P. C. 77; 82 L. T. 727.

22. Vendor's lien—Conversion of purchased property—Lunatic not so found—Receivership order—Priorities—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 Vict. c. 5), s. 116.—A vendor is not deprived of any lien which he may have for unpaid purchase-money by the fact that the property sold is subject to a trust for sale which has become operative before the property is made over to the purchaser.

An ex parte order under section 116 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, directing a person, in the name and on behalf of a lunatic not so found, to receive and give a discharge for the property of a lunatic does not affect any rights which a third party may have in respect of such property.

In re Winkle, 42 W. R. 513, [1894] 2 Ch. 519, distinguished.—DAVIES v. THOMAS, C.A., 68; [1900] 2 Ch. 462; 69 L. J. Ch. 643.

See also Bankruptcy, 33.

VICTORIA, LAW of:—

1. Inland revenue—Duty on sugar—"Molasses refined in bond"—Customs Act, 1890.—Molasses which have undergone a mechanical process to remove material impurities, without producing any chemical change, are not "refined" molasses within the meaning of the Victorian Customs Act, 1890 (No. 1081).—COLONIAL SUGAR REFINING CO. v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR VICTORIA, P.C.; 84 L. T. 787.

2. Inland revenue—Income tax—Company—Investments by company in the colony—Taxable income—Victorian Income Tax Act, 1895, ss. 5, 10.—Section 10 of the Victorian Income Tax Act, 1895, provides a special mode of computing taxable income in favour of those companies which, not having their principal office or place of business in Victoria, nevertheless have part of their "receipts or assets and liabilities" within the colony.

Held, that by the true construction of that section, the appellant company, in order to have the benefit thereof, must show that it carries on part of its trade in the colony; the above expression representing the component parts of a trading company's balance-sheet;

Held, further, that the appellant being a mutual insurance company which did not insure or otherwise trade in the colony, but only invested certain funds there, was not within the section. Its income derived from its Victorian investments was taxable income under section 5 in the mode applicable to taxpayers generally.—SCOTTISH PROVIDENT INSTITUTION v. COMMISSIONER OF TAXES, P.C.; [1901] A. C. 310; 70 L. J. P. C. 50; 84 L. T. 241.

3. Vermin Destruction Act, 1890 (54 Vict. No. 1153)—Local Government Act, 1890 (54 Vict. No. 1112), s. 428—Vermin-proof swing gates—Law of Victoria.—Under the provisions of the Victoria Vermin Destruction Act, 1890, vermin-proof swing gates can be lawfully put across roads other than main roads by owners of lands, whether adjoining owners or single owners, with the consent of the shire council, whether such lands are in special areas as defined by the Act or not.

Section 428 of the Local Government Act, 1890, does not, having regard to the exception therein contained, interfere with landowners' rights in this respect.—KING v. CHEYNE, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 622; 69 L. J. P. C. 136.

WATER:—

Supply for certain purposes—Use for other purposes—Agreement between water company and district council—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), s. 18.—By an agreement made between the T. District Council and the W. G. Water Co., the company covenanted to supply water sufficient for purposes of domestic use and the washing of carts, as well as in the case of fire, but not for street watering or sewer flushing purposes.

The respondents were ratepayers of T., and used the water for trade purposes.

Held, that they had been guilty of an offence within section 18 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863.—ANDREWS v. WITTS, K.B.D.; 84 L. T. 124.

WAY—See Easement, 3-5; Local Government, 19.

WEIGHTS and MEASURES:—

Inspector—Resolution by local authority to forego stamping and verification fees—Surcharge by auditor of such fees to inspector—Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 47—Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 13.—A local authority has no power, under section 13 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1899—which section repealed section 47 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878—to order an inspector not to collect the fees specified in the first schedule "for the verification and stamping of weights, measures, and weighing instruments by inspectors of local authorities."—REX v. ROBERTS, KYLE, EX PARTE, K.B.D., 488; [1901] 2 K. B. 117; 70 L. J. K. B. 590; 84 L. T. 530.

WESTERN AUSTRALIA, LAW of:—

Lease, Forfeiture of—Notice of forfeiture to lessee—Law of Western Australia—Goldfields Act, 1886—Regulations of 1892, clauses 69, 70.—The decision of the Governor in Council, under clauses 69 and 70 of the Regulations of 1892, to forfeit a lease granted under the Goldfields Act of 1886, must be unequivocally expressed by some overt act.

Held, that its transmission to the Warden's office was not such an act, and that the decision did not take effect till the day on which it was notified to the lessee.

The seven days' preferent right granted to the applicant for forfeiture by clause 69 to apply for a lease of part of the forfeited land runs from the date of notification: if exercised before that date, the application is invalid and of no effect.

After the expiry of the seven days the respondents applied for a lease of the same land, which had been included in an invalid previous application; the Governor gazetted his approval thereof, and subsequently cancelled the same on the ground of mistake.

Held, that the cancellation was ultra vires, and that the Governor was liable in damages to the respondents on their petition of right.—MINISTER OF MINES v. HARNEY, P.C.; [1901] A. C. 347; 70 L. J. P. C. 33; 84 L. T. 369.

WILL:—

1. Accumulations—Leaseholds—Insurance—Accumulations Act, 1800 (Thellusson Act) (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98).—A direction in a will to apply a yearly sum out of the rents of leaseholds, held for a term of more than twenty-one years from the testator's death, in effecting and keeping on foot a policy of insurance to secure the replacement at the end of the term of the capital that would be lost through not selling the leaseholds, is not a direction to accumulate and does not fall within the Thellusson Act.—GARDINER, RE, GARDINER v. SMITH, Ch.D. Buckley, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 697; 70 L. J. Ch. 407.

2. Accumulations of rents and income—Investment in purchase of real estate—Purchase of land—Accumulations Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 58)—Interpretation Act (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 3.—A direction to accumulate and invest the rents and annual income of property to be employed in the purchase of real estate is bad under the Accumulations Act, 1892.

In re Danson, Bell v. Danson, (1895) W. N. 102, discussed. — CLUTTERBUCK, RE, FELLOWS v. FELLOWS, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 583; [1901] 2 Ch. 285; 70 L. J. Ch. 614; 84 L. T. 757.

3. Accumulations of surplus income—Trust void for perpetuity—Investment of accumulations—Income of investments—Persons entitled—Thellusson Act (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98)—A testator, in 1865, left real property to his trustees upon trust in their absolute discretion to apply the whole or part of the income arising therefrom for the benefit of his daughter F. during her life, and after her decease to hold the property, with any surplus or accumulation of unapplied income, upon trusts for her children, and in default upon the trusts declared as to the residue of his whole estate which were for the benefit of his three daughters in equal shares for the life of each, and then for their children, with remainders over.

His daughter F. was of weak intellect, and from 1865 till her death in 1900 was maintained by the trustees, who now had a fund of £2,700, representing surplus accumulations of the income for her maintenance. Upon a summons to determine who were entitled to the fund,

Held, (1) that the trust for accumulations was void after the expiration of twenty-one years from the death of the testator, so that the surplus rents and profits from 1886 formed part of the capital and residue; (2) that such surplus was not to be treated as income, and to go to the tenants for life of the residuary estate, but was to fall into the corpus of the residuary estate.

In re Phillips, Phillips v. Levy, 28 W. R. 340, 49 L. J. Ch. 198, disapproved; Crawley v. Crawley, 7 Sim. 427, and O'Neill v. Lucas, 2 Keen, 313, followed.—POPE, RE, SHARP v. MARSHALL, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 122; [1901] 1 Ch. 64; 70 L. J. Ch. 26.

4. Accumulation beyond the period allowed by the Thellusson Act (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98)—Intestacy as to surplus income after expiration of permitted period—"Trust estate" and "income of trust estate."—A testator, after directing the payment of a certain annuity to A., directed that the surplus "income" of his "trust estate" should accumulate till the annuitant's death, and that his "trust estate" was then "to be held upon trust" for such children of A., living at his decease or born afterwards, as should attain the age of twenty-one years, or should die under that age leaving issue, and, in case there should be no such children, then to certain other beneficiaries.

Held, that, having reference to the nature of the ultimate limitation to the children of A., or the other beneficiaries, there was an intestacy as to the income of the trust estate between the expiration of the period of twenty-one years from the testator's death allowed for accumulation by the Thellusson Act and the death of the annuitant.

Weatherall v. Thornburgh, 26 W. R. 593, 8 Ch. D. 261, followed.

Harbin v. Masterman, [1894] 2 Ch. 184 (Wharton v. Masterman, 43 W. R. 449, [1895] A. C. 186), distinguished.

Held, also, that, on the true construction of the will, the testator intended to give the accumulated "income" of the "trust estate" for the period permitted by the Thellusson Act, as well as the corpus of the "trust estate" itself, to the persons ultimately entitled to the corpus.—TRAVIS, RE, FROST v. GREATOREX, C.A., 38; [1900] 2 Ch. 541; 69 L. J. Ch. 663; 83 L. T. 241.

5. Ademption—Satisfaction—Gift by will to testator's daughter—Direction to settle part of legacy—Subsequent settlement of different amount by testator on daughter—Different limitations—Ademption of settled portion of legacy.—Testator by his will and a codicil thereto dated in 1885 gave to each of his daughters on attaining twenty-five the sum of £20,000, and directed that £15,000 part thereof should be settled upon certain trusts declared by his will for the benefit of his daughters and their children. One of the testator's daughters, S., was married in his lifetime, and on the occasion of her marriage the testator settled upon her a sum of £7,300 2¾ per cent. Consols upon trusts differing from those declared by his will.

The testator died in 1900. The question now arose, it being admitted that the settlement of the £7,300 Consols upon S. must be taken as an ademption or satisfaction of the provision made for her by the will and codicil, whether such ademption was to apply to the £15,000, directed to be settled by the will, or pro tanto to the £5,000 given to S. absolutely, or to both rateably.

Held, that the £7,300 Consols was to be taken as an ademption pro tanto of the £15,000 settled by the will and codicil.—FURNESS, RE, FURNESS v. STALKARTT, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; [1901] 2 Ch. 346; 70 L. J. Ch. 580; 84 L. T. 680.

6. Annuity to wife "so long as she remains unmarried"—Sum not exhausted—Death of wife unmarried—Duration.—Where a testator desired his executor to set aside £200 and thereout pay the testator's wife the sum of £3 monthly so long as she remained unmarried or until the sum of £200 became exhausted, the payment to cease on her marrying again, and where the wife died without remarrying before the sum was exhausted,

Held, that her executrix was entitled to the balance.

Rishton v. Cobb, 5 My. & Cr. 145, at p. 152, followed.—HOWARD, RE, TAYLOR v. HOWARD, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 480; [1901] 1 Ch. 412; 70 L. J. 317; 84 L. T. 296.

7. Construction—Absolute gift or estate for life with power of appointment.—Testator by his will, dated in 1894, devised certain real estate to his two sons in strict settlement, and also gave them certain personal estate. He gave the residue of his real and personal estate to his wife absolutely, and appointed her executrix during her life and his sons executors on her death. By a codicil, dated in 1898, he revoked his will and gave all his property to his wife, "so that she may have full possession of it and entire power and control over it, to deal with it or act with regard to it as she may think proper." In the event, however, of her not surviving him, or dying "without having devised or appointed" the whole or any part of his said property, then he declared that his said will should take effect as if his codicil had not been made; and he appointed his wife executrix of his codicil during her life.

Held, that the wife took an estate for life only with a general power of appointment.—SANFORD, RE, SANFORD v. SANFORD, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 939; 70 L. J. Ch. 591; 84 L. T. 456.

8. Construction—Ambiguity—Admissibility of evidence—Selection by legatee.—A testatrix bequeathed "140 of my shares" in a brewery company to a legatee. At the date of her will and death the testatrix had 280 of such shares, of which forty were fully paid up and the rest partly paid. The legatee claimed the right to select and to take the forty fully paid-up shares as part of the bequest. Extrinsic evidence was tendered to show that the testatrix intended the bequest to be satisfied out of the partly-paid shares.

Held, that the extrinsic evidence of the intention of the testatrix was not admissible; but that the will itself manifested an intention that the bequest was to come out of the partly-paid shares, and therefore that the legatee had no right of selection.

Tapley v. Eagleton, 28 W. R. 239, 12 Ch. D. 683, distinguished.

Asten v. Asten, [1894] 3 Ch. 260, 43 W. R. Dig. 198, followed.—CHEADLE, RE, BISHOP v. HOLT, C.A., 88; [1900] 2 Ch. 620; 69 L. J. Ch. 753; 83 L. T. 297.

9. Construction—Annuity to maintain infants—Want of a trustee.—A testator by his will directed his trustees to pay to his widow during her widowhood an annuity until his daughter should attain twenty-one, to be applied by the widow in and about the maintenance and education of the said daughter. The widow died, leaving the daughter still an infant.

Held, that the widow was a trustee for the infant in respect of the annuity, and that the annuity continued to be payable notwithstanding that the widow had died.—YATES, RE, YATES v. WYATT, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 646.

10. Construction—Children—Gift to "A. and the children of B."—Death of A. in testator's lifetime—Intention of testator.—A testator appointed "his wife and his niece A." executrixes, and gave them property in trust for his wife (who survived him) for life, and after her death for "A. and the children of his sister B. who should attain the age of twenty-one years equally to be divided among them as tenants in common." At the date of the will A. was nearly twenty-one; she died in the testator's lifetime. At the death of the tenant for life B.'s children had attained twenty-one.

Held, that the bequest to A. did not lapse, since upon the true construction of this particular will the testator's intention appeared to be to make one class of nephews and nieces, so that if any of them died in his lifetime the survivors should take.

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1899] 2 Ch. 314) affirmed.—KINGSBURY v. WALTER, H.L.; [1901] A. C. 187; 70 L. J. Ch. 546; 84 L. T. 697.

11. Construction—Children—Illegitimate children—Mistake—Number of legatees—Illegitimate children—Presumption—Evidence of intention.—Bequest to the three children of A. born prior to her marriage. A. had in fact four such children in existence at the date of the will. The testator had acknowledged the paternity of the three younger children, but he was not the father of the eldest child.

Held, that, in the absence of proof that the testator was aware of the eldest child's existence, the onus of which proof lay on that child, there was no presumption that he intended to include her in the gift.

Semble, if the testator had been aware of the actual number of children, direct evidence of his intention to benefit three particular children would have been inadmissible.—MAYO, RE, CHESTER v. KEIRL, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 404; 70 L. J. Ch. 261; 84 L. T. 117.

12. Construction—Children—Illegitimate children—Repute—Child born after the date of the will, but before the death of testator.—Following Holt v. Sindrey, 17 W. R. 249, L. R. 7 Eq. 170, and Hill v. Crook, 22 W. R. 137, L. R. 6 H. L. 265, illegitimate children born before the date of a will, who have acquired the repute of being the children of a certain man, may take a bequest given to them as children of that man, notwithstanding that they take as members of a class with the legitimate children of other persons. A child, however, born after the date of the will, but before the death of the testator or testatrix, is not entitled to take, although he or she may have acquired such repute before the death of the testator or testatrix.

Occleston v. Fullalove, 22 W. R. 305, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 147, distinguished.

In re Bolton, Brown v. Bolton, 34 W. R. 325, 31 Ch. D. 542, followed.—DU BOCHET, RE, MANSEL v. ALLEN, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 588; 70 L. J. Ch. 647; 84 L. T. 710.

13. Construction — Children or their "natural representatives" if dead—Widow of child excluded.—A testator gave all his property after certain life interests upon trust for all and every his children, whether sons or daughters, who should then be living or their "natural representatives" if dead according to the statute rule of distribution. He left seven children, one of whom (a son) died before the property became divisible, leaving a widow (his second wife) and children by his first wife.

Held, that as the widow's position was a contractual one, and that of the children, owing to nature, one by affinity of blood, the testator intended such persons as by nature represented the children, and excluded contractual relations. The widow was therefore held not entitled to share with the children.—WILSON v. BROMLEY, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 83 L. T. 315.

14. Construction—Devise of term to persons in succession—Remainder to "the heirs and assigns of the survivor."—A testator by his will devised certain lands to certain persons in succession for the term of ninety-nine years if they should so long live, and from and after the determination of the last of the said terms or the death of the survivor, "to the heirs and assigns of the survivor of them for ever."

Held, upon the construction of the will as a whole, that the limitation to the heirs and assigns of the survivor should be read as one to the heirs of the survivor and their assigns, and not to the heirs or appointees of the survivor; and that, therefore, the heir of the survivor was entitled to the land as against a person who had purchased the land in fee simple from the survivor in his lifetime.—MILMAN v. LANE, C.A., 545; 70 L. J. K. B. 731.

15. Construction—"Eldest son" entitled to possession.—A will limited successive estates to the sons of A. other than and except an eldest or only son for the time being entitled to the possession or receipt of the rents and profits of the C. estate. A son became entitled as tenant in tail in remainder of the C. estate, and, before becoming entitled to possession, joined with his father, the tenant for life, in a sale, from which he derived a benefit.

Held, that the words of the exception must bear their natural meaning, and that the son, not coming within those words, was not excluded from taking under the will.

Decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. ([1900] 1 Ch. 795, 48 W. R. Dig. 205), reversed.—SHUTTLEWORTH v. MURRAY, C.A., 388; [1901] 1 Ch. 819; 70 L. J. Ch. 453; 84 L. T. 605.

16. Construction—Estate in special tail—Issue—Male descendants—Gift to A. if he marries a gentlewoman and has issue male, to such issue male and their male descendants.—"Issue" is primâ facie a word of limitation equivalent to heirs of the body, and not a word of purchase in limitations of real estate.

The effect of limitations of real estate to A. if he marries a fit and worthy gentlewoman, and has issue male, to such issue male and their male descendants, in failure of which then over, is to give A. an estate in special tail male.

Page v. Hayward, 2 Salk. 570, applied.—PELHAM CLINTON v. NEWCASTLE (DUKE), Ch.D. Buckley, J., 12; 69 L. J. Ch. 875; 83 L. T. 627.

17. Construction—Life interest—Gift over—"Survivors"—Intestacy.—A testator settled shares in his business upon his three sons A., B., and C. respectively for life with remainder to their children who should attain twenty-one or marry, and in case either of the said sons should die and "no child or other issue of such of them so dying shall acquire a vested interest in the shares hereby settled upon them respectively under the trusts or powers aforesaid," then the share of such son or sons "shall be held for the benefit of the survivor or survivors of them, my said sons."

A. and B. died before C. They left issue. C. died leaving no issue.

Held, that there was an intestacy as to C.'s share.

The third rule in In re Bowman, 37 W. R. 583, dissented from.

Hodge v. Foot, 34 Beav. 349; In re Arnold's Trusts, 18 W. R. 912; and In re Walker, 28 W. R. 91, considered.—HARRISON v. HARRISON, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 613; [1901] 2 Ch. 136; 70 L. J. Ch. 551.

18. Construction—Piece of land purchased as part of one property, occupied by testator as part of adjoining property—Will speaking from death of testator.—A testator who had purchased two adjoining freehold houses, known as Broad Green Lodge and The Cedars respectively, each having a garden and piece of meadow land in the rear, and had occupied until his death Broad Green Lodge with the garden and meadow land at the rear and also the piece of meadow land at the rear of The Cedars, and had let The Cedars with its garden, but without the piece of meadow land at the rear, to a tenant for twenty-one years, by his will made prior to the lease by him of The Cedars devised (inter alia) his two freehold houses to trustees upon trust as to his "residence known as Broad Green Lodge" for the residence of his wife for life, and at her death for sale, with a direction that the proceeds should form part of his residuary estate, which he divided amongst his children. And after the death of his wife, the testator gave to one of his daughters the income to arise from his "freehold property known as The Cedars."

Upon a summons taken out by the trustees of the will for the determination of the question whether the piece of meadow land at the rear of The Cedars was, upon the true construction of the will, included in the gift of the income of The Cedars in favour of the daughter, or whether such piece of meadow land became, upon the death of the testator's widow, subject to the trusts declared as to Broad Green Lodge, Held, that the will, as to the property comprised in it, must speak from the date of the testator's death, at which time the piece of meadow land was occupied by him as part of the Broad Green Lodge property, and that the gift of the income of his freehold property known as The Cedars comprised the premises let by him as The Cedars, but not the piece of meadow land at the rear, which formed part of the testator's residuary estate.—STEVENS v. POTTER, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; 83 L. T. 405.

19. Construction—Secret trust.—A testator built a museum and laid out pleasure grounds on parts of his estate, to which he admitted the public free, reserving his private rights. By a codicil to his will he gave the museum and grounds, with £300 per annum for their maintenance, to his son and his heirs male, and also appointed two trustees for the purposes only of the museum and grounds. Evidence showed that the testator intended his son to maintain the grounds and museum as in his lifetime, but that he wished the public to acquire no rights therein, and that the son accepted the gifts on those terms.

Held, that the son took the gifts subject to a secret trust to maintain and use the museum and grounds as in the testator's lifetime, to be enforced for the benefit of the public; and that the two trustees took no estate and had no duties to perform.—PITT-RIVERS, RE, SCOTT v. PITT-RIVERS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 425; [1901] 1 Ch. 352; 70 L. J. Ch. 257; 84 L. T. 110.

20. Construction — Specific legacy — Charge of legacies — Undisposed of residue — Exoneration.—Where a testator has bequeathed a specific fund charged with pecuniary legacies, and has made no general residuary bequest, the legatee of the residue of the specific fund is not entitled to have the undisposed of general residuary estate resorted to for payment of the said pecuniary legacies, which, in the circumstances, must be treated as specific legacies.—GRAINGER, RE, DAWSON v. HIGGINS, C.A., 197; [1900] 2 Ch. 756; 83 L. T. 209.

21. Construction — "Surviving" — Surviving in person or by stock.—A testatrix by her will gave one-third of the income of a money fund to her daughter A. for life, and after her death one-third of the capital to the children of A. whom she might leave her surviving, and who had attained or should attain twenty-one, with similar gifts to her two other daughters, B. and C., and their children; and, in case any or either of the said daughters, A., B., or C., died without leaving such issue, the share of the income given to the daughter so dying was to go to the surviving daughters, and the capital to their children in like manner as the original gift, with an ultimate gift over. All three daughters survived the testatrix. A. died in the lifetime of B. and C., leaving two children who attained twenty-one, but predeceased C. B. died in the lifetime of C., leaving two children, who attained twenty-one and survived C. C. died leaving no children her surviving, but having had one daughter who attained twenty-one.

Held that, on the death of C., the one-third of which she received the income during her life passed to the children of B.

O'Brien v. O'Brien, [1896] 2 Ir. R. 459, not followed.—BILHAM, RE, BUCHANAN v. HILL, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 483; [1901] 2 Ch. 169; 70 L. J. Ch. 518; 84 L. T. 499.

22. Construction—Things quæ ipso usu consumuntur —Farming stock—Gift for life.—Farming stock and implements of husbandry are not things quæ ipso usu consumuntur, and a bequest of them for life does not confer upon the legatee an absolute interest in them, even though the legatee takes no interest under the will in the farm itself in connection with which they were used.—MYERS v. WASHBROOK, Q.B.D.; [1901] 1 Q. B. 360; 70 L. J. Q. B. 357; 83 L. T. 633.

23. Contingency—"Die leaving issue"—Divesting —Period of defeasibility—Gift over on death coupled with a contingency.—Testator gave his residuary estate upon trust for his widow for life or widowhood, and after her decease or second marriage to apply the income in the maintenance and education of his children until the youngest who should be living, being a son, should attain the age of twenty-one years, or being a daughter, should attain that age or marry. Subject thereto the testator directed that the trust fund and the income thereof, and any accumulations which should not have become vested or applied pursuant to his will, should be held in trust for all his children who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry, to whom he gave and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate in equal shares; and the testator directed that if any of his children should die leaving issue, such issue should take his or her deceased parent's share equally as tenants in common.

At the date of his will the testator had three children, all of whom were now living.

Held, that there was nothing in the will to limit the contingency—namely, death leaving issue—to less than the whole life of the first taker, whether son or daughter; and that the divesting clause or gift over might operate not only during the lifetime of the widow, but also after her death. Consequently that children who survived the testator would only attain vested indefeasible interests if and when they should die without leaving issue.—SCHNADHORST, RE, SANDKUHL v. SCHNADHORST, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; [1901] 2 Ch. 338; 70 L. J. Ch. 583; 84 L. T. 587.

24. Devise—Divesting—Alternative devise—"Such as should be living at widow's death and attain twenty-one"—Appeal from New South Wales.—Where there is a devise to five persons nominatim, or to such of them as should be living at the death of the testator's widow and attain twenty-one,

Held, that all the devisees take vested interests in fee subject to be divested as regards each devisee dying in the lifetime of the widow in favour of those (if any) who survive her and attain twenty-one.

But where later clauses gave to each devisee a specifically described portion of the land devised for life in the event of all the devisees surviving the widow, and declared that "in case of the death of any of the before-mentioned persons he gave and devised the share to which he would have been entitled" to his heir,

Held, that the effect of this declaration was to alter the original devise, and to give the share of a devisee dying in the widow's lifetime to his heir, and not to the surviving devisees.—PENNY v. COMMISSIONER FOR RAILWAYS, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 628; 69 L. J. P. C. 113; 83 L. T. 182.

25. Devise of freeholds upon trust to one for life

subject to condition of residence—Trust upon breach of condition to sell and pay one-third only of income to devisee for life—Settled Land Act (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 51—Gifts of legacies to males and females——Direction to pay legacies, devises, and bequests in favour of females free of legacy duty—Gift of residue to males and females as tenants in common.—S. D. by her will devised certain freeholds to trustees upon trust for T. S. for life, subject to a condition of residence, and in case T. S. should cease to reside there, then on trust to sell and invest the proceeds and pay one-third of the income thereof to T. S. for life, and the remaining two-thirds to other persons therein mentioned.

Held, that the provision was such as to induce the tenant for life to abstain from exercising his power under the Settled Land Act, 1882, within the meaning of section 51, and was void.

After giving certain legacies to males and females the testatrix declared that all legacies, devises, and bequests thereinbefore or thereinafter given or made in favour of females should be free of legacy duty, the residue being given to three males and three females as tenants in common.

Held, that the legacy duty in respect of the shares of the females in the residue were to be paid out of their respective shares.—DALRYMPLE, RE, BIRCHAM v. SPRINGFIELD, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 627.

26. Forfeiture — Trustee — Garnishee order.—A testatrix devised and bequeathed her real and personal estate to trustees for sale and conversion, and then upon trust to pay the annual income to her son during his life or "until he does or attempts to do or suffer any other act or thing, or until any other event happens whereby, if the same income were payable to him absolutely for his life, he would be deprived of the right to receive the same or any part thereof," in any of which cases it was given over.

A creditor obtained an order garnishing the income accrued due and in the hands of the trustees.

Held, that a garnishee order could not be obtained unless a debt was actually due from the trustee to the beneficiary, and that the garnishee order did not create a forfeiture.

Sampson v. Sampson, 44 W. R. 557, [1896] 1 Ch. 630, followed.

Bates v. Bates, (1884) W. N. 129, not followed.—GREENWOOD, RE, SUTCLIFFE v. GLEDHILL, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 461; [1901] 1 Ch. 887; 70 L. J. Ch. 326; 84 L. T. 118.

27. Forfeiture clause—Gift of life interest to K. subject to forfeiture if she "shall in any way associate, correspond, or visit with any of my present wife's nephews or nieces"—Condition void for uncertainty.—A testator by his will gave his residuary estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income to K. for life, and after her death to divide the corpus among her children. By a codicil he declared that if she "shall in any way associate, correspond, or visit with any of my present wife's nephews or nieces," &c., then the life interest was to be forfeited and a gift over was to take effect.

On an originating summons taken out to ascertain the effect of the codicil upon the original gift.

Held, that the condition was void for uncertainty.—JEFFREYS v. JEFFREYS, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 84 L. T. 417.

28. Intestacy — Settlement — Trustee — Crown — Escheat—Bona vacantia—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 2, 22 (5).—A testator gave a life interest in all his property, which included freeholds, to his wife. The will contained no gift over or residuary devise or bequest. The trustees of the will were appointed by the court trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act.

The tenant for life subsequently sold some of the freehold property, and at her death money resulting from the proceeds of sale remained in the hands of the trustees. On the death of the tenant for life it was duly found that the testator had no heir-at-law or next-of-kin.

On the trustees claiming a beneficial interest in the moneys arising from the proceeds of sale,

Held, that such moneys belonged to the Crown as bona vacantia.—BOND, RE, PANES v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 126; [1901] 1 Ch. 15; 70 L. J. Ch. 12.

29. Joint tenancy—Ultimate limitation to "right heirs" of testator—Joint tenants—Coparceners—Inheritance Act, 1833.—A testator by his will devised real property upon certain trusts, with an ultimate limitation in trust for his "own right heirs for ever." He died in 1847, leaving as his right heirs two daughters, M. P. and A. G., of whom A. G. was the survivor. All the prior limitations being exhausted, the heir-at-law of A. G. claimed the property, on the ground that by virtue of section 3 of the Inheritance Act, 1833, the two daughters took by the devise as joint tenants, and not by descent as coparceners. The representatives of M. P. claimed a moiety of the property, contending that section 3 was not applicable to this case, where the effect of the last limitation was equivalent to a declaration of intestacy, and that consequently the daughters took by descent as coparceners.

Held, that the Act applies to the case of right heirs if the effect of the gift is to give the heir in fact an estate. In this case the daughters took by the devise, and, it being impossible for coparcenary to be created by purchase, they took as joint tenants.—OWEN v. GIBBONS, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 84 L. T. 381.

30. Legacy—Interest—Gift by appointment under a power.—A testatrix, having under her marriage settlement a general power of appointment over a sum of £5,000 and certain funds comprised in the first schedule thereto, appointed that the trustees should stand possessed of the sum of £5,000, and "of such portion of the stocks and securities comprised in the first schedule of the said indenture as shall, with the sum of £5,000 or the securities representing the same, make up the sum of £9,000" in favour of certain appointees.

Held, that the appointment was a specific gift of a portion of the stocks and securities, and that the appointees were entitled to the interest on the whole £9,000 from the death of the testatrix.—MARTEN, RE, SHAW v. MARTEN, Ch.D. Byrne, J.; [1901] 1 Ch. 370; 70 L. J. Ch. 354.

31. Longest period allowed by law—Lives of all persons living at date of testator's death—Uncertainty —Perpetuity.—A trust to endure until the period of twenty-one years from the death of the survivor of all persons living at the death of the settlor is void, on account of the uncertainty of its duration.—MOORE, RE, PRIOR v. MOORE, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 484; [1901] 1 Ch. D. 936; 70 L. J. Ch. 358; 84 L. T. 501.

32. Lost will—Evidence—Presumption that it was destroyed by testator—Presumption against fraudulent abstraction—Appeal from New Zealand.—Where a will duly executed, traced to the testator's possession and last seen there, is not forthcoming on his death, the presumption is that it was destroyed by himself. To rebut it there must be sufficient evidence that it was not destroyed by the testator animo revocandi; and

Held in this case that concurrent findings that it had not been rebutted could not be disturbed. This is a presumption against its fraudulent abstraction either before or after his death, but the circumstances which render such abstraction possible must be taken into account in arriving at the result of the evidence.—ALLAN v. MORRISON, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 604; 69 L. J. P. C. 141.

33. Partnership—Bequest to partner of "all my share and interest in the business"—Whether undrawn capital and profits included.—Testator carried on the business of a solicitor with C. under partnership articles, C. being the active partner. The capital was a fixed sum, the profits to be divided equally after C. had taken £400 a year. Accounts were submitted annually to the partners, but were not signed by them. In these circumstances the testator made his will whereby he gave to C. all his share and interest in the business conditional on his acting as solicitor to his estate free of charge. At his death moneys were standing to the credit of the testator's capital account, and there were undrawn profits.

Held, that as goodwill had been held in such a business to be practically non-existent (Arundell v. Bell, 49 L. T. Rep. 345), to include that only would be to give no effect to the gift, and that accordingly, having regard to the facts known to the testator, his intention was that the gift should pass both the share of capital and the undrawn profits.—BARFIELD, RE, GOODMAN v. CHILD, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 84 L. T. 28.

34. Power—Codicil—Intention to vary—Trusts declared afresh—No reference to power—Revocation.—By his will dated the 6th of February, 1892, the testator declared (inter alia) that, as to one-eighth share of his residuary estate, it should be held by his executors on certain trusts. These trusts provided that the income of the said share should be paid to the testator's son, T. W., until "he should become bankrupt or do or suffer something whereby the said income if belonging absolutely to him or some part thereof would become payable to or vested in some other person"; and, on determination in the lifetime of T. W. of the above trust, that the income should be applied during the remainder of T. W.'s life in favour of certain other specified persons; and after the decease of T. W., that the share should be divided among his children; "provided always that the said T. W. might by deed or will appoint that the whole or any part of the income of the said share should after his death be paid to his widow (if any) during her life or for any less period."

T. W. became bankrupt early in 1893.

By a codicil dated the 27th of July, 1893, the testator declared his intention to vary the trusts of the share of T. W., and in pursuance thereof declared that such share should be held by his trustees upon the trusts thereafter recited. The trusts so recited made provision in the event of T. W. being prevented by reason of antecedent bankruptcy or by the happening of any other event from enjoying the life interest if it were given to him. In other respects, the trusts so cited followed the trusts in the will, except that no mention whatever was made of the power given by the will to T. W. to appoint to his widow.

The trusts in the will were not expressly revoked by the codicil.

Held, that the power of appointment still subsisted.—WOOD v. WOOD, Ch.D. Farwell, J. L. T. 157.

35. Residue—Contingent bequest—Disposition of income of funds—Accumulation.—A testator bequeathed the residue of his estate on the failure of certain events to the children of his sister when they should attain twenty-one, and failing issue of his sister then over. His sister had no children living.

Held, that the income of the residuary funds ought to be accumulated for the benefit of the persons who should ultimately be entitled up to the lawful period of twenty-one years, or till the gift over took effect.

Green v. Tribe, 27 W. R. 39, discussed.—TAYLOR, RE, SMART v. TAYLOR, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J., 615; [1901] 2 Ch. 134; 70 L. J. Ch. 535; 84 L. T. 758.

36. Residue—Gift over of residue as a whole—Sum set apart—"Survivor"—Devolution on next-of-kin.—A sum directed to be set apart out of residue will, where the testator has shown an intention that the residue should go over as a whole, and on the failure of the trusts affecting it, fall back into and go with the remainder of the residue, and will not devolve upon the next-of-kin of the testator as upon an intestacy.

Skrymsher v. Northcote, 1 Swanst. 566, 1 Wils. Ch. 248, discussed.—PARKER, RE, STEPHENSON v. PARKER, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 215; [1901] 1 Ch. 408; 70 L. J. Ch. 170; 84 L. T. 116.

37. Residue—Settlement of shares in residue—Legatee of life interest predeceasing testator—No lapse.—Testator gave his residuary estate to trustees upon trust for his three daughters in equal shares; but he directed the trustees to retain the share of each daughter and to pay her the income thereof for life, then to her husband for life, with remainder, as to the capital, on trust for her children in the usual way, and in default of children attaining a vested interest, on trust for the other daughters of testator in equal shares, but so that the share so accruing should be subject to the same trusts as those declared concerning their original shares. One of the daughters predeceased the testator, leaving a husband but no issue.

Held, that the share of the deceased daughter had not lapsed, and that her husband was entitled to the income thereof for life, and that the capital thereof accrued for the benefit of the other daughters, their husbands, and children.—POWELL, RE, CAMPBELL v. CAMPBELL, Ch.D. Cozens-Hardy, J.; [1900] 2 Ch. 325; 69 L. J. Ch. 788.

38. Residue—Specific devise—Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 25.—A devise of the residue, or the remainder of the freeholds, or of all other the freeholds of a testator is a good "residuary devise" within the meaning of section 25 of the Wills Act, 1837, though it does not extend to copyholds. There may be in the same will two good residuary devises, the one limited to freeholds, the other limited to copyholds. A testator, who possessed several freehold houses at Wimbledon and two freehold houses at Kingston-on-Thames, devised one of the houses at Wimbledon to his son in fee. And he devised "all other my freehold messuages and tenements at Wimbledon aforesaid and elsewhere" to other persons. The devise to the son became void because he attested the will.

Held, that the second devise was a good residuary devise within section 25, and that it included the house, the devise of which to the son had failed.

Decision of Kekewich, J. ([1900] 2 Ch. 196), reversed.

In re Brown's Trusts, 1 K. & J. 522, and Springett v. Jenings, L. R. 6. Ch. 333, explained and distinguished.—MASON, RE, OGDEN v. MASON, C.A.; [1901] 1 Ch. 619; 70 L. J. Ch. 343; 84 L. T. 175.

39. Residue—Testamentary expenses—Estate duty on real estate—Bequest of residue of personal estate after payment thereout of all testamentary expenses.—A direction in a will that all testamentary expenses shall be paid out of the residuary personalty does not include the payment of estate duty in respect of the realty.—SHARMAN, RE, WRIGHT v. SHARMAN, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 555; [1901] 2 Ch. 280; 70 L. J. Ch. 671; 84 L. T. 859.

40. Remoteness—Gift over on a compound event—Perpetuity—Splitting gift over—Cutting down absolute gift—Settlement—Intestacy.—A testator who died in 1852 gave his residuary estate, which consisted wholly of personalty, to trustees in trust for his wife for life, and after her death (which happened) to be divided into five equal portions, which he allotted thus: "To S. D. (a married woman) I give two of such portions"; and having allotted the remaining three-fifths in similar words to other persons, he directed that the two-fifths allotted to S. D. should remain in trust for her life for her separate use, and from and after her decease in trust for her children upon attaining twenty-five if sons, or upon attaining twenty-one or marriage if daughters; "but in default of any such issue" such two-fifths to be divided among the children of C. payable to sons at twenty-five or to daughters at twenty-one or marriage.

S. D. died in 1899 without ever having had a child. At her death there were children of C., daughters, who had all attained twenty-one or married.

Held, (1) that the whole gift over on the death of S. D. was void for remoteness, and could not be split up into separate contingencies so as to be construed as a gift over on one contingency—such as that of S. D. having no child—that might in itself be good as being within the limit of perpetuity; and, (2) that upon the death of S. D. there was no intestacy as to the two-fifths, but that, by reason of the invalidity of the gift over on her death, the original absolute gift remained, and, upon her death, passed to her representatives.

When there is an absolute gift followed by a settlement of the subject of the gift, but the trusts of that settlement for some reason wholly or partially fail, there is, so far as they fail, no intestacy, but an interest in the nature of a reversion to the person who is the object of the previous absolute gift.

Evers v. Challis, 7 H. L. C. 531, distinguished on the first point, and Lassance v. Tierney, 1 Mac. & G. 551, on the second.—HANCOCK, RE, WATSON, v. WATSON, C.A.; [1901] 1 Ch. 482; 70 L. J. Ch. 114; 84 L. T. 163.

41. Rule in Shelley's case.—A testator devised certain property to trustees upon trust to receive the rents, &c., and to pay the outgoings and certain annuities for life to the testator's cousins, and then to pay the residue of the rents and profits to D. for life, and after the respective deceases of the said cousins and D., upon trust to convey the property, together with any accumulations of rents in the hands of the trustees, unto the right heirs of D.

Held, that, by virtue of the rule in Shelley's case, the hereditaments belonged to D. in fee, subject to the annuities.—YOUMANS' WILL, RE, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 509; [1901] 1 Ch. 720; 70 L. J. Ch. 430; 84 L. T. 201.

42. Settlement—Executory trust—Direction to duly and properly settle share of daughter marrying—Provision for children of marriage.—A testator gave his residuary estate to trustees upon trust for his sons and daughters who should attain twenty-one in equal shares, and declared that no daughter should be entitled in any case to receive her share, but should receive the income thereof only with power to dispose of the principal by will, if unmarried; but, in the event of any daughter marrying, then the testator especially empowered his trustees to see that her share was duly and properly settled upon her by deed, so that the same should be preserved for her separate use independently of her husband.

Held, that the share of a daughter marrying should be settled so as to give her a life estate for her separate use without power of anticipation, with trusts in favour of the children of the marriage, and the ultimate trusts usual in a settlement of the wife's property.—SPICER v. SPICER, Ch.D. Buckley, J.; 86 L. T. 195.

43. Substitution—Annuity—Appeal from Quebec.—A testator set apart a fund as a provision for his wife and also for his children until majority or marriage. He gave the residue of his estate to his children living at his death, and directed that it should be divided on the death of all of them. He further directed that from majority or marriage each child was to receive the revenue derivable from his share limited to 6,000 dollars a year, each child being charged with a substitution in favour of his or her children.

Held, in a suit brought by the eldest son to recover arrears of his annuity of 6,000 dollars a year, that according to the true intention of the testator as disclosed by the words of the will—

(1) The annuity of each child is a charge on the revenue of his own share and its arrears, not on the total revenue of the estate;

(2) Each child was entitled from the testator's death to an equal share of the net revenue current and accumulated: without regard to the benefits which during minority he receives from the fund set apart or under other clauses of the will;

(3) The substitution is confined to the share of each child in the capital of the residue, and does not extend to the accumulation of its revenue.—BEAUDRY v. BARBEAU, P.C.; [1900] A. C. 569; 69 L. J. P. C. 131; 83 L. T. 236.

44. Substitutional gift—Gift to issue of deceased brothers and sisters—Sister dead at date of will leaving issue.—A testator gave the residue of his estate upon trust for his brothers and sisters. The share of one brother was directed to be settled, and this clause was immediately followed by a proviso that "if any of my other brothers or sisters shall die in my lifetime leaving issue any of whom shall be living at my death, such issue living shall take equally amongst themselves if more than one the share which such other brother or sister would have taken if then living."

Held, that the gift to issue was substitutional, and that the children of a sister who was dead at the date of the will were not entitled to share in the residue.—OFFILER, RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J.; 83 L. T. 758.

See also Bankruptcy, 35; Ceylon, Law of, 2; Charity, 2, 3, 7, 8; Inland Revenue, 4, 7, 9-11; Married Woman, 7, 12; Power, 3, 7; Probate, 12-17; Stock Exchange, 4; Trustee, 7.

WORKING CLASSES HOUSING ACTS.—See Local Government, 24.

WORKMAN.—See Master and Servant, 1-22, 26, 27.

ZANZIBAR, LAW of :—

Lands taken for public purposes—Zanzibar Order in Council, 1884—Indian Land Acquisition Act, 1894, s. 6—Compensation—Incidents of land governed by the local law—Mohammedan law of compensation—Buildings erected by Government on the plaintiffs' land without authority.—The lands of the plaintiffs in the Island of Mombasa, part of the dominions of the Sultan of Zanzibar, were taken for a railway by the British Government under section 6 of the Indian Land Acquisition Act, 1894, which had been brought into force in Zanzibar by Order in Council.

In a suit for compensation for the value of the lands so taken, and also of the buildings previously erected thereon by the said Government without authority,

Held, (1) as regards the lands, the plaintiffs are entitled under the said Act to the market value thereof at the date of service of notice, under section 6, including such actual speculative advance therein as had already taken place in consequence of the railway scheme; but excluding any future speculative advance from the like cause.

(2) As regards the buildings, English law applied under the Order in Council of 1884 and the subsequent treaty of 1886. By that law, notwithstanding treaty rights of exterritoriality, the lex loci rei sitæ governs the incidents of land, that is in this case Mohammedan law, of which law a Zanzibar judge has judicial cognizance.

(3) By Mohammedan law the houses did not become the plaintiffs' property. The plaintiffs are entitled to have them removed, and the value to them of the right to have them removed from lands which have ceased to be their property is the measure of the compensation due.—SECRETARY OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS v. CHARLESWORTH, P.C.; [1901] A. C. 373; 70 L. J. P. C. 25; 84 L. T. 212.

[THE END.]

Stanford Law Library
3 6105 063 511 641